The hon. Member for Dudley, South (Mr. Pearson) mentioned reasons for not including certain matters in the Bill, which boiled down to something being blindingly obvious or too restrictive. In an idle moment, I studied the Bill. Clause 14 states:

"A regional development agency shall—keep proper accounts".

I would have thought that that was blindingly obvious.

I must wrap up, so I shall be brief. New clause 3 would put RDAs in the same category as other public bodies with respect to admission to meetings, and in the same category as local authorities with respect to openness of proceedings, which would have to take place in public unless commercial or confidential matters were being discussed.

I am disappointed that the Government are unable to accept a simple new clause on openness and democracy, and I hope that some Labour Members will change their minds at the last minute and join us in the Lobby.

It being fifteen minutes past Seven o'clock, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER, pursuant to the Order [27 March] and the Resolution [this day], put forthwith the Question already proposed from the Chair.

Question put, That the clause be read a Second time:—

New clause 5

Responsibility for Training and Enterprise Councils

'(1) The Secretary of State may by directions require the transfer of responsibility for any Training and Enterprise Council in England ("a Council") from the Department for Education and Employment to the Regional Development Agency for the area in which the Council is based.

(2) Any Agency to which the responsibilities for a Council have been transferred shall—

(a) monitor and seek to improve the performance of the Council, and

(b) ensure that the Council contributes to any objectives of the Agency.

(3) If a Secretary of State makes a direction in respect of any Council under subsection (1) he shall either—

(a) make such a direction in respect of all Councils, or

(b) lay before both Houses of Parliament a statement of his reasons for not making a direction in respect of all such Councils.'.—[Mr. Bennett.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

When I first came to the House I was not enthusiastic about regional government. I have realised over the past few years that the more we move to a global economy, the more important it is to have a regional presence rather than to rely on the cities that dominated in the early part of this century. Regional structures should be democratic, and we should have regionally elected government. I accept that the measure is merely a faltering first step, but it is important to make it clear that I want us to achieve regionally elected government as quickly as possible.

I fear that we will stop at this stage in the process and will never have regionally elected government. I am also worried that, if we stop at this stage, there will be a confusion of regional responsibilities. There will be regional chambers, regional development agencies and regional planning conferences. The TECs will have a regional structure to ensure that they have a co-ordinated policy for their region. There are higher education and further education regional bodies, and regional sports and arts bodies. We cannot continue that proliferation of different regional bodies and we need to try to slim them down and make them all accountable to an elected body as quickly as possible.

Both the Select Committee on Education and Employment and the Select Committee on the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs looked at the role of TECs and it was clear to them that there was no excuse for TECs to be kept separate from the RDAs. The logic was that there should be a funding mechanism, working in an integrated way. When trying to attract new industries and develop existing ones, part of that regional development consists of making sure that the skills are there. Companies are attracted to areas not only by sites and the availability of funds, but by the presence of a skilled labour force. It would be absolutely crazy for TECs to have a different regional strategy from that of RDAs. Both Select Committee reports made it clear that the Government had got it wrong in leaving TECs out of the new structure. I hope that the Minister will be able to tell us how we are going to progress to a point where responsibility for TECs moves to the RDAs.

7.30 pm

There are a few excellent TECs in this country, but there are many that have failed the nation. The skills shortage in many regions is an indication of those failures. Some TECs are too small and some are far too parochial in their attitude. Some are dominated by unsuccessful local business people and in some there is nothing like the accountability for their funds that there should be. All those issues have to be sorted out and one of the most effective means of doing so would be to ensure that TECs had to get their funding via RDAs. Many of my hon. Friends want to speak in the debate, so, before sitting down, I simply ask the Minister that we should make some progress in moving TECs into the new regional structure.

Mr. Lansley: Like the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), I am conscious of the fact that several Labour Members want to speak on this subject but, before they do so, I should like to make a few comments.

I was the policy director for the Association of British Chambers of Commerce in 1988, when my right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler)—then the Secretary of State for Employment—initiated the proposals for TECs. At that time, the British Chambers of Commerce put it to my right hon. Friend that, rather than engage in an endless bout of initiativitis and try to create a new body at regional or local level, the experience of local employer networks and the way in which they worked demonstrated that, in some parts of the country, chambers of commerce and those businesses that worked within them were perfectly capable of taking on the responsibility for TECs and making them work.

At that time, rightly or wrongly, it was decided that chambers of commerce were not the appropriate bodies to have responsibility for TECs and the words that the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish has just used to describe today's TECs were used in respect of chambers of commerce. It was said that their quality was variable across the country; and that, in some areas, they were too small and covered too limited an area; that were too parochial in their outlook. Not all those criticisms would now apply to chambers of commerce, but it is an irony not lost on me that a Labour Member is now making the same criticisms of TECs as were made against chambers of commerce 10 years ago.

There is in this country a structure of business-led organisations that has been sustained by entirely voluntary activity for more than 150 years, yet Governments of all persuasions seem unwilling to use that as a suitable foundation on which to structure support for business. The answer to the question how best to support businesses in enterprise and creating wealth is normally to work through those organisations to which businesses voluntarily subscribe. RDAs may, in due course, become bodies to which businesses are willing to subscribe, but we cannot be certain of that. RDAs are to operate at policy-making level and with a substantial local authority component—I do not complain about that; I support local authority participation in RDAs and the view taken on RDA accountability to local authorities—but many businesses will regard RDAs, if not as parochial, as having a regional focus beyond the scope of the local labour market with which they want the local TEC to forge a relationship. That is why, in each region, TECs come together in a regional council.

The intent of what is proposed under new clause 5 is wrong in that sense. The objective of RDAs, if it is a proper objective to pursue, is that of setting strategy and enabling organisations that focus on the components of competitiveness to come together in support of that strategy and make it happen more effectively. It is quite wrong for the RDA to take into its own responsibilities the bureaucratic task of administering the relationship through contract with TECs. If it does so, it will become directly enmeshed in decisions as to the responsibilities of chambers of commerce, TECs and business links—chambers of commerce and TECs are increasingly voluntarily combining to form a single organisation and business links are often related to TECs.

Even in the terms of the Government's proposals, which I do not necessarily support, there is an inherent danger in the RDAs' strategic function. The new clause would ensure that, instead of being strategic bodies separate from the economic development functions of local authorities, chambers of commerce and TECs—and, in the case of the Eastern region, the East of England Inward Investment Agency—RDAs would be directly responsible for those functions, even if only through contract. At this point, I should say that the current contracts between TECs and the Government offices or the Department for Education and Employment are, at the Treasury's behest, so detailed and exert so much control over the activities of the TECs that there is too little discretion for TECs to respond to business priorities in their own area.

If the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish wants TECs to enter into wider partnerships, I agree—they should combine with the local chamber of commerce so that there is increasingly a single local business-led organisation that acts as a counterpart to the local authority in its economic development role. If the hon. Gentleman is saying that TECs are often too parochial and should operate at a higher level of aggregation, that is true in some cases.

Mr. Pickles: Does my hon. Friend agree that training is a function that is essentially sub-regional or local? I recall asking the Humberside TEC to explain the commonality between somebody requiring training in Whitby and someone requiring training in the Yorkshire dales. There is no such commonality. Training should be local.

Mr. Lansley: My hon. Friend makes a good point, which is entirely congruent with what I was saying. It is not automatically true that TECs are currently constituted on the right basis. If one looks at the way in which chambers of commerce have changed in recent years, one can see that there has been a general merging and aggregation of chambers so as to provide services and relate to policy across a wider area.

It is perfectly true that the natural structure of training and enterprise councils should relate to a high degree of self-containment within the local labour market. The self-containment level should be above 80 per cent. or 90 per cent. for that labour market area. That points to large groupings in some areas. In other places, such as Cambridgeshire, the area would not be quite so large. There is considerable self-containment—probably at that level—within Cambridge and the south Cambridgeshire district. In truth, it does not make much sense for a training and enterprise council to be smaller than the local labour market area within which about 80 per cent. or 90 per cent. of people live and work.

To go above that level, and to think that it necessarily makes sense to set the parameters for an individual training and enterprise council on a regional level, is to miss the point. Training and enterprise councils should have a regional focus. The reason is that, if the regional development agency—or an inward investment agency acting on its behalf—pursues inward investment projects, it will be necessary to look at a specific area and within the confines of a specific training and enterprise council in order to provide the skills that will bring a company to that area. Precisely that approach was taken in Sheffield—I regret that I cannot recall the specific case; the Minister may recall it better than I do—and it was a significant attraction to businesses to come to that area.

In Atlanta in the mid to late 1980s, it was generally presumed that, in order to attract inward investment, one had to engage substantially in site assembly and provide infrastructure. However, when it came to internationally mobile investments of a higher technological character, site assembly and infrastructure did not determine where the business went. It was all about access to markets and skills in the labour force. It is important that there be scope for the regional development agency strategy—if it is going to be provided—to inform the role of the Government office in exercising its contract with a training and enterprise council.

If the Government office and the regional development agencies are to head in any direction in the future, they should move to take their hands off the training and enterprise councils' policy-making functions—not necessarily their propriety and accountability for public funds—which determine the response to local labour markets. Too much is driven at present by desire on the part of Government—Governments of both colours—to see their employment Department initiatives pursued. Employers in the local labour market are doing too little in anticipating their skills requirements and ensuring that the training and enterprise councils respond to them.

Mrs. Ellman: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Lansley: I have already given way to the hon. Lady, but I am happy to do so again.

Mrs. Ellman: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the training needs of an area include the need to retrain and diversify in some regions? Diversification of some sectors of industry in the north-west—for example, the aerospace industry, which is very militarily based—may require a retraining policy that is sectoral and not limited to localised areas. Does the hon. Gentleman not think that it makes sense for a regional skills strategy to relate to a regional economic strategy, which would be determined by the RDA? That does not mean that it would all have to be carried out—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. That is a very long intervention. I remind hon. Members that this is a very brief debate.

Mr. Lansley: Indeed, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was concluding, but I shall respond to the comments of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman). My point about inward investment—which applies also to something as grand as a regional economic strategy—is that there are circumstances in which the respective resources of training and enterprise councils should be adjusted in relation to a broader perspective. For example, no one would dispute the fact that a training and enterprise council should respond to requirements for retraining and different skills when there have been large-scale redundancies in a particular area.

However, I believe that the general training and enterprise council budget should be driven essentially by the business community's priorities. There is one important reason for that: the amount spent by Government on training, as the hon. Member for Riverside and other hon. Members know, is probably less, by an order of magnitude, than the amount that businesses spend on training on their own behalf. If training and enterprise councils are to work effectively, it is right that they should interact with businesses directly in order not only to provide training but to act as a lever on those businesses and provide relevant training and meet the wider skills needs of the area.

The TECs should understand that, essentially, they act at the margins of the training philosophy of an area. If the regional development agencies assume that responsibility, it will detract from the business focus, which should be the proper direction for TECs in the future.

Mr. Derek Foster (Bishop Auckland): I am glad to follow the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley), whose contributions to our debates are always thoughtful and well informed. I am even more pleased to follow my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), whose brief contribution was so powerful that I cannot pretend to try to better it. As a consequence, I shall be brief.

I have been a great enthusiast for regional development agencies for 25 years. I was chairman of the North of England Development Council in the mid-1970s, when it was clear that the northern region was at a competitive disadvantage compared with the Scots and the Welsh because they already had development agencies. It is quite remarkable that the Education and Employment Committee and the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee should examine that issue and reach similar and unanimous conclusions.

The Committees were very impressed by what I call the "Scottish model". It has been working for some time, and the Welsh model has been working for even longer. The latter model has some attractions, which I may have the chance to explore a little later. We were struck by the fact that the rather patchy record of training and enterprise councils throughout the English regions was not replicated in Scotland. That is because the money for training and enterprise councils went to Scottish Enterprise and then to the local enterprise councils, as they are called in Scotland. Scottish Enterprise has considerable power to monitor the performance of LECs and, for that reason alone, those bodies have performed far more evenly.

The two Select Committees cannot possibly conceive that an economic and development strategy should not include a skills strategy. That fact is absolutely clear, and it will become increasingly important as we approach the information age. The real wealth of regions and of enterprises will be found in the skills and the creativity of their people. Therefore, a coherent economic and development strategy must include a skills strategy.

If we are to concede to the regional development agencies the need to develop a strategy that includes a skills strategy—which may include lifelong learning as well as the TECs—it is inconceivable that the RDAs should not be able to ensure that that strategy is implemented. There is no point having a strategy if there are no powers to ensure its implementation. If the money flows through the RDAs, they will have the power to ensure that the strategy is implemented.

We reached that conclusion after very careful consideration. We were concerned that we might institute a body that was just another regional agency—there are already too many—which did not have the power to pull the various strands together. In other words, we feared that we might confuse and complicate rather than simplify the arrangements. We concluded that the Select Committee proposals would give greater power to the development agency not to act bureaucratically, but to empower other organisations beneath its strategic level. We are not looking for bureaucracy; we are looking for empowerment of other bodies within the agency, and of the people themselves.

That was our proposal, reached unanimously. There was all-party agreement on both Select Committees. If the Government are unable to agree to our proposals—we hope that they are—I remind them that, in our report, we suggested that they might consider pilot areas. We suggested that the North East and the North West would be good regions for such pilot areas to be put in hand. We did so because co-operation and collaboration are well developed in those two regions. Others might consider that the Yorkshire and the Humber region would equally merit such consideration, and I am sure that other colleagues may add their penn'orth for their own region, but that was our proposal. If the Government cannot agree to new clause 5, perhaps they could make sympathetic noises to the idea of having a pilot area—I would say in the north.

Mr. Breed: It will come as no surprise to the Minister that we support new clause 5, as it is very similar to one that we tabled in Committee. It seemed to us that the RDAs were there to sweep up an awful lot of the existing agencies that were operating in various ways in support of the economic progress and development of their areas, and that it was genuinely expected that the TECs would be subsumed into the new RDAs. There is an obvious case for that to happen, and I concur with all that the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) and the right hon. Member for Bishop Auckland (Mr. Foster) said.

Some TECs have been more successful than others; some have become more accountable recently. However, there is an overwhelming case for them to be included in the RDAs. They could then be involved in the strategic operation of a regional development agency, enabling them to be part of a package for new investors into regions. They could provide an enhanced business links operation for existing businesses, and also provide the business advice and support that RDAs will need.

For those reasons, I entirely support the sentiments behind new clause 5.

Mr. Caborn: New clause 5 would make provision in the Bill for the Secretary of State, by direction, to transfer to the regional development agency responsibility for any training and enterprise council in England. It would provide that, where any such transfer took place, the RDA should monitor and seek to improve the performance of that TEC, and should ensure that the TEC is contributing to the RDA's objective. The new clause specifies that, if such a direction did not apply to all TECs, the Secretary of State would be required to explain the reason to both Houses.

The new clause has impressive support. My hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) is Chairman of the Select Committee on the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs. I believe that my right hon. Friend the Member for Bishop Auckland (Mr. Foster) is Chairman of the Select Committee on Education and Employment. As an ex-Chairman of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry, I know what powerful positions they are.

Both those Committees held inquiries into the work of the RDAs. Unusually—perhaps uniquely—both reached the same conclusion on the subject of the RDAs' role in relation to the TECs. They have both made recommendations to the Government that they should transfer to RDAs the current role of Government offices for the regions in contracting with TECs for training provision in their region.

The Government are grateful for the work that those two Committees have done in considering our proposals for RDAs. We welcome the interest that they have taken in an important initiative and in the Government's regional agenda in general. We share many of the Committees' key objectives. For example, we agree that the RDAs must play a central role in formulating the regional skills strategy. We agree that RDAs should have a meaningful role in relation to the work of the TECs. The essential difference between us is that, whereas the Committees have taken the view that influence derives essentially from the control of budgets, the Government believe that the necessary influence and direction can be achieved by RDAs with the role and functions that we have given them from the outset.

For the time being at least, we do not consider it appropriate to transfer to RDAs the role of the Department for Education and Employment in TECs' contracts. We believe that the package of functions that we have already given RDAs is the right one, and that it provides the right critical mass to start from. However, I can assure the House that the Bill provides for us to take a different view some time. It is—

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Caborn: I am sorry; I cannot gave way because I have five minutes and I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish wants to say a few words.

The Bill also enables us to require RDAs to monitor and seek to improve the performance of TECs—which is important—and to ensure that TECs are contributing to the RDAs' objectives, as provided for in the new clause. As I shall explain later, we do intend that the RDAs should have that responsibility.

As I said in my response to the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee, published on 30 March, the Government believe that it is important to be realistic about what we ask RDAs to do. They will be new bodies, and will have much to do to establish themselves and to develop their work programme. As I have explained, there will be scope to extend the role in time, as their experience develops: further functions will be delegated to them if that is desirable.

The package of functions that we have proposed for the RDAs will afford them considerable influence throughout their region. The wide-ranging nature of the role means that that influence will not be limited to areas and organisations for which the RDAs hold budgets. RDAs will certainly be influential in the provision of training in their regions. Regional skills needs will be a key component of the RDAs' strategy, and that strategy will inform decision taking in the regions, including the decisions taken by Government offices in the allocation of TECs' budgets.

I recognise that my hon. Friends feel strongly that training budgets should be controlled by RDAs. I have explained why, in the Government's view, it is not the right time for such a step. Nevertheless, there is no reason why the role of the RDAs should not develop over time, as that of the Scottish and the Welsh Development Agencies did. The Bill will allow that to be done without the need for further legislation.

Although we do not accept new clause 5, we accept that the RDAs should play a big part in monitoring and improving TECs' performance. The Government want to drive up the performance of all TECs to the standard of the best. The details of the RDAs' role are still being worked up, but we expect them to take a hard look at the performance of TECs in their regions and recommend how they might make a greater contribution to regional objectives. In managing TEC contracts, Government offices will take account of the strategic framework developed by RDAs.

The provisions of the new clause are clearly designed to encourage the Secretary of State, should he choose to make a direction, to transfer responsibilities for TECs to RDAs in all regions simultaneously. Although I do not accept the new clause, I see that that would appear to be, in principle, a sensible way of proceeding.

Although the English regions are all different, with different needs, I believe that there should be a limit to the level of regional variation in the system. As I said in Committee, I do not believe that one region should be given different functions and responsibilities from another. In the case of TECs, the need for the DFEE to oversee different arrangements in different parts of the country would be very likely to add to bureaucracy, and therefore costs.

With that explanation, I ask my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish to withdraw the new clause.

Mr. Bennett: The Minister's response is singularly disappointing. At least he could have shown a little enthusiasm for some experiments. However, I do not see that there is a great deal of point in having Divisions unless one can win them, so I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion and clause, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 19

VESTING OF LAND BY ORDER

Amendment made: No. 7, in page 8, line 39, at end insert 'by statutory instrument.'—[Mr. Caborn.]

Clause 20

ACQUISITION OF LAND

Mr. Yeo: I beg to move amendment No. 32, in page 9, line 35, leave out from 'agreement' to end of line 39.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 33, in page 9, line 40, leave out 'or (2)'.

No. 34, in page 9, line 42, leave out from 'acquire' to 'land' in line 43.

No. 35, in page 9, leave out from beginning of line 45 to end of line 6 on page 10.

No. 36, in page 10, leave out lines 11 to 15.

No. 37, in schedule 5, page 29, line 37, leave out from beginning to end of line 24 on page 32.

Mr. Yeo: Like many other amendments moved today, this group has been tabled because of the Government's determination in Committee not to allow any change to their Bill until they were forced to do so by the combination of Opposition pressure and argument, and the weight of opinion outside the House.

Clause 20, which we seek to amend, deals with the powers being given to a regional development agency to acquire land. As the clause gives RDAs powers of compulsory purchase, the Opposition sought in Standing Committee to limit the type of land over which those powers could be exercised. We moved, and subsequently withdrew, an amendment that would have prevented those compulsory powers from being used to acquire land in areas of outstanding natural beauty and in national parks.

The House might consider that such an amendment was entirely inoffensive. It is difficult to see why RDAs should want compulsorily to acquire land in such designated areas. I hope that the RDAs will not go around buying up great chunks of such land in any circumstances, whether compulsorily or by agreement. Nevertheless, the Government argued in Committee against that amendment. They apparently believe that compulsory purchase powers must be available for RDAs to use in respect of any part of England.

Referring to our aim, on 12 February the Minister said:

"the real aim of the amendment . . . is to shackle the RDAs and prevent them from doing a reasonable job for rural communities."—[Official Report, Standing Committee E, 12 February 1998; c. 336.]

The amendment simply sought to prevent RDAs from acquiring land by compulsory purchase in areas of outstanding natural beauty and national parks. The Minister's comment provides an alarming insight into the Government's views of the future activities that RDAs might undertake. It has been suggested that excluding areas of outstanding natural beauty and national parks from the areas where RDAs can exercise compulsory purchase powers would prevent RDAs from doing a reasonable job for rural communities.

If the Minister visited a few rural communities, especially ones with areas of outstanding natural beauty in or near them, he might begin to understand that it is possible to do helpful things in those communities without compulsorily purchasing land there. Because of the Government's refusal to listen to reason in Committee, we now seek to return to the issue of compulsion in a slightly different form.

The amendments would remove the compulsory purchase powers from the Bill, leaving RDAs free to acquire land by agreement in any part of England. Provided that they could negotiate a price with the vendor and had the vendor's consent in that respect, RDAs could acquire land even in national parks. The amendments would remove the possibility that compulsion could be used.

My fears about the use to which compulsory purchase powers may be put have been greatly increased by recent planning decisions. With the connivance of the Secretary of State, and sometimes after the direct intervention of the Secretary of State, decisions made have put the green belt under threat as never before. The Minister spoke the truth on Radio 4 last autumn when he warned us all that the green belt was up for grabs, although I doubt whether many of his listeners understood at that time quite how serious the threat to the green belt was.

In Hertfordshire, the threat is up to 10,000 houses on the green belt at Stevenage. In the west midlands, the threat is industrial development of farmland on the green belt. In Newcastle, the threat is 2,500 houses on the green belt, despite the availability of more than 4,000 empty houses in the city.

Mr. Sheerman: Those us who have been intimately involved in planning over the years know that, under the market philosophy of the Thatcher years, local authorities were told, "Do not resist planning permission. You will lose on appeal because the Government believe that market forces must rule." The previous Government destroyed the green belt, and that is what we have inherited.

Mr. Yeo: Unlike his hon. Friend the Minister, I am always happy to take an intervention from the hon. Gentleman. However, his understanding of what happened does not quite reconcile with the facts. The previous Government were rigorous in upholding the protection of the green belt. They refused time and again to sanction the kind of development that the present Government seem to welcome with open arms. In the past few months, we have seen the contempt that the Secretary of State and his ministerial colleagues have for the green belt.

Mr. Day: My hon. Friend will be aware that my consistency of Cheadle is located in the borough of Stockport. Green belt policy is extremely important to my constituents, because the green belt largely forms the western boundary of my constituency. Protection was afforded to that green belt through the local development plan established under the previous Conservative Government and approved by the previous Secretary of State. The proposal for compulsory purchase powers for the regional development agencies directly challenges all that was achieved under the Conservative Government in protecting my local green belt.

Mr. Yeo: My hon. Friend, as so often, has put his finger on the essential point. He has powerfully and eloquently put the case for the environment in his constituency. Genuine and deeply held anxieties of the sort expressed by my hon. Friend and, I am sure, by his constituents form the background to the amendment. Our fears are that the compulsory purchase powers in the Bill could be abused. Because of the Government's history of appalling planning decisions and of throwing away the protection of half a century for the green belt that we have seen in the past few weeks, those fears become all the greater.

Let us take an example of an area of outstanding natural beauty on the edge of my constituency, the Dedham vale close to my home in East Bergholt. Much of the Dedham vale has been preserved so well that it differs little from the landscape that existed 200 years ago when Constable walked across the meadows there and immortalised its scenes in his paintings, some of which belong to the nation. I am sure that my hon. Friends have similarly valuable sites in their constituencies, but they will forgive me if I speak of the Dedham vale because I know it and love it so well.

Under the Bill, the Dedham vale is under a greater threat than at any time for the past two centuries. If the Eastern regional development agency is established, it will be given powers to acquire land compulsorily in the Dedham vale in an area of outstanding natural beauty. It will be possible to exercise those powers regardless of the wishes of the vendor and regardless of the views of the local community. The Eastern regional development agency will be able to justify its decision by saying that the land was being acquired "for its purposes"—for the purposes of the Eastern regional development agency, as specified in clause 20(1).

The purposes of RDAs are defined in clause 4. They include in clause 4(1)(c) the promotion of employment, so the Eastern RDA might find a private sector partner keen to invest, perhaps in a hotel venture in the Dedham vale. In the name of promoting employment, as the Bill requires, it could then seek to advance such a project.

Planning permission would have to be obtained, although the House should remember that, as drafted, the Bill gives the Secretary of State power to designate the RDA as the planning authority, too. Only the vigilance of Conservative Members, as we shall see in the debate on the next groups of amendments, prevented that power from remaining in the Bill.

The Government's intentions, alas, are all too clear. They want to let RDAs acquire land wherever they want, by agreement or with compulsion. A residual threat to remove planning powers from local authorities would be retained. The RDAs would be able to develop land in pursuit of their statutory aims, regardless of the damage that that might do to the countryside. Never mind the value of the land condemned for ever to the bulldozer. If amendment No. 4 in the next group is approved, that threat will at least be slightly more remote, but it will remain to some extent. The RDA, having bought the land—if planning permission has been applied for and turned down by the local authority—can appeal to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State has already shown his willingness to overrule the recommendations of independent planning inspectors.

Recently, in the west midlands, 150 acres of farmland were located in the green belt. That land happened to be owned by Birmingham city council. The House will note that that council is controlled by the Labour party. The Secretary of State overturned the inspector's recommendation to allow development on the green belt. That is an alarming precedent in the context of the powers given to RDAs.

Imagine what the Secretary of State's attitude might be to planning appeals that came before him if the land were owned by an RDA. As the Bill stands, clause 20 constitutes a grave threat to our countryside, the green belt, the national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty. It poses a real, serious and immediate threat, which can at least be partly averted if the compulsory powers set out in the Bill are removed. I warmly commend the amendment.

Mr. Pickles: There is no real point to clause 20 and the associated clauses. We propose sensible, tidying-up amendments. The Minister has explained that planning powers will be removed. That being so, no one needs the compulsory purchase powers set out in the Bill. A regional development agency will be able to blight, but not to plan. The RDA, through its land acquisition and a determination to implement development in the green belt or in other parts of constituencies, could tie up that land and adjoining properties for years. It is not necessary to do that.

Rightly, the power of compulsory purchase has seldom been used. We know that it is possible for authorities to engage in compulsory purchase in the absence of planning powers. The Civil Aviation Authority, the Housing Corporation and various statutory undertakers, such as gas, electricity and water, along with certain national health trusts, have the power of compulsory purchase. However, that is not what RDAs are about. A commonality runs through the various organisations to which I referred: they are engaged hands on in providing services and facilities in their localities.

We are opposed to RDAs, but we do not want them to fail. They will have an uphill task. We want them to succeed, but that will happen only if they can work in close partnerships with local authorities or with sub-regional providers of economic development.

The RDAs could act as brokers to provide portfolios of development. If the Government are entirely serious—I suspect that they are—about the sequential approach of looking towards brown-field sites, certain hurdles have to be faced. It is much more difficult to develop brown-field sites than green-field sites. That may relate to the condition of the land, but more probably it relates to ownership.

In some difficult inner cities, there is a considerable problem in getting together the owners of land to persuade them to enter into a development. That is often the most difficult thing to achieve. Often, no one knows who owns the land. If RDAs are to go about trying to acquire such land by the process of compulsory purchase, anything that we may be doing in terms of economic development is over. We know that compulsory purchase procedures are slow, cumbersome and rarely used. They are rarely used because they are slow and cumbersome.

8.15 pm

I was once part of an authority that tried to put together various packages for development. We, the members of the authority, were determined not to use compulsory purchase procedures. Local authorities and the new RDAs should seek to involve the public in what they want to do. We have had a debate about decisions made behind closed doors. There is too much secrecy in the way in which local authorities and sub-regional authorities put packages together. I accept the need for commercial confidentiality, but the people must understand the benefits of what needs to be done.

My hon. Friend the Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) talked about the importance of the green belt. My constituency lies in the metropolitan green belt, the first green belt created in the country. My constituents and I need to feel sure that our bit of the green belt is protected by the local authorities—in this instance, Brentwood borough council and Epping Forest district council. We feel that they have in mind the interests of our locality, along with Essex county council. We feel that the interests of the locality will be safeguarded by them.

As I said in an earlier contribution, the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Select Committee is undertaking a housing inquiry. The Royal Town Planning Institute produced some interesting arguments. I was concerned, however, when it argued, "We have had the green belt for 50 years. It was never intended that it should remain green for ever. Towns must be able to grow. They must be able to designate land and to move green-field sites into the green belt while moving certain aspects of the green belt into green-field sites and thereon into development. Do we want a serious proposition that in 50 years' or 500 years' time the green belt will remain intact?"

My answer is, "Yes, we do." That is exactly what my electors want to say. They want to be able to say that Brentwood will always be separated from Romford. The constituency wants to be separated from London. In many ways, the green belt between the communities holds them together. In those terms, they have something in common. If we are to stop urban sprawl, we must ensure that the powers to protect the green belt remain firmly with the districts and county councils.

If we introduce organisations whose purpose is to bring about economic regeneration—the Minister referred to the various objectives—the possibility that land could be purchased compulsorily by powerful RDAs will be held over my electors. I do not see why an RDA should not work closely with local councils and use their powers of compulsory purchase, should that be necessary as a last resort. In the process, the RDA would at least work closely with a local planning authority. Suppose the local planning authority says no to the acquisition of land and the particular development, who will solve the conflict? The Bill does not deal with that in any way.

As my hon. Friend the Member for South Suffolk rightly pointed out, such an issue will come to the Minister. We have heard many times that we should trust the Minister and that he will not make a mistake, but we know that this Secretary of State, who has responsibility for planning, has been prepared to overturn a public inquiry and to grant permission against the advice of a planning inspector. If the RDAs are to have any chance of success, it must be on the basis of co-operation with local authorities and sub-regional providers of economic activity and training.

The most sensible thing to do would be to say, "Okay, the planning powers have now gone from the Bill. The logical next step is to say goodbye to compulsory purchase." That would have a certain neatness about it. I do not believe that there would be any loss of face if the Minister accepted the amendments.

Mrs. Spelman: I am pleased to be able to follow my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles). His point about RDAs' ability to blight gives me great cause for concern. It reminds us one of the key elements at the heart of the Bill: the centralising powers that lie within it. That ability to blight is, effectively, the means by which the Secretary of State can cast a shadow over a constituency such as mine, which consists largely of green-belt land at the narrowest point between Coventry and Birmingham, the so-called Meriden gap.

My hon. Friend the Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) mentioned the Secretary of State's ruling that green-belt land in the west midlands could be used for an industrial purpose. That caused local people concern at many levels. Industrial development on green-belt farm land was opposed by the local council and by the local Member of Parliament. When the public inquiry decided that it should not be used for that purpose, that decision was overturned. That area is close to my constituency. Hon. Members can understand why that case has caused great concern in relation to the sort of power that might be given to RDAs. In fact, it has resulted in a loss of confidence in the planning process.

I shall illustrate that. Currently, there are two planning applications for the building of motorway service areas alongside the M42 in my constituency. Having seen what happened in the Peddimore case, my constituents are concerned that, although the application has gone to and been rejected by the council, the Minister might simply overturn the decision, which was supported by the local community. That has resulted in perhaps a premature presentation of petitions on the part of my constituents to the Minister. The Government have only themselves to blame for that loss of confidence in the planning process.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. Lady that this is about not the planning process in general, but the compulsory acquisition of land. She should direct her remarks specifically to that.

Mrs. Spelman: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was illustrating merely that that decision has given rise only to concern in relation to RDAs' power of compulsory purchase of green-belt sites.

There is a risk that blight will result from a conflict between the planning authority—the local authority—and the right of compulsory purchase of a future RDA. I should like to illustrate where I believe the tension may arise.

There are several installations and developments of regional significance to the west midlands. There is the airport, Birmingham International railway station and the national exhibition centre. Indeed, they are of national significance. All have gently expanded over time as a result of agreements between the various planning authorities.

My concern arises from the fact that a regional development agency may rule that one of those strategically important sites should be expanded and find itself at loggerheads with the local community and local planning authority. The RDA may indeed make use of a compulsory purchase order and fail to get planning permission from the local authority.

If the compulsory purchase order remains at the disposal of the RDA, we shall see only an increasing number of conflicts between the RDA and the authority that has the power to grant permission, which may result in land compulsorily acquired resting idle. There are already many examples of that in my constituency, where it is difficult to obtain planning approval in a green-belt area. If the clause is not amended, I envisage only increasing conflicts. It would seem logical for the reference to compulsory purchase orders to be deleted.

Mr. Lansley: Does my hon. Friend agree that blight under these circumstances can also apply the other way round? If a body does not have planning powers, it might none the less seek planning permission in relation to a specific site or collection of sites. That might in effect blight that area because of the knowledge that, at some subsequent point, in pursuance of that planning application on land that it does not own, the body may seek a compulsory purchase order from the Secretary of State, so devaluing the prospects for that particular ownership of land.

Mrs. Spelman: I thank my hon. Friend for that illuminating point. It serves me well as it relates to my next point. Blight is currently tightly defined. In a constituency such as mine, much of which is blighted by the transport network that runs through it—the many motorways and the installations to which I referred earlier—when constituents seek redress for the way in which their property is affected and find themselves just the wrong side of the blight line, they are in an unenviable position. My concern is that that will be only aggravated by the potential conflict between an RDA that has the power to acquire land or that may threaten to acquire land, and its inability to get the matching planning powers from the local authority. It seems more logical to remove the provision than to leave the tension inherent in the Bill.

Mr. Jim Cousins (Newcastle upon Tyne, Central): In this group of amendments there is a double deception, which was substantially given away in the interesting speech of the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles). The first deception is that the amendments have nothing to do with the protection of the green belt.

I hope that Conservative Members will accept my credentials as a defender of the green belt, as I have spent many years in my political life opposing the proposals of my Labour-controlled city council to remove part of the green-belt status of land in my city of Newcastle. There could be no question of the use of compulsory purchase powers succeeding where there was no planning base that enabled the compulsory purchase order to have credibility and to survive the legal processes that it would go through.

Therefore, there is absolutely no question of this group of amendments being required to protect the green belt. No attack on the green belt could succeed in the absence of a planning base, simply by using powers to make compulsory purchase orders. To say that such an attack could succeed is simply a delusion and a contrivance.

Mr. Yeo: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is aware that the Bill—until we deal with the next group of amendments—would allow the Secretary of State easily to remove a planning problem by designating as the planning authority a regional development agency that wanted to use compulsory purchase powers over the green belt.

Mr. Cousins: That is the type of contrivance that has been used to justify this group of amendments. It is worthy of "Spycatcher", but not a practical debate on planning problems.

8.30 pm

The second deception—the crucial purpose of this group of amendments—was given away by the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar, who correctly said that the most likely uses of compulsory purchase powers would be precisely to secure and unlock development of brown-field sites, or to enable derelict and underused buildings—which are held by property owners who have made no practical use of them or who are involved in local negotiation—to be returned to sensible use. Those are precisely the situations in which compulsory purchase powers are most likely to be used.

Urban development corporations were created by the previous Administration precisely to deal with such situations. Two former Ministers from that Government are in the Chamber, and they are very familiar with the work of those corporations. They know full well that it was necessary for UDCs to have the back-up of compulsory purchase powers, precisely to secure development of underused and derelict sites and of buildings in urban development areas.

I fear that, if this group of amendments were passed, the ability to protect the green belt, by returning to full use underused brown-field sites and derelict land and buildings, would be weakened.

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Gentleman is not being precise. Local authorities have the power of compulsory purchase. If necessary, they may compulsorily purchase brown-field sites. There was a logic to the urban development corporations, which had planning powers. RDAs will not have planning powers, and so do not need compulsory purchase powers. They can use local authorities' powers to make such purchases.

Mr. Cousins: I shall come directly to that point. If we examine the actual use—or, perhaps even more significantly, the threat of use—of compulsory purchase powers by UDCs, we find that those powers were very often not exercised with planning powers—they did not have to be, as planning approvals for use of the sites and buildings already existed—but were used to secure property ownership change, to make development possible. The powers are in the Bill, and should remain there, for precisely that reason.

[Mr. Cousins]

Another simple point is demonstrated by the experience of UDCs—which were, after all, a creature of the Conservative party. I certainly did not advocate or support establishing UDCs. Yesterday, the UDC in my own city ceased to exist. Although I do not agree with everything that it did—I profoundly disagreed with its actions in some critical matters—its achievement over the period of its existence was impressive. One should not forgo UDCs without replacing them with an equivalent format.

Why is it not sufficient to allow compulsory purchase powers to lie solely in the hands of local authorities and not to be available to RDAs? Two quite specific types of situation make it necessary for RDAs to have those reserve powers.

The first is when the power and wealth of property owners whose land or buildings are not being developed and properly used may be such as to deter or inhibit a local authority from engaging in a complex process, which the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar—absolutely correctly, from his own experience as a council leader—mentioned. There are genuine problems for local authorities when they attempt to use those planning powers. It is therefore sensible and right for a larger-scale authority to have access to those powers in its own right, to reinforce the work of local authorities.

Secondly, there are situations in which a complex of underdeveloped sites and buildings is on the borders of two local authorities. I can think of an extremely vivid example in my own city. The area of Newburn Haugh—because of a peculiarity in boundaries formed by the old course and the new course of the River Tyne—straddles two local authorities: the city of Newcastle, and the metropolitan borough of Gateshead. In such situations, it may well be sensible to have a wider authority that covers both local authority areas, harnessing a comprehensive package of powers, to secure comprehensive development that is agreed with those local authorities. Moreover, it could secure such development itself, rather than entrusting the matter to each local authority separately.

For those entirely practical and sensible reasons, it is logical to leave those powers in the Bill, so that they can be deployed—in, admittedly, rare, unusual, difficult and complex circumstances—by the RDA with the local authority.

Mr. Lansley: It has been helpful to hear the speech made by the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins), who instanced his objections to what has been said in support of the amendments. In doing so, he highlighted what lies at the heart of the reasoning behind the amendments.

The hon. Gentleman said, first, that there was no threat to the green belt, because compulsory purchase order powers, in the absence of accompanying planning powers, could not be a threat to the green belt, as—by extension—the planning system will protect it. Yes, the planning system offers some protection—not least, thank goodness, because of some of the changes made to planning policy guidance by the previous Conservative Government. None the less, the exercise of compulsory purchase of green-belt land by a regional development agency before planning permission is granted in respect of that green belt poses a specific threat.

It is a matter not simply of the protection offered by planning policy guidance and by the local authority, but of how local people can respond to planning proposals and raise objections to them. The exercise of compulsory purchase powers might limit people's opportunity to object. Furthermore, a regional development agency is likely to apply for planning permission in respect of green-belt land having adduced its own decisions about the strategy for the region as precisely the exceptional circumstances that should give rise to the granting of planning permission.

The hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central must understand that we are not dealing with a body with localised, specific statutory responsibility, such as local authorities and utilities have when they exercise compulsory purchase powers, and English Partnerships used to have. We are dealing with a body that has broad-ranging, strategic policy-making powers, which may be able to influence regional planning guidance and the granting of planning permission by exercising its own strategy as a basis for exceptional circumstances, and then go on to use compulsory purchase powers.

I have presented a hypothetical situation, but given that we are dealing with a new body, we need to exercise the hypothesis to see whether that new body could represent a threat to the green belt. I represent green-belt land around a substantial part of Cambridge city, but we are dealing not just with green belt. In essence, we are dealing with a body, the geographic remit of which is less confined than that of English Partnerships. Ministers will freely admit that they structured the planning and compulsory purchase powers in the Bill on the basis of the previous powers of English Partnerships. That was precisely the basis on which the Minister structured his argument on Second Reading.

The Minister has accepted that granting planning powers to a body with such a wide remit over its region is different from the exercise of that power by English Partnerships. I accept that the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central was referring to the specific instances in which an urban development corporation would have exercised compulsory purchase powers in pursuit of physical regeneration, in confined geographical circumstances. However, we are now moving on to debate the question in relation to a body that will exercise a regional strategy—a strategic rather than a precise body. Under what criteria will such a body exercise compulsory purchase powers? I presume that it will do so in pursuance of strategic investments, which are likely to be large inward investments.

I am concerned about the powers that will be granted, because they will not necessarily be applied in respect of brown-field sites. A regional development agency's desire to win the battle for major inward investment might lead it to pursue green-field sites. We all know how attractive green-field sites are. The other day, I was talking to a high-technology company that has a site on green-belt land which it wishes to expand, and it was extolling the virtues of being on green-belt land. High technology requires quiet and a relative lack of pollution, so it is precisely where the company needs to be.

On exactly the same grounds, internationally mobile, footloose companies may come to the regional development agency in Cambridge and say that they are willing to invest in the region, but will not locate in the former sewerage site in north Cambridge. They will want to locate in the green-belt site just south of Cambridge, and the RDA will be presented with the option of pursuing planning permission on green-belt land south of Cambridge and possibly exercising compulsory purchase powers in pursuit of that.

I present that hypothesis because, on the basis of English Partnerships' and urban development corporations' past experience, the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central seemed to think that there was no problem. I hope that the House accepts that, given these different bodies' strategic remit and the wider circumstances, those powers will not be used as English Partnerships, the urban development corporations and local authorities used them in the past, but will be used in a much wider and potentially more damaging sense.

8.45 pm

Angela Eagle: Thank goodness we have had the traditional rant from the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo). I shall miss them when the Bill has completed its parliamentary stages. Perhaps I could get a video of it so that I can refresh my memory when I feel that I am lacking a good rant. He came out with the same fears and scaremongering that we heard in Committee about how the modest compulsory purchase order powers might be used. I am surprised that he can ever sleep at night, being pursued by the furies, doubts and worries about what might happen with the modest powers, which will be exercised within the law on compulsory purchase, with all the usual protections. His lurid scare stories and fears began to upset me.

I do not recognise any aspect of the Bill in what the hon. Gentleman said. There is nothing new about the compulsory purchase powers that the amendments would remove. There is nothing new about how they would be used or the legislation under which they would be used. A Conservative Government gave those powers to English Partnerships and to the urban development corporations. They seemed to have no worries about how they might be used.

I shall deal in more detail later with the hon. Gentleman's worries about areas of outstanding natural beauty and national parks. The powers will allow RDAs to acquire land by agreement. However, there is a last resort power of compulsory purchase when authorised by the Secretary of State. The amendments would remove those powers, allowing RDAs to acquire land or rights over land solely by agreement.

Concerns were expressed in Committee about the provisions. I had hoped that I had been able to reassure hon. Members about the fact that the clause will be used as a last resort. However, the same arguments have been made today, so I shall have to rehearse my reassurances.

It is disingenuous of Conservative Members to link the powers of compulsory purchase with reserve planning powers in clauses 24 and 27, which we shall deal with later. The Government have decided to drop those clauses. Planning and land ownership are different matters. Any acquisition by an RDA must be to further its purposes. Nothing can be done with the land unless all plans for it are approved by the usual planning process, with all the considerable protections that that entails.

I agree to some extent with the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) that the partnership approach has the best chance of working. That is clearly sensible. Everybody wants the partnership approach to be used. I do not think that English Partnerships has had to use its compulsory purchase powers. However, that does not mean that those powers should not exist as a last resort.

Thank goodness for my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins), who brought some welcome sanity and experience to the debate, which had been veering off into fantasy land before he brought it back on course.

One of the purposes of RDAs is regeneration, which can often include site assembly and development for future investment. RDAs may wish to assemble a site consisting of land that is in diverse ownership—an issue that the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar is familiar with. We expect most of that to be done through agreement with the owners, but RDAs could be hamstrung by a failure to reach agreement with one owner, or there may be sites of unknown ownership—another problem that the hon. Gentleman identified. It is not sensible for an entire development to be jeopardised because one owner refuses to sell, or because the ownership of a site cannot be established.

Mr. Pickles: The hon. Lady is most persuasive and reasonable. Why cannot the powers of the local authority be used in the circumstances that she has described?

Angela Eagle: Simply for the reasons that my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central gave in his thoughtful speech. It may not be practical in some instances for local authorities to use those powers. A site may straddle local authority areas.

The idea is that the power will be used as a last resort, but can be applied in circumstances that we as a legislature cannot at this minute imagine. We must provide flexibility to enable RDAs to assemble a site for regeneration purposes. The exercise of the power would require authorisation by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Curry: What is the point of a regional chamber of local authorities if those local authorities are not able to agree on a strategy, which is central to an RDA's work?

Angela Eagle: I think that, 99.99 per cent. of the time, they will agree; that is certainly what we hope. The power is one of last resort. As I said, it has not been used by English Partnerships, even though it was given it by the hon. Member for South Suffolk when he was in government, in precisely the way that the Bill provides. We hope that the power will not be needed. Although, as the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar rightly pointed out, compulsory purchase powers are a last resort, we believe that they must be provided in order to deal with awkward situations that occasionally crop up.

I know that people are generally critical of the compulsory purchase system. We all want a fair and efficient system. We have already conducted research into and reviews of the system. It is certainly cumbersome and slow, and the legislation is very old, but it is unlikely that all those matters will be resolved in time to be reflected in the Bill. The Bill can deal only with compulsory purchase by RDAs, not the exercise of such powers more generally.

[Angela Eagle]

Conservative Members, especially the hon. Member for South Suffolk, have been concerned about the use of compulsory purchase powers in rural areas, especially national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty, about which the hon. Gentleman rightly became quite lyrical. We have already debated at length why RDAs need to exercise their functions throughout their regions, and why rural areas should not be treated as if they existed in isolation. Physical regeneration can be just as important in a rural area as in urban areas. The coalfields initiative is one example where regeneration in a rural area is desperately needed.

We cannot rule out the possibility that there may be areas in national parks that need regenerating. Even so, clause 20 would not give RDAs additional powers to develop such areas. RDAs will have to apply for planning permission in the normal way, and it will have to be granted in the normal way.

As Conservative Members know, planning and countryside legislation contains special provisions which give added protection for national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty, and which are unaffected by the Bill. When they were in government, Conservative Members gave English Partnerships a power of compulsory purchase, although it has not had to be used. I hope that RDAs would not need to use it, but would instead reach agreements with landowners.

We debated national parks in Committee and used an example, I seem to recall, of old, disused quarries that may need to be put right before they can be used. The hon. Member for South Suffolk doubted that there was any such area in a national park, so since then, of course, I have done a little research. He is quite right to say that all recent planning permissions for mineral extraction have planning conditions that provide for the restoration of the site, but reviews of old planning permissions are being undertaken to ensure that they come up to modern standards. There is provision for further reviews of conditions.

Research has come up with examples of quarries and mines in national parks that ceased operation and were either not restored or not treated to modern standards. The most recent survey identified 143 hectares of such land in national parks in England that had been affected by past mineral working and fell within the definition of derelict land. In the interests of protecting the countryside, the hon. Member for South Suffolk would take powers from regional development agencies to restore land in national parks. He is arguing to reduce RDAs' ability to regenerate and bring back into sensible use land that happens to be in such areas.

Mr. Yeo: I am perfectly happy to defend our position, because no one in the Opposition has argued for any removal of RDAs' powers to do such restoration work. After all those weeks of research, during which the Minister has discovered 143 hectares, how many examples has she found of quarries for which it was necessary to exercise compulsory purchase powers to achieve the restoration? I should think that the answer is none.

Angela Eagle: The powers must exist for cases in which ownership has disappeared, or companies have gone into liquidation and there is no owner in existence—for cases in which companies take no responsibility and have in a sense evaded their responsibility for cleaning up after themselves.

The hon. Gentleman's amendments would make it harder in some circumstances for proper and appropriate regeneration work and site assembly to be done in such areas. In view of his lyrical description of the area of outstanding natural beauty close to his house, I do not think that that was his intention. None the less, that is what the amendments would do.

Given those explanations, I hope that the House will see that, although RDAs will not need to use the power all the time, and in the vast majority of cases agreement will be reached with owners of land, we cannot run the risk of omitting the compulsory purchase order powers from the Bill and then finding that particular projects or desperately needed regeneration measures are stopped in their tracks because of one especially difficult landowner, or because the authorities cannot discover who the owner is.

In view of the safeguards that I have outlined, which are already in the law, and the Government's commitment to protection of the countryside as well as to appropriate regeneration, we shall oppose the amendments.

Mr. Yeo: The House has had a valuable short debate on the amendments. My hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) rightly stressed the importance of the need for regional development agencies to work in partnership with local authorities—something that we all strongly support. He shrewdly suggested that, where necessary, a regional development agency working in partnership with a local authority could use the compulsory purchase powers already possessed by the local authority. He also spoke with great feeling about the green belt in his constituency, which I recently had the pleasure of visiting.

My hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman) rightly described the dangers of all the centralising powers that the Bill contains. Among those many powers is the power effectively to blight areas of the countryside. She is especially familiar with the situation in the west midlands—an example that I cited when I opened the debate.

The hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) attempted to play down the threat constituted by the compulsory purchase powers, and suggested that they would not be used, in the green belt or anywhere else, unless planning permission were available. Obviously the hon. Gentleman was not listening to the debate, because the point was that, since the Government came to power, we have had a Secretary of State who is willing to overrule independent planning inspectors and, against the wishes of local communities, councils and residents, to grant planning permission even for industrial development in the middle of the green belt.

That is what happened in the example I cited from the west midlands, close to the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden. It provides a recent example in which the special protection allegedly attached to the green belt has been tossed aside by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Cousins: Does the shadow Minister perhaps know rather too much about the ways of property companies and not enough about the ways of local government? A property company might well go in for a speculative acquisition in green belt, but a public authority of any kind could not.

Mr. Yeo: I am not talking about going in for speculative acquisitions. As the hon. Gentleman knows, an application for planning consent can be made before the land is purchased. We have a pliant Secretary of State who is willing to overrule local opinion and grant permission for industrial development in the middle of the green belt, so goodness knows how easy it would be for a regional development agency that planned to acquire land for which its compulsory powers might be necessary, to clear the matter—on appeal to the Secretary of State, if necessary—and obtain all the consents that would be required.

My hon. Friend the Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley) drew attention to the unique nature of regional development agencies, and the differences between them and the other bodies that currently exercise compulsory purchase powers.

The Minister seemed to be joining the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central in advancing rather similar arguments about the need for planning consent. We have already dealt with that point. She then referred to the importance of partnerships with local authorities. I give her 10 out of 10 for sheer cheek. She and her ministerial colleague spent 13 sittings in Committee rejecting amendment after amendment tabled by the Opposition to promote such partnerships and to ensure that RDAs consulted and were more accountable to local authorities.

The Minister revived the question of quarries in national parks. I am touched that, after six weeks' research, she has uncovered 143 hectares of such quarries, but she has failed to identify an example in which the process of restoration would have to involve compulsory purchase powers. Against that background, the Opposition must press the amendment to a Division.

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

Clause 24

POWER TO MAKE DESIGNATION ORDERS

Mr. Caborn: I beg to move amendment No. 4, in page 11, leave out from beginning of line 32 to end of line 19 on page 14.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): With this, it will be convenient to discuss the following amendments: No. 5, in page 12, line 4, leave out 'consult' and insert 'obtain the consent of'.

No. 6, in page 12, line 6, at end insert—

'(4A) The consent of a local authority under subsection (4) shall not be deemed to have been obtained unless such consent was expressed at a meeting of the full council for the local authority concerned.'.

Government amendments Nos. 9 to 11.

Mr. Caborn: In Committee, I made a commitment to review the need for the provisions in clauses 24 to 27. These provisions were intended to give the RDAs reserve planning powers similar to those bestowed by the Conservative Government on English Partnerships, whose regional regeneration functions the RDAs will be taking over. Having taken the opportunity to review these provisions following the debates in Committee, we have decided not to proceed with them.

Amendment No. 4 removes clauses 24 to 27 from the Bill. Amendments Nos. 5 and 6, which would have required the consent of local authorities to the use of the designation order procedure, become irrelevant, since we are proposing to delete clause 24. Amendments Nos. 9, 10 and 11 are minor consequential changes to clauses 28 and 37.

The reserve powers in clauses 24 to 27 would have given the Secretary of State discretion to designate an RDA as the local planning authority for all, or part of, its area. We put these reserve powers in the Bill because we felt that RDAs, like English Partnerships, would benefit from having access to them—even if, in practice, they were never used. Our intention was that the use of the powers would be exceptional. Indeed, English Partnerships has never sought to use them, preferring instead to act in concert with local government.

We feel that the success and effectiveness of the RDAs will depend in large measure on their ability to build consensus in their regions and to pull regional stakeholders together around a commonly agreed regional strategy. The RDAs will want to work with local planning authorities to seek a common approach to development and regeneration. Given the emphasis RDAs will place on partnership working, I would not have expected RDAs to need to use the reserve planning powers in practice.

It was clear from representations made to me by a number of stakeholders, and in particular by the Local Government Association, that it was felt inappropriate to give the RDAs reserve planning powers. We listened to the arguments and we agree that the best course is not to proceed with those powers in the Bill. If one of the key regional partners, local government, feels so strongly that the provisions are undesirable, it would clearly be unwise to retain them.

In common with the approach that I expect RDAs to adopt in their work, the Government have managed the Bill in a spirit of co-operation and openness. We have listened to the arguments of both sides, both in Committee and outside. We have accepted that a change to the Bill is the best way forward. That is a listening Government who are willing to make changes to policy.

Mr. Curry: Come on Richard, say it again.

Mr. Caborn: Put it this way, few changes went on to the statute book under the previous Government, although we spent many, many hours discussing them. At least we can say that we are prepared to listen to the arguments. Even though some of the powers were given under the old regime to urban development corporations and English Partnerships, we are prepared to review them and adapt the Bill in the light of common sense.

9.15 pm

While not having specific planning powers themselves, RDAs will have a key planning role in their areas. As the economic development bodies in their regions, they will adopt a partnership approach with local authorities and other stakeholders. They will have specific input to regional planning by contributing to the development of regional planning guidance, which in turn will inform RDAs' regional strategies. It will be a two-way process. Given that regional planning guidance is the crucial strategic input to the plan-led system to which planning applications must have regard, it is unlikely that the RDAs would ever need to rely on reserve planning powers.

Beyond their role in planning issues, RDAs will have a lot to do. As well as pulling together regional economic development work around a commonly agreed strategy in each region, they will inherit the regional regeneration role of English Partnerships and the rural regeneration work of the Rural Development Commission. In addition, they will take the lead on inward investment in their regions. We do not, therefore, wish to proceed with the provisions that give them reserve planning powers.

Mr. Yeo: I welcome the Minister's achievement in becoming, at least in this respect, a listening Minister in a listening Government. I welcome his commitment to making the RDAs work in partnership with local authorities.

Although it is listed as a Government amendment, we can unreservedly welcome amendment No. 4 because it is our amendment. We tabled it on 11 March. I am glad that the Secretary of State tabled an identically worded one on 23 March. I have been advised by the Clerk that it should not have been accepted because it was identically worded. [Interruption.] I am just outlining the facts, embarrassing though they may be to the Government. The consequence was that the Secretary of State's name was added to the Opposition amendment. As the Minister said, if amendment No. 4 is passed, our amendments Nos. 5 and 6 will be rendered irrelevant.

The Government's conversion to sense, however slow it has been in coming, is good but it is important to explore how tortuous the conversion process has been. The Minister would not expect me to gloss over the sequence of events.

Mr. Fitzpatrick: Yes we would.

Mr. Yeo: As the Minister said, such an achievement was seldom recorded by the Government when they were in opposition.

Originally, clauses 24 to 27 in effect gave the Secretary of State power to remove the planning responsibilities of elected local authorities and transfer them to regional development agencies. The Secretary of State could have taken away planning, one of the most crucial functions of an elected council, and transferred it to an unelected quango appointed by him, operating from an office perhaps miles outside the district concerned and accountable only to him. Those clauses were an attack on the powers of elected local authorities. They made a mockery of the claim in paragraph 9.2 on page 43 of the White Paper, which states:

"The intention is not to take powers or resources away from local authorities".

The clauses that amendment No. 4 would delete took powers away from local authorities, and were among the most damaging clauses in the Bill.

Planning control over any part of England could have been removed from local authorities and given to regional development agencies at the stroke of the Secretary of State's pen. The profound fears that this proposal rightly provoked were made much worse by the Minister's initial refusal to admit what these clauses enabled the Secretary of State to do.

[Mr. Yeo]

In Standing Committee on 3 February, it seemed that the Minister had not read his own Bill. He asked me:

"Will the hon. Gentleman tell me which of the Bill's proposals will remove powers from local authorities?"

He then asked me again:

"Which powers will be taken from local authorities?"—[Official Report, Standing Committee E, 3 February 1998; c. 104-5.]

As the Standing Committee was at that stage debating clause 2, it is understandable that the Minister had not read as far ahead as clause 24. We should be flattered that the Minister had to ask us what the Bill would enable him to do. The House should be appalled and the country should be alarmed that the Government have put a Bill through Standing Committee without appreciating the effect of its provisions.

A week later, on 10 February, the Minister seemed to think that he had discovered the answers to his own questions. He realised that the Bill gave the possibility of planning powers to regional development agencies. He claimed that these powers were precisely the same as those that previous legislation had bestowed on English Partnerships.

On 12 February, in response to my point of order exposing the Minister's previous errors, he admitted that the powers in clauses 24 to 27, which the Secretary of State intended to give to regional development agencies, were wider than the powers given to English Partnerships under previous legislation. It is clear that English Partnerships' powers were specifically limited.

In contrast, under clause 24 the regional development agencies could be given planning control over any part of England that is "suitable for regeneration or development."

The words "or development" include land that is not at present developed. That provision scarcely imposes any constraint.

On 17 February, when the Standing Committee debated those clauses, it soon became clear that their potential effects were devastating, that they struck at the very heart of the principles of local government, and that they undermined the democratic basis of our planning system. Initially the Minister resisted our attempts to rid the Bill of these damaging provisions but, after two hours of debate, light eventually dawned and he confirmed that the Government would have a rethink. What a relief that is to everyone concerned in the parts of England that were threatened. That process of discovery and the way in which the light dawned has been instructive.

The Government have made their familiar journey from denial of a problem, through panic at the realisation that there is a problem, to confusion about how to solve it. It is a journey that the Minister and others responsible for planning seem to take regularly. Each time they do so, they prove that the protection of the countryside and of the green belt is not safe in the Government's hands. Even as the Bill was in Standing Committee, the Government announced a climbdown over the proportion of new homes that should be built on previously developed sites. That climbdown was intended as a reassurance to those who fear the consequences of the loss of the English countryside.

The green words, perhaps dictated by a spin doctor, were spouted at the Dispatch Box by the Secretary of State. He trumpeted his conversion to the Conservative party's policy of setting a higher target for the proportion of new homes to be built on previously developed sites by raising it from 50 per cent. to 60 per cent. In doing so, he overruled the Minister for London and Construction, who had previously gone on record as describing any target over 50 per cent. as a "recipe for disaster".

As is so often the case with this Government, that greener rhetoric is only words and is not backed by any deeds. For example, the sequential and phased approach to planning in respect of planning guidance for new homes, which was mentioned by the Secretary of State when he made his statement to the House, which is certainly needed and which, if introduced, would have our support, has not unfortunately been followed up. It has not been mentioned again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must tell the hon. Gentleman that he is going wide of the amendment. He must restrict his remarks to the amendment before the House.

Mr. Yeo: I am most grateful to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is my concern about the potentially devastating effects of the planning powers that clauses 24 to 27 bestow on RDAs that leads me to give one or two examples of the possible consequences of those planning powers. We have seen many such examples, one in West Sussex.

Mr. Day: My hon. Friend may have heard the Minister, from a sedentary position, commenting that the amendments would remove the particular planning powers to which my hon. Friend refers. If so, perhaps my hon. Friend might like to invite the Minister to tell the House why the Government put those powers there in the first place.

Mr. Yeo: My hon. Friend is quite right. The Minister might have mentioned that and offered some explanation when he opened the debate. The amendment deletes four of the most important clauses in the Bill—clauses that he defended throughout Second Reading and in Standing Committee—but the Minister gave no explanation as to who made the original blunder of including the clauses. Whose head is going to roll? Which Minister is now considering his position in the light of the withdrawal of powers that were central to the functions that the Bill bestows on RDAs?

Mr. Day: Perhaps my hon. Friend also recalls that, in the Committee, the Minister took the line that the powers should still exist right up until he reached the last page of his brief, which he obviously had not noticed previously.

Mr. Yeo: I remember the occasion very well and it was not even the Minister's first intervention in that stage of the Standing Committee. We had one long intervention in response to the debate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Interesting though the hon. Gentlemen's recollections may be, Committee stage has passed and the proceedings are on record in Hansard for anyone to read. I do not need to hear the hon. Gentlemen's recollections—they must speak to the amendment before us.

Mr. Yeo: I am grateful for your guidance, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and for the generosity of your indulgence, which has allowed my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) and I to recall one of the most enjoyable sessions of the Standing Committee on the Bill.

The fact is that amendment No. 4, which we support, does at least ensure that the Government's rather shameful attempt to undermine the democratic basis of the planning system has now been thwarted. It ensures that the Government's attack on the powers of democratically elected local authorities has, on this occasion, been successfully fought off by Conservative determination—[Laughter.] These are serious matters and I do not know why they are causing so much mirth on the Government Benches. The amendment ensures that the people who take initial planning decisions will at least be those who have some responsibility for and some relationship with the areas which those decisions will affect. The amendment was tabled by Conservative Members and Ministers initially argued against its effects, but their conversion to our way of thinking is welcome and the amendment has my total support.

Mr. Caborn: I wish to respond to a couple of points. As we said many times in the Standing Committee, we believe that the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) is wasting his talents as a politician: he should be a fantasy writer. We think that his books would sell better than those by Lord Archer.

For the record, powers from English Partnerships and from urban development corporations were put on the statute book by the previous Government. They took those powers from local authorities and gave them to quangos. We have now returned those powers to their rightful position: with local authorities in the democratic process. We are proud to have done that.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 39

POWERS IN RELATION TO THE COMMISSION

9.30 pm

Angela Eagle: I beg to move amendment No. 25, in page 19, line 7, leave out 'including' and insert—

'(3A) The provision which may be made under subsection (3) includes—

(a) provision changing the name of a public body which acquires functions by virtue of provision made under subsection (1)(a) or (b), and

This amendment will provide a specific power to allow a change of name for the body that will take over the residual functions of the Rural Development Commission following the transfer of its regeneration functions to the regional development agencies. As announced last Friday, the Countryside Commission and the Rural Development Commission will merge. The new body will play a central role in the Government's policy of developing a sustainable, living countryside while recognising the interdependence of urban and rural areas. It will, therefore, pursue an integrated approach in giving advice to Government, local authorities, regional development agencies and others about all such matters in order to ensure that they produce integrated, well-thought-out solutions to the problems raised in developing a living countryside. It will secure a rural dimension to wider policies and will be for the benefit of all who live or work in rural areas and visit or value the countryside. It will take forward countrywide initiatives to meet the economic and social needs of people living and working there.

The new merged body's national advisory function will continue to be independent and based on expertise and experience. We said in our White Paper that we are committed to ensuring an effective focus at national level for expertise, information and advice about rural matters, which will assist regional development agencies and local and national organisations in their work. We are now putting that into effect. Both commissions support the concept of a new merged organisation and are working together with the aim of developing and integrating their complementary strengths.

The countrywide initiatives and promotion work will be centred on building local and regional partnerships and delivering real benefits to the countryside and local and rural communities, as well as providing for the needs of visitors. A new name for this merged body will be needed in order to reflect the fact that it will inherit some responsibilities from its predecessors, but it will also have a fresh mandate. The able and dedicated staff of both the Countryside Commission and the Rural Development Commission will form the core of the new body—just as those staff transferring to the regional development agencies, with responsibility for the rural regeneration programme, will be a valuable asset to those bodies.

The commissioners of both organisations have wide-ranging expertise, and we hope that many of them will be prepared to make that available to the new organisation. A new name will signal a fresh start and provide a collective identity that will help to advance good working relationships. We are considering what the new name should be in order to reflect the new integrated responsibilities.

Mr. Yeo: The Opposition wish the new merged organisation every success, but I seek several assurances from the Minister—if she is unable to provide them now, I hope that she will write to me as soon as possible. The press release issued last Friday by her Department—part of which she repeated in her speech—contains a paragraph which states:

"The new organisation will take on the Countryside and Rural Development Commissions' existing programmes and commitments, other than those that it has already been announced are to be transferred to the Regional Development Agencies."

Can the Minister provide an assurance that the combined budget of the Countryside Commission and the Rural Development Commission will continue to be spent in rural areas? I appreciate that part of it will be spent by the regional development agencies because some of the functions have been transferred. However, can the Minister assure us that the balance of the budget will continue to be spent in rural areas for the benefit of the objectives that have been listed?

Angela Eagle: The idea of the merger is not to reduce the amount of money that is available to rural areas, but to increase the effectiveness with which that money is spent. However, I should be happy to set that out more formally by writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Amendment agreed to.

Amendment made: No. 13, in page 19, line 7, after 'transfer', insert 'to another public body'.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

Clause 40

TRANSFERS OF PROPERTY, RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES TO AGENCIES

Mr. Curry: I beg to move amendment No. 28, in page 19, line 33, at end insert—

'(1A) The Secretary of State shall once in every financial year lay before both Houses of Parliament a statement listing the property, rights and liabilities of the Urban Regeneration Agency which have not been subject of any directions under subsection (1).'.

The purpose of the amendment is to encourage the Minister to be bolder than he wants to be. As you will know from the Bill, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the functions of English Partnerships, the urban regeneration agency, will be merged into the regional development agencies, with two exceptions. One function is the management of the coalfield community and the other is the management of the Greenwich peninsula.

Those are two very different functions. The coalfield community is widely scattered over many counties, and between the areas of several proposed regional development agencies. Some 56 sites are involved, so I doubt whether anyone would quibble with the idea that, if an existing organisation is capable of dealing with such a disparate piece of real estate, it should continue to do the job.

The Greenwich peninsula is wholly different. It is a small site, which falls exclusively within the territory of the proposed London regional development agency. I cannot for the life of me understand why, if the Government are investing such hopes in the regional development agencies—if they are so confident that they represent a new solution—they do not have enough confidence and hope to entrust the Greenwich peninsula to the London regional development agency.

I know that, after the dome has been completed, the site might revert to English Partnerships. I know that the Government would like to find an on-going purpose for the development of the Greenwich peninsula, but this debate is not about the dome. I do not understand why, in the case of London, the Government do not have the courage of their convictions and beliefs. We understand that London is about to have a mayor and its own council. The Government should say why the regional development agency is not deemed to be competent enough, or why they do not have enough confidence in it, to manage a site as relatively small as the Greenwich peninsula.

Suppose the argument is that it is a national site. Will not the regional development agencies be sufficiently robust to manage something that will, we hope, attract visitors internationally as well as from throughout the country? I should like the Minister to explain why his vision appears to falter when it comes to one of those key sites, in which a great deal of money has been invested, but which seems to me coherent enough to lend itself precisely to the tasks that he proposes.

When will the London regional development agency come into existence? The world and his wife—except anyone in the House of whom I am aware—appears to know that there will be a shadow regional development agency; that it will not commence at the same time as the other RDAs because it will await the eventual election, if it takes place, of a London mayor and the associated council. I hope that the Minister will fill us in on that, but I am especially interested to know why, as someone who has a great deal of commitment to the concept of RDAs, his commitment stops short at that piece of east London.

Mr. Caborn: First, I shall answer the question about London. It is absolutely correct that we have decided that the development agency for London will be a voluntary body until the elected authority comes into existence. Had we not done so, a non-departmental public body would have been set up for one year only, and powers would then have been transferred to the London authority, which would then have come under the control of the elected authority and the mayor.

On the subject of the Greenwich peninsula, the hon. Gentleman answered his own question. The millennium experience is being prepared for the year 2000. We want to make sure that that project, which will be highly successful, will be delivered on time. The London authority will not be up and running until 2000, assuming that the population of London says yes in the referendum.

In answer to a written question relating to the future of the peninsula, the Minister without Portfolio stated:

"Commercial interest in acquiring the Dome is, however, likely to be maximised in 2000, when it can be seen successfully in operation, and when commercial and popular awareness of the site is at its height. The Government will therefore decide on the Dome's long-term future at that time."—[Official Report, 1 December 1997; Vol. 302, c. 3.]

The Government are clear that the dome will remain in the ownership of the company that owns it at present, with the full support of English Partnerships at national level. We hope that the venture will be successful, and we will determine its future after 2000. By that time we hope that a London authority with a mayor will be in place, and that is when a decision will be made.

Mr. Curry: We all hope that the dome is a successful venture, as it is in our national interest that that should be the case. I find the Minister's remarks disappointing. They demonstrate a lack of commitment to the concept of development agencies, but at this hour of the night I do not intend to press the matter. I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Clause 41

POWERS IN RELATION TO THE AGENCY

Amendment made: No. 14, in page 20, line 10, after 'transfer', insert 'to another public body'.—[Mr. Caborn.]

Clause 45

COMMENCEMENT

Mr. Curry: I beg to move amendment No. 27, in page 21, line 10, at end insert—

'(2) No statutory instrument may be made under subsection (1) until the Secretary of State has laid before Parliament a copy of any concordat reached between Her Majesty's Government, the regional development agencies in England, the Scottish Executive and the National Assembly for Wales (or any of them) in relation to regional assistance.'.

I return to an issue that I raised when the Deputy Prime Minister presented his White Paper on the subject; on Second Reading; and in Committee. What measures will be put in place to ensure that there is not competitive use of public funds by different regional development agencies?

That is a crucial issue, as the Government keep telling me. They told me that it was crucial after the presentation of the Government's proposals. They told me that it was a crucial issue on Second Reading. They told me that it was a crucial issue in Committee. What they have not told me is what they intend to do about it.

We know that there is to be a concordat on the matter. I thought that concordat was a happy name arrived at to cover this particular circumstance, but I strayed by accident into the debate on the Scottish Parliament yesterday and discovered that a veritable undergrowth of concordats has sprouted.

The hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond), speaking about a concordat between the Government and the eventual Scottish Executive on inward investment—precisely the subject that we are discussing—invited me, if I had the technological skill, to surf the Scot Nat website in order to find the document that had been leaked and that he had had put on the website.

Nothing ventured, nothing gained. My secretary, who has the technological skills—pending my acquisition, reluctantly, of the same—was eventually successful in identifying the document, which I have. There are a great deal of hieroglyphs on it, but the bits that are not hieroglyphic are pretty comprehensible. They refer to mutual consultation in adequate detail and to a reasonable time scale on any proposals for new legislative provision, and mutual consultation before making offers of financial assistance. It is a fairly detailed document.

The Under-Secretary told me that the concordat was between the development agencies. In Committee she said that the concordat would "involve" the Scottish and Welsh development agencies. I am not clear whether that was a word that just came out of the word processor, or whether "involved" was carefully chosen so as to be somewhat ambiguous. My suspicions are provoked.

Is there one concordat or two? Is the Under-Secretary referring to the same concordat that the Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution, Scottish Office and the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan were talking about yesterday? I hope that the hon. Lady will respond to that question. Is it a concordat between the Government and the eventual Scottish Executive? Is that the concordat that the hon. Lady is talking about?

9.45 pm

If that is the position, there is a glaring contradiction between the words that the hon. Lady spoke and the words of the Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution, Scottish Office. In Committee, the hon. Lady talked about the importance of the matter and said that all hon. Members agreed that the "cost to regions of inward investment"

being bidded up had to stop. She continued:

"The problem is being considered by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, and by other Departments. Indeed, the Prime Minister has taken a close interest in the matter. Appropriate"— that marvellous word again—

"co-ordination will ensure that there is a cohesive and effective national approach to the issue. It will be strengthened with a concordat between different parts of the United Kingdom, the terms of which are still being considered by the Government. Those terms will be announced when they have been finalised."

I pressed the Under-Secretary on the issue, asking her when we would have the marvellous document to which she referred. She replied:

"The right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon should bear in mind that the vesting day for the RDAs is in April 1999, and although the concordat might not be in a finished written form before we conclude considering the Bill, it will certainly be available before vesting day."—[Official Report, Standing Committee E, 12 February 1998; c. 319-20.]

As I have said, I strayed into yesterday's debate in Committee of the whole House. The Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution, Scottish Office, in response to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan, said:

"Work on draft concordats will proceed before devolution, but they cannot be agreed until the Scottish Executive is established. The coverage of each agreement would be a matter for the Scottish Executive and the UK Government to agree."

The Minister emphasised that point later when he said:

"The hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) made the point, and I want to reinforce the response again, that agreements cannot be made until the Scottish Executive is up and running, and it should be clear that draft agreements cannot in any way be considered to be binding on it."—[Official Report, 31 March 1998; Vol. 309, c. 1159.]

[Mr. Curry]

Where are we? Which of the two timetables is correct? Are there two concordats or is there one? If there is one concordat, how do we reconcile the timetables spelt out by the two Ministers, who operate in the same Government? If there are two concordats, are we to have two concordats on inward investment operating to a different time scale? Are we between different bodies or the same body? If there is a concordat between the development agencies and their Scottish and Welsh equivalents, will it be binding on the Scottish Executive or the Welsh Executive? Will it be binding on the respective Parliament or assembly?

Mr. Paul Tyler (North Cornwall): I do not want to add to the right hon. Gentleman's suspicions. My history, although rusty, tells me that a concordat is a much more temporary agreement than a treaty. I am not suggesting that a treaty would be appropriate, but I share the right hon. Gentleman's suspicions about the semantics of the sudden appearance of concordats in the British constitution. I wonder whether he has examined what the permanence of the arrangement might be.

Mr. Curry: The hon. Gentleman is right. When the word "concordat" was first evoked by the Under-Secretary, I assumed that it constituted a pragmatic solution to deal with a particular problem, a problem on which we all agree. I suddenly discovered that a concordat has acquired perhaps a more constitutional function as representing a quasi-treaty between different parts of the United Kingdom.

I think that that takes us back to some extent to the time of Charles I and the Scottish covenanters. Here we are covenanting some agreement, but is it binding? Will the Scottish Executive live with it? Will the Scottish Parliament eventually be able to provide additional finance and override any agreement? These are crucial matters.

The English regions have felt that there is a process of gazumping from the Welsh and Scottish development agencies. That is a serious problem. It is important that these matters should be transparent from the point of view not only of people who live in the regions and have natural aspirations for employment and opportunity, but of the use of public money. We should not throw money at inward investment unnecessarily; it should be part of a strategy. Throwing money at inward investment is not only unfair in terms of public expenditure: it would be deeply confusing to the investor if he thought that the UK did not know what it was doing and that different people were trying to do the same thing simultaneously from the same pot of money. I wish to be reassured. I have asked for such reassurance umpteen times on a matter that I believe is central in terms of the probity of public expenditure and the operations of RDAs.

When the Minister responds, will he spell out who the concordat is between—who will sign it? Is there one concordat or are there two? If there are two, who are they between and what do they cover? Can either or both bind a Scottish or Welsh Executive and assembly? When do they or it come into force and will it or they be public documents? Those are crucial questions on which I hope to receive a response tonight. If I do not, I shall persist because this is a crucial issue.

Mr. Caborn: I assure the right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) that there is more than one concordat in all, but that, on this subject, there is one concordat. There are a number of concordats well beyond inward investment; they are on a wide range of mutual interests. I have no doubt that the right hon. Gentleman will be able to keep a watching brief, if not a watching interest, on the development of devolution within the United Kingdom.

The amendment is prompted by the right hon. Gentleman's desire to ensure a co-ordinated approach to inward investment throughout the UK on the basis of a financial concordat between different parts of the UK. The amendment specifies that no statutory instrument bringing into force provisions of the Bill should be made until such a concordat has been laid before Parliament.

As hon. Members know, the Government are committed to publishing a concordat on financial assistance. We reiterated that commitment earlier this week when we published our response to the report of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry on the co-ordination of inward investment.

As the right hon. Gentleman knows, we have been working on that for a while. We hope shortly to publish a concordat on inward investment that ensures that offers to inward investors provide value for money for taxpayers and are fair to all parts of the UK, while allowing effective negotiations to attract large inward investment projects. However, this is a complex subject. I am sure that he will understand that we will need to be satisfied that the new arrangements represent an acceptable way forward for all the countries of the United Kingdom before the Government publish their proposals.

I understand entirely that the right hon. Gentleman is keen to see the final concordat. I am too. I assure him that the English regions are being represented forcefully in those discussions. I am sure that he also understands that the previous Administration had similar difficulties, but did not try to resolve them in terms of the Union. We are trying to do that. We need a little time, but we will come back to the House when those agreements have been reached. I have no doubt that he will continue to press us until they are brought back to the House. It is his duty to do that as a member of the Loyal Opposition.

Mr. Curry: That merely gets us into greater confusion. We have now established that there is one concordat, so the Under-Secretary is talking about the same concordat as the Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution, Scottish Office last night. That is a matter of agreement; it has been accepted. However, it is going to come into force at different times.

The Under-Secretary said clearly that

"although the concordat might not be in a finished written form before we conclude considering the Bill, it will certainly be available before vesting day."—[Official Report, Standing Committee E, 12 February 1998; c. 320.]

That is April next year, if I recall rightly, but the Scottish Executive will not be in existence by April next year and the Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution, Scottish Office said:

"I want to reinforce the response again, that agreements cannot be made until the Scottish Executive is up and running, and it should be clear that draft agreements cannot in any way be considered to be binding on it."—[Official Report, 31 March 1998; Vol. 309, c. 1159.]

There is a glaring contradiction between those two statements.

The concordat cannot be brought into force on different days. Which statement is true? Will it be brought into force when the Scottish Executive is up and running? I think that the Minister said that he will finish the concordat "soon". A third date has therefore been floated.

The matter is, first, very confusing. Secondly, it is not very straightforward. Had the Under-Secretary clarified the matter in Standing Committee by saying, "A document is being prepared between constituent parts of the United Kingdom, and this is when it will come into force," we would know where we stood. However, she clearly said that it will come into force by vesting day. A Scottish Minister has said the complete opposite. We have established that there is only one document, which cannot divide itself—like one of those funny lamps that goes up and down, with a blob in the middle. We need to know where we stand.

I am trying to make light of the matter, but it is a serious matter of clarity and of providing accurate information to the House. The House has been given two entirely different versions of the timetable for the same document. We have also been given two versions of whether it will be binding on the Scottish Executive and, presumably, the Welsh Executive. Will it or will it not be binding on them? We have been left in a state of deep confusion.

Many people in the regions are already suspicious enough about how the RDAs' procedures and competing subsidies will be used. If we do not receive some clarification on the matter, RDAs will get off on an extremely bad footing, with much suspicion about the meaning of devolution in the United Kingdom.

I hope that the Minister will give the House a more accurate reply, and specifically tell us—this is point one—when the concordat will come into force. Secondly, will it be binding on the Scottish Executive? I ask him to remember that two Ministers already have track records on trying to answer those questions.

Mr. Caborn: One thing is absolutely certain: when the concordat is completed, it will be something that the previous Administration, of whom the right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) was a member, could not achieve in 18 years—a sensible inward investment arrangement that does not cost UK taxpayers millions of pounds, which they never should have paid. We are currently in the process of bringing together the parties to the agreement—Wales, Scotland and the English regions. Once we are finished with the process, we shall present the case to the House in a concordat.

I am not quite sure which concordat the right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon has been dealing with, or whether the inward investment concordat was mentioned in yesterday's debate. I am therefore not able to pronounce on that matter. Once we issue the concordats, something that has been a very expensive exercise for the UK taxpayer will be resolved. The concordat's implementation date will also be stated in the concordat.

The right hon. Member for Skipton and Ripon should not get so excited about implementation dates. The previous Government had 18 years in which to issue a concordat, whereas we have had fewer than 11 months—only a few months—to do so. We shall resolve the matter, and save the UK taxpayer one helluva lot of money.

Mr. Curry: That is a load of blarney, and the hon. Gentleman knows it. None of us disputes the need for sensible arrangements to regulate use of public subsidy. It does not matter whether the Conservative Government produced a concordat. We did not propose devolution, and circumstances were different. The Minister has not responded to the issue of why two Ministers are singing a different tune to the same words. The House is dealing with that problem.

I understand that it is very much in the tradition of the House for an hon. Member to reserve the right to return to a matter that has not been satisfactorily dealt with rather than to press it to a conclusion—when it might be deemed to have been settled properly. I wish to revisit the matter, and hope that the Minister will reflect on the fact that he has not dealt with the substance of my concerns. I put him on notice that I plan to return persistently to the matter, because of the deeply unsatisfactory nature of the responses that we have received so far in debates on the Bill.

I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Schedule 2

Constitution of agencies

Angela Eagle: I beg to move amendment No. 26, in page 25, line 5, at end insert—

'.—(1) The persons to whom section 1 of the Superannuation Act 1972 applies (persons to or in respect of whom benefits may be provided by schemes under that section) shall include employees of a regional development agency.

(2) Accordingly, in Schedule 1 to that Act, at the appropriate point in the list of "Other Bodies", there is inserted "A development agency established under section 1 of the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998".'.

Amendment No. 26 will enable regional development agencies, if they wish, to offer the principal civil service pension scheme as their occupational pension scheme. Many non-departmental public bodies use that scheme for their staff. It is enabling and does not fetter the discretion of RDAs to choose a different occupational pension scheme, should that be agreed with Ministers.

When RDAs are set up on 1 April 1999, their staff will be inherited, along with functions from three public sector bodies—the civil service, whose staff are already members of the pension scheme, the Rural Development Commission, which operates a pension scheme that is analogous to the civil service pension scheme, and English Partnerships, which operates a funded scheme, akin to the local government pension scheme.

[Angela Eagle]

The amendment merely enables those, and any other RDA staff, to be members of the civil service pension scheme or, in the case of civil servants, to remain members.

Amendment agreed to.

Schedule 6

VESTING AND ACQUISITION OF LAND: SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS

10 pm

Angela Eagle: I beg to move amendment No. 12, in page 36, line 15, at end insert

', if he is satisfied—

( ) that an alternative right of way has been or will be provided, or

( ) that the provision of an alternative right of way is not required.'

In Committee, my hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning made a commitment to consider further the need for the Bill to give the Secretary of State a power to divert, as well as extinguish, a right of way over RDA land, as the Bill provides powers only for the extinguishment of a right of way.

The amendment contains a new provision that is analogous to an existing power of the Secretary of State in section 251 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. Under that provision, the Secretary of State may extinguish a footpath or bridleway over land held for planning purposes by a local authority if he or she is satisfied that an alternative right of way has been or will be provided, or that an alternative is not required. With the introduction of our amendment, no extinguishment of a right of way on RDA land could legally be effected unless and until the Secretary of State had fully considered the alternatives.

The hon. Member for Taunton (Mrs. Ballard) proposed an amendment in Committee that would have allowed the Secretary of State to divert a right of way rather than extinguish it altogether. That amendment was not of itself sufficient to achieve the desired objective. Although our amendment does not give the Secretary of State power to make a diversion over RDA land, we consider it unnecessary to introduce such a power into the Bill, as RDAs will have powers, as owners of the land, to dedicate a new right of way over their own land. In addition, the Secretary of State has powers under section 120 of the Highways Act 1980 to divert footpaths and bridleways in the interests of the owner, occupier or lessees of land, or the public. I believe that the Secretary of State will use that power where he or she considers it necessary to do so.

I emphasise that the power of extinguishment in the Bill will rest with the Secretary of State and not with the RDA. Provision is made in paragraph 6(2) of schedule 6 for publication of the relevant orders and for giving notice to the proper authorities of any such proposals. Paragraph 7 provides for representations or objections to be made, or for them to be heard before an independent person appointed by the Secretary of State for that purpose. Very often, that will lead to a public inquiry which anyone who is interested may attend.

Mrs. Ballard: We were told earlier this evening that we had a listening Government and that we should trust the Minister. I welcome the fact that the Government listened to the persuasive arguments made in Committee by me and my hon. Friend the Member for South-East Cornwall (Mr. Breed) when we tabled a similar amendment. I am glad that we trusted the Minister when he said that he would table an amendment that would have the same effect.

The Liberal Democrats welcome the amendment, and I am sure that it will be welcomed by the effective and vocal lobby of people who enjoy walking the rights of way around this country.

Amendment agreed to.

Order for Third Reading read.

10.3 pm

Mr. Caborn: I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

The English regions have long felt themselves to be the poor relations of the United Kingdom, believing that Scotland and Wales, with their development agencies, have been much better placed to improve their competitiveness. Our task, reflecting our manifesto commitment to set up regional development agencies, is to give the English regions the tools to improve their performance.

The regional economies are the building blocks of a prosperous national economy, affecting the overall UK performance. We must put all our regions in a position to compete with their European counterparts in the global marketplace. The figures for 1995 released by Eurostat and the Department of Trade and Industry in the past few days show that we have inherited a deteriorating situation from the previous Administration. There has been a marked deterioration since 1993, with every English region performing worse than it did then. Before the figures were released, the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) assured us in Committee that they would be considerably better and would show that many English regions were performing at or above the European average. The Conservatives have left us with every English region under-performing against the European average. The regions are doing considerably worse than they were, based on comparable figures from two years before.

The figures show that we have not progressed since 1984, when the United Kingdom stood at 96, compared with a European average of 100. The 1995 figures show that position to be unchanged. The previous Administration have left this Government with a pathetic performance from the English regions.

Even the capital, which has performed quite well—standing at 147 in 1993—is down to 139. Even the jewel in the crown is a little tarnished. However, make no mistake, we shall ensure that a twinkle is put back on that diamond when we establish the new mayor of London, the elected authority and the new development agency.

The Bill provides us with a means to tackle that economic deficit, which has plagued the English regions for too long. It provides for RDAs to be established in all the regions of England. The agencies will provide for effective and properly co-ordinated regional economic development and will underpin wider regeneration. They will play a major part in the future economic success of the entire United Kingdom.

The Opposition have argued in Committee and on Report that the Bill damages the interests of our rural areas. I hope that they now understand that, far from being damaging, the advent of RDAs will ensure that rural areas will be more equitably treated within the remit of the new regional bodies, which are charged with taking into account the interests of the whole region. The Government are committed to promoting the interests of rural areas. We believe that that can best be done by addressing their particular needs within an overall framework for development of the regions. Putting urban and rural matters on the same footing will ensure that rural interests are given their full weight.

One of the core functions of the RDAs will be to develop and implement a regional strategy, as provided for in clause 7. They will act in partnership with the stakeholders in the region, such as local authorities, business, industry, further and higher education, training and enterprise councils and voluntary groups. The RDAs will build on the work of existing competitiveness partnerships and other regional development initiatives. Their regional strategies will set a framework for decisions that affect all regional interests, providing for the first time a properly co-ordinated approach. That will ensure more efficient and effective delivery of economic development and regeneration.

The package of functions that we propose will give RDAs considerable influence throughout their regions. We have been asked in Committee and this evening to consider widening their remit further, giving them additional tasks and budgets to control. However, we believe that their package of functions strikes the right balance. It is challenging, but realistic. We do not want to overburden the new bodies in their initial stages.

Mr. Sheerman: Will my hon. Friend assure me, to pick up his theme on Second Reading, that there is room for organic growth? I have mentioned it many times, hinting at the possibility of powers to grow over time. Is my hon. Friend convinced that the Bill will provide such capability?

Mr. Caborn: My hon. Friend must have been looking over my shoulder at the next paragraph of my speech.

At the outset, RDAs will need to focus on establishing themselves, building up relationships in regions, formulating their regional strategies and developing their work programmes—getting themselves a track record and gaining the confidence of the people on whose behalf they will work. There is no reason why the role of RDAs should not develop over time, as the roles of the Scottish and Welsh development agencies did. The Bill will allow that, which I think answers the question asked by my hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman).

In 1975, the Labour Government were far-sighted in creating development agencies in Scotland and Wales. I think that Baroness Thatcher used the model for Northern Ireland because it was so good. The Scottish and Welsh development agencies have stood the test of time, and, indeed, all Administrations. They have an extremely proud record and ensure wealth creation in those countries.

The establishment of RDAs will give English regions and regional interests a new and unprecedented opportunity to influence and improve regional fortunes. That is what people in the regions want. Our consultation exercise, although ridiculed by Conservative Members, was very extensive; we had more than 1,500 responses. People in the regions clearly understand that RDAs will bring real added value to the UK's economic performance.

Even some former fellow Cabinet members of the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) have been to see me in my office to extol the virtues of RDAs.

Sir Norman Fowler: Name them.

Mr. Caborn: I will name them. Lord Young, for example, came to my office but a few weeks ago. The right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield may well blink. Lord Young said that he was asked to go to a meeting with representatives of the Government office for the south east, about which he was very sceptical. He came out of the meeting thinking that RDAs were a good idea. He had the guts to come to my office in the Ministry to say that the idea was good and one to which he would subscribe.

Furthermore, I responded only this week to an invitation from Lord Young to a meeting with south-east business men to discuss the issue. In fact, he has moved the meeting to Gatwick airport so that I can attend it. I suggest that Conservative Members wake up to the real world, as some of their colleagues have. We have such support the length and breadth of England for regional development agencies. Legislation for them ought to have been on the statute book many years ago.

The Bill sets the legislative framework for setting up the agencies as non-departmental public bodies. They will be accountable to Ministers and Parliament for their actions. The Bill also makes provision for RDAs to be properly accountable to their regions through voluntary regional chambers. It provides a mechanism for building on the informal structures that local authorities and their regional partners have set up.

I am delighted to tell the House that the provisions appear to have captured the imagination of local authorities and other regional interests that wish to be involved in the new regional approach. Regions such as the north-east, the north-west and my own, Yorkshire and Humberside, where my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister launched only last week the new Yorkshire and Humberside regional chamber, are building on work that has been developing regional partnerships over a number of years.

Even in regions where identities are less well established, the enthusiasm has been astonishing. Last week, my noble Friend Baroness Hayman attended the inaugural meeting of all local authorities—yes, all local authorities—in the eastern region. I am sure that the hon. Member for South Suffolk knows that region very well. In the south-west region, local authorities are coming together, for the first time, with other regional partners to take forward the regional agenda.

I am delighted to tell the House that we have had an overwhelming response from people who want to nominate individuals to serve on RDAs. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for South Suffolk should not be so cynical; Conservative Members are very cynical. They might even be able to do what Lord Walker did when he was on one of the quangos: he gave something back.

[Mr. Caborn]

We never know; some of them might even give something back. [HON. MEMBERS: "The Tories?"] Yes, one or two Tories have come on board. They are on the road to Damascus.

Despite all the cynicism of those on the Opposition Benches, some very senior people in business, commerce and finance have seen, as Lord Young has, that our ideas and the organisations that we shall put in place not only will be beneficial in terms of wealth creation but will attack the weaknesses in our competitive base. I am delighted that those high-calibre candidates have come forward to serve on the boards.

As I said earlier, we announced in our White Paper on London our proposals for the new London development agency. The LDA will have broadly the same powers and functions as the other RDAs. Subject to the outcome of the London referendum in May, the LDA will be directly accountable to the mayor, and will implement the mayor's economic development and regeneration strategy for London.

For reasons that I gave earlier, as an arm of the Greater London authority, the LDA will not be established until the mayor and assembly are in place. Its board will be business led, as will the other RDAs, but it will be appointed by the mayor. In addition, Government funds for regeneration, for the promotion of inward investment, for English Partnerships and for tourism will be channelled through the mayor.

The Bill is an important first step in the regional agenda for England that we outlined on 1 May last year, when we had such an overwhelming victory at the general election—an agenda that will bring a new dimension to policy making. There will be development agencies in all the English regions, to match those that have worked so successfully over many years in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

That will enable the English regions to make a full contribution to economic growth all over the United Kingdom, so that the economic performance of the UK as a whole can reach its full potential, and we can hold our head up in Europe again as we reach the average of GDP per capita there. That will be the object of the regional development agencies in England.

Sir Norman Fowler: In view of the number of hon. Members who want to speak, I shall be brief. I remind the Minister that the debate is not about the importance of the English regions; there is no question about that. I am a west midlands Member, and my right hon. and hon. Friends who have spoken most often in the debates come from regions from Yorkshire to East Anglia.

We want our regions and their industries to develop, and jobs to be created. That is not the question. The question is whether the regional development agencies will achieve that goal. I see no evidence in the debate to suggest that those Government-appointed agencies will bring about the development that we all want to see continue.

I use the word "continue" because, in spite of what the Minister said, what was achieved under the previous Government was formidable. There were record levels of inward investment, creating new jobs and new industries and leading to major exports. I shall describe that record not in the words of the previous Government but in those of the present Government's White Paper. A passage not quoted by the Minister, on page 30, says:

> "The cumulative value of foreign direct investment (FDI) into the UK has risen from $28 billion in 1975 to over $344 billion in 1996. The UK receives the largest share of FDI in the European Union, including about 40 per cent. of US and Japanese overseas investment.
> In manufacturing, FDI accounts for 18 per cent. of employment, 32 per cent. of capital expenditure and 40 per cent. of UK exports. Over the last decade, FDI has not only created over 600,000 jobs but has helped to develop and modernise the industrial base".

I underline the fact that those are not my words but those of the present Government's White Paper on regional development agencies. Let me put it another way: it is estimated that, since 1979, 172,000 jobs have been created or safeguarded in the west midlands, 92,000 in the north-west, 84,000 in the north-east and 40,000 in the south-west.

We have heard much about Ministers' aspirations, but little about the performance indicators by which those aspirations will be judged. Those indicators must include the number of jobs created, the amount of inward investment and the level of training for the work force. The performance of the Government-appointed agencies will be measured against the record of the previous Government, who did not lag in Europe, but set up the United Kingdom as the European leader in inward investment.

There is nothing to suggest that the position of England will be improved by the new RDAs, or that England will be better served by nine competing RDAs that are all not only selling their regions, but comparing unfavourably the position of competing regions. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) said, that does not even take account of Scotland and Wales. Moreover, all nine RDAs will have their own bureaucracies—chairmen, deputy chairmen, board members and chief executives—and there is nothing to suggest that that will help England to attract investment and create jobs.

Mr. Sheerman: Why does the right hon. Gentleman dwell on inward investment, given that the Conservative Government's problem was that they failed to invest in innovation and change in home-grown industry, which is exactly what the RDAs will be able to spotlight and encourage?

Sir Norman Fowler: The hon. Gentleman is being idiotic if he seriously believes that RDAs will invest directly—he is out of date, living in the 1960s. He made the same point on Second Reading—I am glad that he is at least consistent. British industry did badly in the 1970s because of the legacy of Labour Governments and their inability to tackle trade union power and all the other problems that brought British manufacturing industry to its knees. Everyone, except a few Labour bigots, knows that the Conservative Government secured recovery.

The board members of the new RDAs will be appointed not in the regions, but by Ministers. They will be the creatures of Whitehall and, above all, they will be unaccountable to the people whom they are intended to represent. None of the board members will be directly elected, and only a third of them will be councillors. Moreover, councillors who are voted out of office will still be able to remain on the board.

I do not believe that, even on its own terms, the Bill deserves support. It will not lead to an increase in inward investment; indeed, there is a real danger that it will lead to a reduction. The Bill does not represent a realistic exercise in devolution; it sets up ministerially appointed quangos, which, only a few months ago, the Labour party said were entirely unacceptable. As we have heard this evening, even supporters of regional governance may think twice before supporting the creation of bodies that are unaccountable and show every prospect of being unsuccessful.

Even less do I believe that the Bill deserves support as a step-by-step process to regional government in England. [Interruption.] I am glad that the Minister seems to agree, as he did not mention it.

The Government appear to want regional government, but they know, and No. 10 knows, that if they had a referendum, they would lose it. They know that the public would reject that proposition, so they have come up with a half-baked proposal: that, at an undefined stage in the future—not in this Parliament—they would, if re-elected, introduce legislation to set up regional government not for the whole country but for some parts of it.

These are not policies for the development of the English regions. They are flawed constitutionally and they do not add up economically or industrially. I believe that the House should reject them.

Dr. Ashok Kumar (Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East): The Bill has great benefits for my area. As the representative of a northern constituency, I have a special interest in the Bill's success. [Interruption.] I warmly support the Bill, but I want to discuss certain conditions, some of which have been mentioned already, that are necessary for the success of regional development agencies. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is far too much conversation in the Chamber. The hon. Gentleman is addressing the House.

Dr. Kumar: Many people believe that the breadth of functions to be exercised by the RDAs should be wider. They point in particular to some existing departmental functions of the Departments of Trade and Industry and for Education and Employment; to the training and enterprise councils; to the networks of business links; and to the universities and colleges.

Together, those bodies wield enormous power, have budgets of many millions of pounds and profoundly shape future prosperity and competitiveness, as well as the technology, business support and skills base of the regions in which they are sited. They are run in the main by unelected people and are too often dominated by the great and the good or, some may say, the usual suspects, appointed by the previous Government.

I recognise that the settlement created in the Bill decrees that those bodies will not be directly integrated into the RDA network, but I and many other Members of Parliament still feel that special attention should be given to formulating ways in which we can guarantee that their work reflects the broad thrust of RDA policy. There is much active and willing partnership, and greater transparency and accountability can be achieved.

I was deeply disappointed by the Minister's response on new clause 5, about the relationship between TECs and RDAs. I am still concerned that a region's TECs should have a structural relationship with the RDA, which should have some input into and oversight of a TEC's business strategy and planning. The same is true of business links networks in the regions.

The question of relationships with local universities is more delicate, as they are governed in a collegiate fashion. There need, at the very least, to be instructions to RDAs and universities to use their best endeavours to work together. Their special teaching skills and areas of scientific, technological and business expertise should whenever possible be designed to reflect the needs and specialisms of the wider regional economy. That leads to reflection on the need to ensure that the vital delivery agencies for the RDAs are in place and able to operate coherently from the first day onwards.

It is important not to be prescriptive about the forms of delivery of RDA services, but they should be structured so as to achieve the maximum subsidiarity. In the main, that will mean that those functions will be delivered on the basis of individual towns, cities and conurbations and, outwith highly urbanised parts of the country, on the basis of travel-to-work areas. However, there may well be occasions when some of the functions impinge on discrete areas. At that level, future board members of the RDAs will have to accept that some functions will be delivered at a neighbourhood, village or estate level.

In my area of Teesside, we have effective sub-regional structures covering the former Cleveland county area and the new unitary authority of Darlington. We have a local authority joint strategy unit, which oversees the strategic planning and transportation work for the entire area. We have a training and enterprise council and a business link covering Teesside, a structure that will soon cover Darlington.

We have the Tees Valley Development Company, a tripartite body that replicates and complements the work of the Northern Development Company at the sub-regional level and acts as the delivery mechanism for all inward investment in Tees valley—a mechanism that has brought many jobs to our area and has ensured prosperity in the short years since it was set up.

That network of agencies works harmoniously together and will provide Teesside with an effective sub-regional structure to amplify and complement the work of the northern RDA. However, we have a duty to see that the work of the RDA and the mix of the board members reflect the aspirations of our region.

Fundamental to the debate is the need to ensure that the RDAs do not merely become quangos, but become the people's development agencies. There is strong support for democratic regional government. That support is widespread and, in the north, is not confined to a handful of academics and local councillors. It is vital that the RDAs become ultimately answerable to the people of the region, as well as to the House. The Bill recognises that.

There is cynicism in the wider community towards unelected bodies, and that is unsurprising considering the excesses of the many quangos that prospered under the previous Tory Government. I strongly suggest that the forward plans for the new wave of RDAs should include the proviso that those plans must be acceptable in future to our nominated regional chambers and, if there is the popular will, to directly elected regional assemblies.

In any case, it is imperative that the initial plans are scrutinised by the wider regional community and all regional stakeholders. Thought will have to be given to the best way of ensuring that. We could think of setting up a regional grand committee, made up of all regional interests.

Such an arrangement would be similar to long-standing arrangements in some US states, where state assemblies made up of representatives of the cities, counties, towns and small villages meet to discuss and approve the economic development and planning strategies of the state legislature. They may meet only for a couple of days a year, but they serve a valuable purpose, in that they involve all the stakeholders of the region. They give the seal of legitimacy and acceptance to the work of state senators and their staff.

The RDA must therefore be the first stepping stone to democratic regional government—a concept that is strongly supported in the north. Strong support has come from the North of England Assembly of Local Authorities, the all-party Campaign for a Northern Assembly, trade unions, businesses, the media, the voluntary sector and the professions. That support was demonstrated last year by the sheer numbers of those who signed the "Declaration of the North", sponsored by the Campaign for a Northern Assembly, and which I and many colleagues from the region signed.

This is an historic Bill. For the first time, we see the machinery for modernisation and the renewal of English regions—as my hon. Friend the Minister said earlier—being placed in the hands of the people of those regions. This is an historic step towards a fuller, more participatory democracy, and I am proud to be voting for the Bill.

Mrs. Ballard: What is wrong with this Bill is not what is in it, but what is not in it. It lacks measures to make RDAs truly accountable, as opposed to relying on the good intentions of board members or ministerial guidance. It is the first step towards regional government, although the Government sometimes like to pretend that it is not, as when in Committee they refused to accept some of our sensible amendments, which would have strengthened the RDAs' relationships with regional chambers.

Liberal Democrat Members believe that power should be devolved to the regions of England. We welcome the fact that the Bill gives regional bodies the ability to promote economic development, but it does not ensure that they are locally accountable. The Government rejected all our amendments designed to promote increased openness and accountability, including new clause 3.

The Bill's measures on accountability, to regional chambers, offer some hope, but it is vague on those points. Again, we are to rely on the guidance given by the Secretary of State to RDAs. I would prefer to rely on statutory measures to which everyone could look as a benchmark, but we know that the Minister is allergic to having more things written into the Bill. Ministers have said that regional chambers will act as Select Committees, monitoring the work of RDAs. Select Committees in the House have not necessarily led to increased Government accountability, despite occasional and notable embarrassments.

We are also to trust the Secretary of State on the appointment of members of RDA boards. He alone has the power to appoint and deselect members of boards. The history of quangos is the history of the abuse of powers of appointment. As the Minister said in Committee, Ministers have in the past appointed—and, I suspect, will continue to appoint—to quangos a majority of members who can be relied upon to support central Government policy and politics.

The first 11 months of the Labour Government have shown that they, too, are determined to ensure that quangos do their bidding, by packing the boards with their supporters. Only today, I had a reply from the Department of Health that confirmed that in the south-west region, 23 Labour, 11 Liberal Democrat and two Conservative appointments have been made to health trust boards.

Mr. Adrian Sanders (Torbay): Labour is the third party in the south-west.

Mrs. Ballard: My hon. Friend is right. I hope that the political balance on the south-west RDA board will be more in proportion with elected political representation in the south-west. I look forward to receiving the Minister's assurance on that.

We are also worried that RDAs will not pay sufficient attention to sustainable development. Of the four purposes of RDAs as stated in the Bill, only the objective of sustainable development is qualified with the words

"where it is relevant to its area to do so."

We, and many outside this Chamber, believe that that could lead to sustainable development becoming, at best, a separate add-on to the RDAs' purpose.

Mr. Caborn: Rubbish.

Mrs. Ballard: I am delighted to hear the Minister say, "Rubbish."

We are concerned that sustainable development may be an add-on rather than an integral purpose informing all the actions of RDAs. RDAs could support inappropriate developments on, for example, green-field sites that are damaging to the local environment and contrary to local development plans and regional planning guidance. Our amendments sought to put sustainable development in the mainstream, but Ministers turned them down on the ground that they were too restrictive.

Ministers' support for less strictly worded clauses on the RDAs' responsibilities to regional chambers or sustainable development is in contrast to their attitude to our amendments on the boundaries of RDAs. We sought to add some flexibility to the Bill on the point. The Secretary of State can alter the boundaries of RDAs once established after local consultations, but we believe that a boundary review should be conducted, to ensure that boundaries adequately reflect regional community characteristics and identities. Later, my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. George) will talk more about regional identity. The lack of such a review threatens the long-term success of the entire regional project if the country is clumsily divided into artificial regions.

The Government intend that RDAs should have a leading role on European Union structural funds. When I met local government regional office staff in Brussels, they expressed concern about the lack of concurrence of RDAs with Euro-constituencies. They believe that there is a need for a strong regional political steer for the work of RDAs and are concerned that economic development should not be separated from community development, tourism or training. That view was shared by the Select Committee on the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs.

We were worried that the Bill could result in powers being given to RDAs from local government. Our main concern was about planning powers, and we welcome the Government's amendments to delete the original clauses giving RDAs those powers.

We remain concerned that the Bill does not offer enough guidance on relations between local government and the RDAs. We shall wait for the Government to give RDAs further guidance, and we look forward to contributing to the consultation process.

We are also concerned about the impact of RDAs on rural areas. We are worried that they will reflect mainly urban rather than rural interests. However, we welcome the Conservatives' new awareness of the problems of rural areas. As my hon. Friend the Member for South-East Cornwall (Mr. Breed) said, many people believe that Conservative politics were largely to blame for the crisis in the countryside. I hope that the Secretary of State has listened to the voices raised, and will ensure that RDA board members will represent all areas of their region, rural and urban. I am pleased that in Committee the Minister confirmed his intention to ring-fence Rural Development Commission funding for economic development, to be spent on rural areas.

Despite those caveats, we welcome the Bill's broad aims, as my hon. Friend the Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey) said on Second Reading. Many parts of the country suffer from economic under-performance, which should be helped by having a strong regional voice to press their case and to promote economic growth. Regions have suffered from too many players with conflicting functions trying to promote growth. We support the bringing together of those functions, and hope that the functions of the TECs will speedily be brought under the RDAs.

RDAs can act as economic catalysts for development. Britain has suffered from unequal economic development, and our regions have not been adequately represented in the past. We have lost out in the European Union because of a deficiency of regional bodies through which EU development funds can be routed, and which are capable of raising matching funds.

I hope that RDAs will evolve, that ministerial guidance will be as good as has been promised, that the boards will open their meetings to the public, and that our fears will be misplaced. We shall be voting with the Government tonight.

Ms Joan Walley (Stoke-on-Trent, North): I welcome the Bill. I represent both an urban and a rural area, and it is crucial that we benefit from the establishment of regional development agencies. This measure will make a tremendous difference in north Staffordshire. It will help with the case that we shall make for European structural funds.

I look forward to the economic development that will begin to transform our region, especially after all the ravages of the past 18 years. My constituency no longer has a coal industry, and is heavily dependent on the ceramics industry. We desperately need diversification, and we shall look to the regional development agency to give us that. We want a strong representation of local people from north Staffordshire on the RDA.

One aspect of the legislation that the Minister did not mention in his speech but which was extensively covered in Committee is sustainability. I regret that I was not on the Standing Committee to debate this important issue in detail. I pay tribute to the Minister, because, unlike the legislation on Scotland and Wales, this Bill offers great potential for sustainability. The Bill for a Greater London authority also enables us to promote sustainability.

I have some slight concerns about clause 4. It is crucial that sustainability, instead of being one aspect of clause 4, should underpin all that the RDAs do. I hope that, in the short time between this evening's debate and the Bill reaching the statute book, there will be an opportunity to consider that in some detail.

The Bill is a powerful piece of legislation that will give us huge opportunities to provide the organic development mentioned earlier. We must not look only at the large-scale economic development that has characterised so much of our past efforts at the expense of other factors including the environment.

In considering how sustainability can be built into the legislation, I urge the Minister to review the consultation period, and look at the way in which guidance can be used to ensure that sustainability can be made fundamental. I should be grateful if my hon. Friend could give some indication of how the great issue of sustainability will underpin all that is done.

10.45 pm

Mr. Robert Key (Salisbury): I have been watching the progress of the Bill through the House with growing incredulity. I have considerable regard for the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning, and no doubt he is regarded by his constituents as a good Member of Parliament; but the trouble is that he actually believes in the Bill, whereas what worries me is its monumental irrelevance.

The Bill is fundamentally flawed, and I have a fundamental objection to this sort of economic manipulation by any Government. Those of us who are on the wise side of 50 have seen it all before and we thought that the Labour Government might have learnt from their experiences of the Department of Economic Affairs and all that went with that. It is an amazing figment of Ministers' imagination that they believe that they can create a single job through the construction of some bureaucracy out in the country.

The Minister and I share a great deal—we share ancient constituencies in proud cities—but the proud city of Salisbury had eight Members of Parliament when it was first created, and it sent its first Members to Westminster in 1260; at that time, the Minister's city of Sheffield did not have any Members of Parliament. We take the long view, which is quite clear: this sort of irrelevance will not help. Our country, our counties, our cities and our towns will thrive in spite of the Bill, not because of it. The Minister will win the vote tonight—of course he will—but he will not win the arguments, or our hearts and minds.

The other fundamental flaw, and my fundamental objection to the Bill, is the concept, in which the Minister believes, of a region or area. Clause 4 of this wretched Bill contains six mentions of "its area", meaning the development areas. What areas? What nonsense it is to suppose that we in my constituency of Salisbury have anything to do with what is going on in Gloucestershire, or, for that matter, in St. Ives and the Isles of Scilly. Regional identity is thrown to the winds by this ridiculous piece of legislation—it is utterly meaningless. All the Bill will do is suck democracy and accountability out of our districts and put them in the hands, in my case, of an overblown city in the west midlands called Bristol.

This ridiculous Bill is flawed, politically and economically, and will do little good. However, it does great harm to my constituents. The discourtesy of the Department last week in not informing me of the future of the Rural Development Commission is something that I would forgive, were it not for the fact that, after nearly a year of procrastination, those of my constituents who have given their all for the RDC still do not know whether they have jobs, or, if they do, whether those jobs will be with a new rural development agency or the Countryside Commission. They do not know what the RDC-Countryside Commission combination will be called, and they have no notion of what it will do, or of what their jobs will be.

The Bill is a complete mess—if only the Minister would come down out of the clouds, put his feet firmly on the ground and think for once about the economic prosperity of this country, rather than the creation of irrelevant bureaucracies and nonsensical pseudo-Parliaments.

I understand the European agenda to which the Minister must work. I understand that we are all supposed to be reformed in this country, and that we are meant to think that we do not need democratic accountability if we have new Labour. I understand the Minister's agenda: it is wrong, and it will not last. Meanwhile, will the Minister please address the issue of my constituents who have worked for the Rural Development Commission for years promoting the rural areas of this country?

10.50 pm

Ms Jenny Jones: I, too, shall be brief, as I know that several hon. Members wish to speak.

Regional development agencies will bring my region and every other region in England something that they have lacked for a considerable time: a coherent, co-ordinated, strategic approach to economic development and regeneration.

Hon. Members will confirm that, under the previous Government, there was no shortage of economic development initiatives. However, they were piecemeal, and were often dumped on local government, with no consultation with councillors and local business people. Experience was never acknowledged, and local people were never listened to. That led to a very divisive approach, duplication of effort and to a waste of resources. Regional development agencies will bring a coherence to the regions that will ensure that the needs of all local people are met and that the regions can compete effectively in Europe.

Regional development agencies will also pose major challenges. As I have said, I recently attended a major conference in the midlands attended by hundreds of business men and people from the voluntary sector, local government, colleges and universities. They were extremely enthusiastic about the proposed West Midlands RDA, but they raised many questions.

There is no doubt that the boards of RDAs have a major responsibility to ensure that they are constituted properly, and that they meet the needs of all the people in the regions. There will also be challenges for the Government offices for the regions. They will have to learn how to work more effectively in order to meet local needs. What is known as the "district commissioner" approach to listening to and working with local people must change.

Finally, I believe that the agencies are the first step on the road to regional government. I am a strong supporter of regional government, and I should like to see it happen sooner rather than later. I hope that the Minister will provide an assurance that regionalism will be brought to the English regions as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ellman: Regional development agencies will be a breakthrough for the English regions, because they will combine commitment to an area with the ability to act in relation to investment in companies, the development of property and premises, business support, training and retraining.

I shall illustrate the way in which a development agency can affect an area by referring to Lancashire Enterprises, set up by the county council—of which I was vice-chairman between 1982 and 1997—and its work when Leyland-DAF collapsed in 1993, threatening devastation and the loss of thousands of jobs in Lancashire, and signalling the virtual end of truck making in the United Kingdom.

Lancashire Enterprises worked in partnership with the private sector, and, using its investment, training and development powers, helped to develop the current thriving Leyland Trucks. At the newly developed Lancashire Enterprises business park, nearly 1,900 people are employed by 45 different companies that did not exist in 1993. The area has been transformed, and it is now a centre of manufacturing activity. Truck making has continued, and has been strengthened. Wealth and employment continue to develop in the area.

A regional development agency will bring great support and benefit to the whole north-west. In my area, I look forward to a regional development agency ensuring that the benefits of Ford's major investment in the new Jaguar flow to small and medium enterprises throughout the area.

I look forward to the development of the creative industries. I look forward to the use of the knowledge base in our universities for commercial and community benefit. I look forward to seeing the benefits of the information society extended to all companies in the area. I look forward to the linking of that progress with community-based economic regeneration. I look forward to a much closer link between Manchester and Liverpool airports, for the benefit of Merseyside and the whole of the north-west.

A regional development agency cannot exist in isolation. The present Government's policies of supporting business, especially small and medium enterprises, will be of benefit. It is essential that Government Departments such as the Department of Trade and Industry, as well as the Department for Education and Employment, work closely with the regional development agency. That is one reason why I regard the development and strengthening of regional chambers as an essential part of the strategy.

Regional development agencies have been a long time coming. They started in 1981, with the alternative regional strategy of the present Deputy Prime Minister. In 1996 they moved further, with Bruce Millan's "Renewing the Regions". In 1998, we now have the Regional Development Agencies Bill. It is now time for action and the transformation of the English regions.

Mr. Stephen Hepburn (Jarrow): Considering the Bill from a northern regional perspective, two questions need to be answered: what are the problems with existing regional policy, and do the RDAs, as presented in the Bill, address those problems?

It is plain to see that the present regional policy, which has been in place for many years, has been an abject failure. Nowhere is that more obvious than in the north-east, where I am fortunate enough to represent a constituency, where we have higher unemployment than many regions, lower wages, and a desperate need to improve skills. It is a disgrace, and an indictment of the previous Government, that the average age of the skilled worker on the Tyne is 47; if that is economic decline, we should acknowledge it.

The Government solutions of the past have been parachuted-in, Whitehall-designed schemes, coming down—top-down urban initiatives. We have heard them all before: task forces, urban development corporations, city action teams. The result is that things stay the same. Economic decline continues, local democracy is sidelined, and power is increasingly centralised in national Government.

Government neglect has meant that the regional stakeholders in the area have had to play their part to make up for the deficit of Government action. We have had private-public partnerships and trade union involvement. Eleven years ago, the Northern Development Company was set up by those people—and a successful partnership it has proved, creating 520 investment projects, 75,000 jobs and £9 billion of capital investment in the region. However, they are running hard—although successfully—to stand still.

I support the Bill, because it addresses the real problems of the area. It acknowledges the need for long-term economic planning, the need to involve local stakeholders, and the need to devolve real power to the regions. Finally, it provides a firm foundation on which to establish regional government—a regional government which I and my colleagues in the northern group of MPs will work with the stakeholders of the region to establish, for the better prosperity of the northern region.

Mrs. Spelman: We cannot reach the end of the debate without again expressing our great disappointment at the way in which the Government have consistently rebuffed all our efforts to seek amendments that would protect rural interests. The Opposition have repeatedly drawn attention to those concerns, but all our efforts to have them considered have been ignored.

I make a final request to the Government. I ask them to hear our argument that, as rural Britain faces a fast-growing crisis, they will live to regret the contempt in which they have held the strength of feeling behind our amendments. The regional development agencies, which will be urban dominated, show very little consideration for the minority position in which the rural representatives will find themselves. The Government's proposal that only one of 12 members of each board should reflect rural interests is nothing more than tokenism, and a poor response to the ever-increasing crisis that confronts British agriculture in the wider rural economy. That has been consistently ignored by the Government through all the stages of the Bill. The new clauses moved this evening, which offered one last chance for proper consideration to be given to those rural interests, have once again been rejected.

Mr. Lansley: Is it not a further disappointment that, at this late stage of the Bill, the Government took no opportunity to introduce amendments that would have safeguarded some of the functions of the Rural Development Commission, in particular some of its research and analytical functions? Ministers have been happy to draw on those in recent weeks, but do not seem to be prepared to protect the sources from which such valuable information comes.

Mrs. Spelman: I thank my hon. Friend. Indeed, the debate has revealed that some of the functions of the Rural Development Commission will be lost into the ether. With the passage of the Bill, rural interests will be less well represented. I fear that the Government will find themselves in an impossible position. The Secretary of State will have to direct and guide the boards to resolve the tensions between urban and rural areas.

Mr. Pickles: The position is worse than that. Those in rural areas will not be able to know what is going on, as members of the public will have no right to attend meetings of the board.

Mrs. Spelman: I thank my hon. Friend for that intervention. It reveals the lack of openness in the newly generated RDAs, which will compound the gathering crisis in agriculture.

The Government climbdown on planning powers was significant. It would have been too easy for the new RDAs to take advantage of failing farms, and of land becoming available as agriculture slides further into crisis. Opposition pressure in Committee forced the Government to withdraw a clause that would have given RDAs the power to grant themselves change of land use.

We hope that the debate will bring some concessions for rural areas. The other amendments that we tabled would have protected the interests of local government, by recognising that it was unacceptable to transfer powers away in a thoroughly undemocratic fashion.

[Mrs. Spelman]

We register the strongest protest to the Government about the way in which the crisis in rural areas is being ignored.

11.2 pm

Ms Rosie Winterton (Doncaster, Central): I was proud to serve on the Standing Committee that considered the Bill, especially under the distinguished leadership of my hon. Friends the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning and the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

I know that the Bill will bring great benefit to my area. I was proud to witness the historic occasion in Hull on Friday last week when my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister launched the country's first regional chamber, that for Yorkshire and Humberside. The launch was attended by representatives of all political parties, including the Conservative party. I was astonished by the contribution of the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), which showed how out of touch Conservative Members are with their rank and file.

The establishment of a regional development agency will bring considerable benefit to the people I represent in Doncaster, Central. The decline of the traditional industries of coal, engineering and rail means that Doncaster badly needs regeneration assistance. Although it has suffered from industrial decline, the town has tremendous potential. There are strong arguments for locating the RDA's headquarters in Doncaster.

Doncaster is a transport hub, with excellent road and rail links to the north, the south, the east and the west. It is a gateway to the region. Through the Humber ports, it has easy access to Europe, and there is now a direct rail link to Europe through the railport. In addition, there are proposals to reopen the Royal Air Force base at Finningley as an airport, which would be a great attraction for inward investment. That is an issue which has already been identified in the annex to the regional development agencies White Paper.

English Partnerships' northern office is already situated in Doncaster. Its staff will be transferred to the RDA, and I believe that that is why we should see the RDAs' headquarters located in Doncaster.

The Bill will make a difference. It is long awaited, and it will do a great deal to alleviate the economic and social problems faced by my constituents.

11.4 pm

Mr. Yeo: We have had a valuable Third Reading debate, which was opened with characteristic bluster by the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning, whose case was rapidly and entirely demolished by my right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler).

The hon. Member for Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East (Dr. Kumar) criticised the undemocratic nature of regional development agencies, and then said that he would support the Bill. The hon. Member for Taunton (Mrs. Ballard) criticised the qualified nature of the Bill's commitment to sustainable development, and then said that her party would support the Bill.

Of those who spoke on Third Reading, only my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), who criticised the Bill, appeared to have the courage of his convictions in saying that he would vote against it. I was glad that my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman) had the chance to expose the failure of the Bill to address the real concerns that exist in rural areas.

There are two abiding themes to the Bill. The first is that it is a centralising measure. It pulls power after power back to the office of the Secretary of State. It is the Secretary of State who appoints the boards, who determines the pay of their members, and determines their pay-offs. It is the Secretary of State who decides the budget, dictates the strategy, chooses the regional chamber, controls the borrowing, and tells the agencies how to keep their accounts. The Secretary of State will decide when they will publish their annual reports, and he will even dictate the form in which the notice of the annual meeting should be drawn up. He will direct how that meeting should be conducted.

The list goes on and on. Every decision of any importance to do with RDAs will be taken by the Secretary of State.

The second theme is that the passage of the Bill was notable for the ignominious defeat of the Government's attempt to take planning powers away from elected local authorities. Only the vigilance of the Conservative Opposition prevented that spurious and fundamental threat to the role of local authorities from remaining in the Bill.

The Bill sets out nine new quangos, which many regions neither need nor want, and whose boundaries bear no relation to the communities that they are supposed to serve. Their accountability to the public is non-existent. The Secretary of State is given huge new powers, which will not help rural areas but will cause duplication of effort and lead to the waste of taxpayers' resources. The Bill should be rejected.

11.5 pm

Mr. Caborn: With the leave of the House—

Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. I hear dissenting voices. As the leave of the House is not being granted, I must put the Question.

Question put, That the Bill be now read the Third time:—

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (INTERMEDIATE DIETS) (SCOTLAND) BILL

Ordered,

That, in respect of the Criminal Procedure (Intermediate Diets) (Scotland) Bill, notices of Amendments, new Clauses and new Schedules to be moved in Committee may be accepted by the Clerks at the Table before the Bill has been read a second time.—[Jane Kennedy.]

Regions

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Jane Kennedy.]

11.19 pm

Mr. Andrew George (St. Ives): Those who may have been drawn to this debate through love of minutiae of etymological discourse will be sadly disappointed.

I asked for this Adjournment debate because I am concerned about the general failure to distinguish between devolution and administrative regionalisation; between responding to popular consensus to devolve power to Scotland and Wales and the top-down division of the remainder into Government administrative zones, without first establishing the same community of interests or popular support.

Today's final stages of the Regional Development Agencies Bill has confirmed once again that the debate is concentrating on specific functions—access to board members, concordats, planning matters and what should happen to the Rural Development Commission's resources—so much so that we run the risk of abandoning our critical faculties.

Pinned on to the emperor's robes—in this case, the robes of the regions—will be the badges of economic development agencies, chambers and probably regional assemblies. When it is pointed out that those regions do not exist, the badges will begin to look ridiculous, quite apart from being painful to the wearer.

The Government must recognise that, with a few honourable exceptions outside Wales and Scotland, there is little or no demand for devolution in the remainder of mainland UK. Where any interest is expressed, it is largely for reasons motivated by fear—fear of being left out or left behind as opposed to a demonstration of enthusiasm for devolution and the setting up of new regions. Many towns and cities are demonstrating that point right now.

Outside Scotland and Wales, the setting up of regions would create essentially artificial and bureaucratic constructs. England has not been divided into separate political regions since the Norman conquest. Given the option today, there appears little strong evidence that the English people would prefer a more decentralised model of government than the present unitary state. Indeed, as many of my hon. Friends regularly point out, as a Cornish man and not an English man, I can take a dispassionate and objective view on this matter.

Although power is being decentralised to London, it is not decentralisation in the proper sense, but rather a tidying up and clarification of strategic decision making and planning for the London area. Other than that, it is probably only in parts of the north of England where there appears to be some concerted public demand for the decentralisation of power, which is welcome.

Yet where there is clear popular support for devolution, the Government appear to ignore it. For example, whether one calls the territory a province, a department, a region or, as many would prefer, a small nation, Cornwall is an interesting case in point. In his 1995 report to the Labour party for the Institute for and points out that, with a population of half a million, the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly region is larger than many other European regions. Like many others who have commented on this, he argued that cross-border issues are resolvable with the continuation of joint boards and ad hoc groupings. Tindale went on to argue that Cornwall should be given the option of becoming a county with regional status. He drew attention to the strong cultural and linguistic case for Cornwall, which he felt set it apart from other cases for small regions within the British state.

Public Policy Research, Stephen Tindale draws attention to the special status of Cornwall. He says:

"The Cornish conundrum poses a particular problem for regionalists"

Whether or not Cornwall is an exceptional case, an important point of principle is established. Strong cultural traditions and identities can and should provide the platform for, rather than the obstacle to, devolution, just as they did in Scotland and Wales. In the headlong rush to set up regions, we need to be certain that we do not simply replace the bland uniformity of a centralised unaccountable state with the bland uniformity of synthetic regions based on bureaucratic convenience, thus adding to the problems rather than to the opportunities of places like Cornwall.

I urge anyone who has never noticed the Cornish pride and strong attachment to the area and wants to know what I mean to come to Twickenham on Saturday 18 April, when more than 50,000 Cornish rugby fans will take over that corner of London. I may be wrong, but I imagine that many of them know little about the rules of the game. They will be there for the county championship final not just to watch Cornwall crush whatever the opposition will be that afternoon, but as a focus for and demonstration of their pride and identity.

If, instead of being ignored, that passion was recognised as a strength and even a little of it could be bottled and used as the basis for a devolved region or province of government, a great deal could be achieved. Instead, under the current drift of policy, Cornwall and places like it face oblivion. Why?

For whose convenience are the regions being set up? With the historic opportunity of a period of significant constitutional change, why is the drawing of the regional maps so conservative? If the purpose is to ensure a substructure of government comparable to that of our European partners, why not examine the variety of regional structures on offer?

Mr. John Burnett (Torridge and West Devon): Does my hon. Friend agree that vast regions with disparate and variable per capita gross domestic products will dilute the regional assistance available for areas such as my constituency, the county of Cornwall and the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey)?

Mr. George: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that intervention. I shall deal with that point later.

Germany, Italy and Spain contain regions of a variety of sizes, including some smaller than Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly.

If regions are a response to public demand, where is the demonstration of popular legitimacy? The Government have argued that adopting a largely administrative division of government zones is a convenient, ready-to-hand, off-the-shelf solution. Does the Minister recognise that that could do a great deal of harm and overlooks the great strength of building on strong regions or provinces that already exist? In some so-called regions there is more internal disagreement than community of interest. Many predict that the regions contain the seeds of their own destruction.

Mr. Lembit Öpik (Montgomeryshire): Does my hon. Friend agree that the concern that he has described has already made itself felt in Wales since the referendum on the assembly? We are seeing the danger of internecine disputes in administratively defined regions that bear no geographical similarity to what those living in those enforced regional areas feel.

Mr. George: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that support. Many parallels can be established.

The Minister may believe that places such as Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly are too small. Is that not another case of repeating accepted wisdom without challenging it? What economies of scale are being sought? Could they be achieved through partnership and collaboration? Part of my constituency is the Isles of Scilly, with a population of 2,000. As well as being a county and district authority, the council is also the public water authority. Most of the extra costs of running the authority are due to the distance from the mainland, not problems of scale.

Larger units also bring costs. For Cornwall, any economies of scale would be far outweighed by the associated diseconomies of scale, such as the leakage of higher-paid jobs to the east and the statistical invisibility of poorer areas. Even if the case for larger areas can be proven—I do not believe that it can—issues of accountability, sense of ownership, belonging and popular legitimacy are more important than a narrow Thatcherite focus.

Some may also argue that to allow regions to define themselves would inevitably lead to disputes and some claims for absurdly small regions or provinces. On any mild inspection, those problems could be easily overcome. Clearly, no one could justify the setting up of a strategic tier of government on a scale smaller than that of the largest tier of local government for the area. Therefore, waggish claims of unilateral declaration of independence for towns and villages would not survive cursory inspection. On disputes over size, just as it is not for the people of the west of England to hold a referendum on whether Wales should have an assembly, the decision of one area to call for its own regional assembly should—or rather could—not be overturned by its neighbour deciding that it could not allow it.

I reassure the House that in this debate it is not my intention to plummet new depths of parochialism and insularity—quite the opposite. As anyone who has experienced it knows—as I do from finding out what it means to be Cornish after I left school, I am sorry to say—by understanding oneself, one is able to make clearer parallels with other groups and minorities in other parts of the world.

I understood that the Government wanted to join the celebration of diversity in a nation rich in cultures, languages, races, identities and traditions, but their proposals for regions will kill off passion and replace it with bureaucratic blandness; suffocate identity and replace it with soulless and synthetic placelessness; submerge popular legitimacy with justification of bureaucratic convenience.

Ms Candy Atherton (Falmouth and Camborne): I was very much hoping that the hon. Gentleman would raise what for many people in Cornwall is the No. 1 issue: objective 1 status. That is in my view the answer to the many problems that the county faces. Discussion about boundaries and assemblies is way down the line in comparison with the importance of dealing with objective 1 status, securing Government support and securing support in the European Union. Does he agree?

Mr. George: Absolutely; I am coming to that point. The underlying problem is that, in the Government's impatience to set up the paraphernalia of RDAs, they must ignore proper consideration of how regions are determined. Before the process goes too far, I urge the Government to rethink. I urge them to build on the strength of identity rather than allow identities to be submerged; to initiate a profound rethink and revisit the principles represented by the Scottish and Welsh models; and to allow those parts of the country that are viewed as examples by others to bring forward their cases for regional assemblies, which includes the case for objective 1 status. If the Government recognise Cornwall's regional status in that sense, it will unquestionably enhance Cornwall's case for objective 1 status in Europe.

My final question for the Minister relates to the example of Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly, as much for their sake as for other parts of the UK that wish to establish and build on their identities. I am not hellbent on attacking the Labour Government, but I am very much hellbent on succeeding in securing objective 1 status and not losing the identities and sense of passion on which we can build local provinces. What advice, encouragement and support can the Minister offer those who want to bring forward the case for distinct regional assemblies for smaller areas and, in so doing, bolster the case for Cornwall's objective 1 status?

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Angela Eagle): I congratulate the hon. Member for St. Ives (Mr. George) on successfully securing the opportunity to debate the Government's policy on the definition of regions. I understand that he did not vote for the Third Reading of the Regional Development Agencies Bill, although many of his colleagues did, but I hope that time will prove that his caricature of the mechanisms on which we have just voted successfully as passionless and bureaucratic is wrong. Such mechanisms offer many of the chances for diversity and regionalism that he has suggested for the future of Cornwall.

The previous Government neglected and ignored England's regions. They believed that everything could be dictated by Whitehall and that local government should dance to Whitehall's tune. By contrast, this Government have embraced local government, championed devolution and cultivated the regional agenda. We have been elected with a firm mandate to address the neglect of the previous Government.

We produced a White Paper on the regional agenda. We are setting up regional development agencies in England, which will be complemented by the steps that every region in England is now taking to establish a voluntary regional chamber. We are also giving Londoners the opportunity to have their own elected assembly and a mayor with real power and influence.

Many of England's regions are rooted in history. Some are based on geographical features, while others are based on industrial or cultural legacies. The hon. Gentleman described a particular cultural legacy in Cornwall, which has always had its own special sense of place. Even a cursory look at our history would make anyone realise what a special place Cornwall is.

I recognise that regional identity is not as marked in some areas as it is in others. As the hon. Gentleman pointed out, in the south-west, regional identity is less well established than in many other areas. Common cause has tended to be made at what, in our administrative terms, is a sub-regional level.

Cornwall, sometimes with Devon, operates as an entity distinct from the five counties in the east of the region. However, people are increasingly recognising—as I will demonstrate, this applies to the relatively disparate south-west region too—that in order for a region to make its mark and put itself in a position to improve its regional performance, there has to be the right critical mass to achieve economies of scale. What we have recognised, and what our consultations show, is that distinct economic and social regions demand new forms of governance to serve their needs.

The hon. Gentleman spoke at length about the problems of Cornwall, and I know that the county has had more than its fair share of difficulties—a decline in its traditional industries, a GDP at only 69 per cent. of the European Union average, a heavy reliance on seasonal trade, low salaries and peripherality, to name but a few.

None the less, it is important for Cornwall to look forward. It is all too easy to dwell on problems. The county cannot change its geography or its peripherality—indeed, I suspect that it revels in that—and the national minimum wage will help with the problem of low pay.

I am aware of the excellent work being done by, for example, the Cornwall "In Pursuit of Excellence" initiative, to promote the county as a place where business can compete and win in world markets. Cornwall has successfully attracted inward investment by companies such as the American-owned Harman International, Contico Europe and Pall Corporation, which are all based in the Redruth and Camborne area. We need to broadcast the good news without dwelling on, or ignoring, the bad.

How many people are aware, for example, that a printer in Falmouth has secured a £6 million a year contract to produce all the national lottery pay slips and receipts—a contract that I suspect may go on for ever—or that Allen and Heath of Penryn exports 90 per cent. of its state-of-the-art audio-mixing consoles, or that Radiocode Clocks in Helston has secured major contracts to supply the United States navy with precision time frequency and synchronisation equipment, or that Pendennis shipyard, Falmouth, exports up to 80 per cent. of its luxury yachts, some to the middle east, the United States and Australia? Cornwall can build on such successes.

I am confident that there is a determination in the county to overcome the current economic problems, and the Government will play their part in helping that to happen. Special measures are in place to help Cornwall to overcome its economic problems. Most of the county has Department of Trade and Industry assisted area status, which can attract regional selective assistance—RSA—and west Cornwall has the highest, development area, status.

On 13 February we announced an RSA grant towards a £21 million capital investment that will create 300 new jobs in Cornwall. Including that project, we have, since April 1997, made 18 offers of RSA to companies in Cornwall. That will go towards capital investment of £35.5 million, which is forecast to create 777 new jobs and safeguard a further 86. Twelve of those projects are in west Cornwall, and will create more than 300 new jobs.

Regional selective assistance is helping Cornwall attract inward investment, and indigenous companies are being helped to invest and grow. Devon and Cornwall Development International is working hard to market Cornwall overseas. Regional partners have a key role to play in identifying and bringing forward strategic serviced sites and supporting infrastructure that will be attractive to inward investors. The regional supply office is working to develop local supply chains so that business is not lost to the region. English Partnerships is providing sites and premises needed by inward investors under its special "Factories First" programme in Cornwall and Devon.

The single regeneration budget challenge fund is supporting economic regeneration in Cornwall with £11.5 million in grant, which is expected to create many new jobs and businesses. We announced this week that we would give the West Cornwall employment programme £780,000 funding in SRB round 4—towards a £6.5 million total cost—which we hope will create some 1,000 additional employment opportunities for those most affected by the decline of traditional industries, particularly tin mining.

The whole of Cornwall is eligible for support from the European objective 5b south-west rural development programme, which, at £170 million, is the largest in the UK. The programme contributes to a south-west small business fund, co-financing English Partnerships' "Factories First" initiative and supporting rural training and information opportunities. Major projects include the private sector-led £8 million Bodmin business park, which will create 60 new business units and 477 jobs.

Mr. Andrew George: Will the hon. Lady deal with the definition of regions and objective 1 status? I appreciate her description of the successes, of which I am well aware, but how does she respond to the specific questions that I raised?

Angela Eagle: The hon. Gentleman should be patient, as I shall come to that. It is important that we remember the success stories as well as the difficulties, which can help inward investors to put matters into perspective.

A new European initiative starts this spring. More than £2 million will be available in the south-west objective 5b area to provide financial support to small and medium businesses.

I commend my hon. Friend the Member for Falmouth and Camborne (Ms Atherton) and other hon. Members from the area for their campaigning work to achieve objective 1 status for Cornwall. We recognise the very strong arguments that Cornwall is advancing for objective 1 status—with only 69 per cent. of European Union gross domestic product per head, Cornwall's needs are clear.

Cornwall will remain an objective 5b area until the current programmes expire at the end of 1999. The European Commission's detailed legislative proposals for the reform of the structural funds were published on 18 March, and will still need to be negotiated. Until there is agreement on final proposals—by the end of this year, I hope—it will not be possible to establish how individual areas may be affected. Hon. Members can be certain that the Government will seek to secure the best outcome for Cornwall and other parts of the UK.

We also await Eurostat's decision on whether to accept the Government statistical service's proposal that Cornwall should be a separate nomenclature of units of territorial statistics level 2 region—that is a funny way in which to say that Cornwall should qualify for objective 1 support.

The hon. Gentleman asked about regional boundaries. The boundaries of the Government offices are based on local authority boundaries, which reflect historical identities. We intend to build on the success of the Government offices—the boundaries of the new regional development agencies will be based on the Government office boundaries. There are sound policy reasons for that—the boundaries are well established for economic purposes, and we think that it makes sense to base RDAs on them. We believe that that is the most workable option, given the wide range of functions and responsibilities that RDAs will have.

In response to the hon. Gentleman's question, the average size of regions across Europe is a population of about 5 million. That seems to be about the right critical mass to achieve a proper strategic overview, successfully to attract investment and to promote healthy competitiveness. A region needs to be big enough to be effective and to allow the right economies of scale. That will ensure that the benefits that we expect from RDAs will be forthcoming.

We believe that each of England's regions should be in a position to reap the benefits of having an RDA. In the south-west, preliminary moves to establish a regional chamber are well advanced. Leaders of all 51 local authorities of the region agreed at a meeting on 27 February to the establishment of a chamber with representatives of about 20 of the social partners. At the same meeting, it was also agreed in principle to set up a regional local government association, possibly in the early summer.

Sub-groups have been set up to examine voting arrangements and the relative level and division of social partner representation, and I understand that, if all goes well, there will be a formal launch in June. Of course, I give all the partners in the south-west my whole-hearted support for their efforts and hope for a successful outcome to their deliberations.

[Angela Eagle]

We would not want to accede to a review of RDA boundaries at this stage. That would only fuel any disagreement and rivalries within regions, when preparing for RDAs should be the priority. The Bill itself has created a momentum, even in those regions without a strong traditional regional identity.

My hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning and I have visited all the regions on more than one occasion to hear at first hand the views of stakeholders on our proposals. There is overwhelming support for them, and every region in England is taking steps to form a regional chamber. Some, of course, already have one.

Some commentators have suggested that our proposals for RDA boundaries are too strict to allow co-operation to take place across or, indeed, within them. The hon. Member for St. Ives spoke about the importance of sub-regional arrangements and hinted that there would be oblivion for Cornwall in the RDA. I disagree with that. Sub-regional arrangements are not only possible but should be encouraged in the new structure. I could not agree more that such arrangements are important, and I assure the hon. Gentleman that there will be flexibility for the RDAs to respond to pressures from within, as well as, in some instances, across, RDA boundaries.

We are not devolving power to the regions only to dictate policy from the centre, but we expect attention to be paid to the internal sub-regional realities. Cornwall will be best served by a single powerful RDA for the south-west, providing the strong voice and clout that it needs, but with robust sub-regional arrangements.

The new regional development agency for the south-west will have an important role to play in helping to strengthen the local economy in the longer term. The introduction of RDAs is central to our work on improving competitiveness. The legislation is evolutionary, and we expect RDAs to make their own way and decide how best to deal with the regional and sub-regional realities.

To be successful, the RDA must have the confidence and co-operation of the whole region, but it must also represent and respond to local needs and interests. Its economic strategy will need to address regional economic disparities through regeneration as well as wealth creation, and it must reflect a proper balance between rural, urban and coastal needs.

An RDA provides the south-west, alongside other regions, with a major opportunity to bring direction and coherence to the task of improving regional competitiveness while recognising and respecting diversity. The region must grasp the opportunity, and that requires focusing whole-heartedly on developing partnership, integration and co-ordination of effort.

The responses to the RDA consultation from partners in the south-west show that they recognise the need to work together and improve the competitiveness of the less well-developed economies in the region. Now is the time for the region to put that into practice, through the RDA. I look forward to watching its progress.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at thirteen minutes to Twelve midnight.

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MADAM SPEAKER in the Chair]

NAREY INQUIRY

Ordered,

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, that she will be graciously pleased to give directions that there be laid before this House a Return of a Report of an inquiry into the escape of a prisoner from HM Prison Maze on 10th December and the shooting of a prisoner on 27th December 1997.—[Mr. Betts.]

Oral Answers to Questions

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

The President of the Board of Trade was asked—

Fuel Prices

1. Mr. Home Robertson: If she will make a statement on the availability and price of ultra-low-sulphur diesel at urban and rural retail sites. [35973]

The Minister for Science, Energy and Industry (Mr. John Battle): I expect the availability of ultra-low-sulphur diesel fuel to increase following the changes in the relative levels of excise duty between that fuel and conventional diesel that were announced in the Budget recently. The price at which the product is sold is a matter for the retailers.

Mr. Home Robertson: The new incentive in the Budget for drivers to use ultra-low-sulphur diesel fuel should have been good news. Is my hon. Friend aware that there was less rejoicing in my constituency than there might have been because the fuel is not available for sale anywhere in East Lothian? I understand that virtually all of it is imported and that very little gets as far as Scotland. Will my hon. Friend take the oil companies firmly by the throat at the earliest opportunity and tell them to stop discriminating against consumers in rural areas in general, and Scotland in particular, and to ensure that this excellent product is available on forecourts throughout the country?

Mr. Battle: I welcome my hon. Friend's question. Ultra-low-sulphur diesel is known as city diesel fuel and is available from supermarkets—the main retailers at the moment—in towns and cities. I accept what my hon. Friend says about rural areas. If the differential is not a sufficient incentive to produce a positive bias in favour of providing the fuel, I shall push the matter further. I know that the Scottish Office recently undertook a study of rural petrol stations, and the report is expected in May. Let us hope that that is another means of taking the measure forward in Scotland as well, since it will have a positive environmental impact.

Low Pay Commission

3. Mr. Levitt: When she last met the chairman of the Low Pay Commission. [35975]

The Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry (Mr. Ian McCartney): My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade last met Professor George Bain, chairman of the Low Pay Commission, on 11 February 1998.

Mr. Levitt: Is my hon. Friend aware that, in my constituency, there are 4,500 families on family credit, and that throughout the east midlands, no fewer than 87,000 people are working for a rate of £2.50 an hour or less? Is he further aware that the national minimum wage will work to improve the welfare of those families? Does he agree that any softening of the line on the national minimum wage from the Leader of the Opposition—even if not from the shadow Secretary of State, the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood)—is welcome, even though, coming from the party which abolished the wages councils, it will be regarded with incredulity?

Mr. McCartney: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. One of the main reasons why the activities of the Low Pay Commission are so welcome is that they give us an opportunity to implement what is a major manifesto promise at an early stage. It is interesting that, since the weekend, the former Secretary of State for Wales, the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood), has remained silent for once. He has not yet given a commitment to support his right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition by ditching his opposition to the minimum wage and accepting that now, without any doubt, the policy is overwhelmingly supported throughout Britain—and seemingly also within the Conservative party.

Mr. Fabricant: Before the Minister begins his normal high-pitched tirade, may I say that I have always felt that a minimum wage is no bad thing in terms of protecting the least able in our society? Why does he not accept the model which exists in the United States, about which the Prime Minister has repeatedly spoken with much affection? In the United States of America, the national minimum wage varies by region, and people are exempt on grounds of youth or if they work in certain industries, such as tourism. What does the chairman of the Low Pay Commission have to say about what the minimum wage should be in Northern Ireland, as compared with the south-east of the United Kingdom?

Mr. McCartney: I will do a deal with the hon. Gentleman: if he does not mention my accent, I will not mention his hair.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: It's not his hair.

Mr. McCartney: My hon. Friend says from a sedentary position, "It's not his hair," but I would not be so cruel as to suggest that. The hon. Gentleman is trying hard to defend the indefensible, but the British people want the national minimum wage to meet the needs of the low paid. That is why the Low Pay Commission will make its recommendations by the end of May and why, soon afterwards, the Government will implement the national minimum wage.

Mr. Boswell: Every time Conservative Members identified a difficulty with the minimum wage in Committee, the Minister of State referred the matter to the Low Pay Commission. Will he now defer consideration of the Bill in Committee in another place until the Low Pay Commission has reported next month, when it will be clear to everyone whether, as usual, he has been rolled over and has had to accept a compromise figure of, for example, £3.60 per hour?

Mr. McCartney: I am a difficult person to roll over—although once I start rolling, it is hard to stop me. The answer to the hon. Gentleman's question is no. We have made it clear that, in implementing the Low Pay Commission's recommendations, we will return to the House with secondary legislation, which will be subject to the affirmative resolution procedure—at each stage, the House can debate and take a view on implementation of the minimum wage.

Competitiveness

5. Jacqui Smith: If she will make a statement on the impact of the Chancellor's Budget measures on the competitiveness of British companies. [35977]

The President of the Board of Trade and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Mrs. Margaret Beckett): The Budget will have a positive impact on the competitiveness of British companies. Business needs economic stability, which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor made a key theme of his Budget statement. The Budget also contained a number of practical measures to promote competitiveness through long-term investment and enterprise, such as further cuts in corporation tax rates, the abolition of advance corporation tax and the reform of capital gains tax. The Budget will also encourage work and create a fairer society.

Jacqui Smith: I recognise the challenges that British business faces as a result of the high value of the pound, but does my right hon. Friend agree that the clear differences between the Government and an opportunistic and inconsistent Opposition are shown in their respective approaches to the issue? The Opposition are proposing short-term panic measures, with little economic rationale or consistency, whereas the Government have, in the Budget, reduced corporate tax, reformed the tax system and cut regulatory burdens, all of which will improve the long-term competitiveness and success of British business.

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend is entirely right. She identifies a major theme of the Chancellor's approach and of the policies that he has already implemented. Unlike the Conservative party, we do not merely talk about the long-term national interest; we act to secure it.

Mr. Breed: There has been much concentration on the problems that exporting companies face as a result of the current value of the pound, but have the Government considered the problems of companies that are competing against imported products, which are now obviously much cheaper? Such companies find themselves at an extreme disadvantage.

Mrs. Beckett: We take account of all aspects of the impact of the level of sterling. The hon. Gentleman will know that we believe that we should strive to make the exchange rate not only stable but competitive. He will also be aware that it is not easy in the short term for Governments to influence these things. It is right, however, to take measures to create long-term stability, and that is what we are doing.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: Will my right hon. Friend initiate discussions not only in her Department and with the Chancellor, but in Cabinet, about the strength of sterling, which has become Britain's primary economic problem? Does she recall that between 1979 and 1981, when the pound became a petrol currency, 2 million jobs in manufacturing industry were lost as a result of its overvaluation? Moreover, between 1989 and 1992, the pound was valued in the exchange rate mechanism at DM2.95, which was not competitive and produced a second recession. Now that the pound is valued at DM3, Britain is again not competitive. That is a vital problem—we cannot achieve economic stability when sterling is at this level.

Mrs. Beckett: I understand my hon. Friend's concern, and he is entirely right to draw attention to the Conservative party's record. Manufacturing output has risen, on the latest figures, despite the difficulties that he identifies.

Mr. Redwood: Has the President of the Board of Trade now read the Budget documentation, which shows that the corporation tax changes will cost British business £4.6 billion more—not a cut, but an increase—over the lifetime of this Parliament? Has she seen that the national insurance changes mean a big increase in the cost of employing anyone other than those on low pay? Does she not realise that that is taxation by stealth, and taxation of jobs? Does she not see that it is taking money away from companies that desperately need it for research and development and for investment for more jobs at a time of unprecedented pressure on manufacturing?

Mrs. Beckett: I take the right hon. Gentleman's point about companies needing money for investment and research, which is why the Government are taking steps to give them incentives to support both investment and research and development, which is more than the previous Government did.

The right hon. Gentleman asked whether I had looked at the Red Book and the figures for the changes in corporation tax over the lifetime of this Parliament. He must be well aware that, while the changes in corporation tax will have an impact in the short term, in the long term there will be a substantial reduction in payments of corporation tax, of the order—from memory—of £2 billion a year. That is why the Budget's overall impact has been so warmly welcomed by business.

Mr. Sheerman: My right hon. Friend will know how widely British businesses, and especially those who are engaged in innovation and investment with universities, have welcomed many of the measures in the Budget. Will she continue the pressure from her Department to get a deal similar to the overseas development deal, whereby if individuals or companies put money into university research they get a partnership, in the form of a tax bonus or some tax back, that will encourage the vital growth of innovation that links private sector business with our excellent university research capacity?

Mrs. Beckett: I know that my hon. Friend plays a huge role in promoting British manufacturing and research and development. He will be aware of the many steps that the Government are taking to encourage industry, and people in the science and engineering base in universities and beyond, to work together, including the announcement of the university challenge programme in the Budget. I entirely share the view that that is important and will promote Britain's long-term competitiveness. I assure him that we shall continue to act in that way.

6. Mr. Baldry: What assessment she has made of the impact of the value of sterling on the competitiveness of United Kingdom exports. [35978]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government understand the difficulties that exporters face as a result of the level of sterling, but competitiveness depends on a range of factors. The Budget introduced several measures to create a tax system that promotes entrepreneurship and long-term investment. My Department is working in partnership with business to address other issues central to the competitiveness of British industry.

Mr. Baldry: Is the President of the Board of Trade aware that many hon. Members will have received a briefing today from the aluminium industry, representing companies such as Alcan in Banbury, which says:

"Many exporting companies are now at or beyond the point of zero margin, a situation compounded by the fact that some traditional Far East markets have disappeared completely. Increases in interest rates continue to exacerbate the situation"?

It is hardly surprising that yesterday's Financial Times found that the west midlands is a heartland on the brink of recession. The Birmingham chamber of commerce reports that exports from Birmingham companies are still at "dangerously low levels". [HON. MEMBERS: "Reading."] I am surprised that Labour Members—

Madam Speaker: Order. The latest report from the Modernisation Committee allows hon. Members to quote, so the hon. Gentleman is perfectly in order.

Mr. Baldry: I am sorry that Labour Members are so apathetic about what is happening in Birmingham and what its chamber of commerce reports: that while the pound stays so strong, exporting companies in Birmingham and the west midlands will remain on the brink of recession. What do the Government intend to do to ensure that this country is not driven into recession because of the Chancellor's unwillingness to take any action on the level of the pound?

Mrs. Beckett: I listened with care to the hon. Gentleman and, of course, I have considerable contacts, though I have not seen the Alcan report to which he referred. Of course we understand the concerns expressed in many parts of the country, although, as I pointed out, manufacturing output has just risen again. It is interesting that he and other Conservative Members express such concern about the level of sterling and its impact on manufacturers. Where was he when, under the previous Government, sterling reached levels that it has not yet reached today when the then Chancellor was shadowing the deutschmark? Where was he when interest rates rose to 15 per cent.? Clearly, he was not on the Opposition Benches.

Mr. Skinner: I wonder whether we can get to know exactly what the Tory policy is on the pound. They seem to be gradually coming round to the view that they want a weak pound. I would like to know from my right hon. Friend what are the values of a weak pound. The Tories devalued after black Wednesday, 16 September 1992, when they lost £10 billion in an afternoon, and never went near a betting shop. The Chancellor of the Exchequer sent for a radio to find out what was happening outside on the stock exchange. The Prime Minister locked himself in the lavatory. I do not want to go back to those days. Will my right hon. Friend say what are the values of a weak, devalued, Tory pound?

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend makes some powerful points with his customary verve. I feel entirely unable to answer on behalf of the Conservative party. We gave the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) the opportunity in a debate only a few days ago to say what the Conservatives' policy was and what they proposed should happen. I had the distinct impression, from what he did not say, that their policy was to put up taxes, which he is perhaps unwilling to admit. We are well aware that the Conservative party had no answer for these issues in government any more than it has in opposition. As I am sure my hon. Friend knows, 70 per cent. of the increase in the value of sterling, about which Conservative Members now complain, took place under their Government before the general election.

Sir Peter Tapsell: As a Member who at the time publicly opposed the policy of shadowing the deutschmark and joining the exchange rate mechanism, may I ask the right hon. Lady if she would have a quiet word with her esteemed colleague the Chancellor of the Exchequer and explain to him, as I tried to do in the early days of this Parliament, that if control of fiscal policy is separated from that of monetary policy by putting fiscal policy under elected politicians and monetary policy under appointees, whether economists or bankers, the invariable and inevitable result must be higher interest rates and lower taxes than would otherwise be the case? The ultimate price for that is paid in manufacturing and unemployment levels.

Mrs. Beckett: I respect the hon. Gentleman's record in drawing those concerns to the attention of his colleagues, but he talked of record interest rate levels. We are not remotely near the levels—

Sir Peter Tapsell: Not yet.

Mrs. Beckett: Not yet? We are at less than half the level of interest rates under the previous Government.

On whether such a course inevitably leads to lower taxes, I have too much respect for the hon. Gentleman's ability and experience not to know that he is perfectly aware that fiscal measures can encompass more than taxation. Indeed, I recall that, over many years, he has called for fiscal measures to tighten public expenditure. I believe that not even he is complaining about the tightness of public expenditure or the management of the fiscal stance under this Government.

Mr. Winnick: The value of the pound is rather high and is undoubtedly causing difficulties, not least in the west midlands, and my right hon. Friend will no doubt take that very much into consideration, but do the Government need any lectures from the Conservative party, during whose 18 years in office 2.5 million manufacturing jobs were lost, not least in the west midlands? Surely they are the last people to lecture us on job losses.

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend is right. The difficulties in the west midlands under the previous Government, of which he rightly reminds us, arose as a result of deliberate Government policy in seeking to drive up the level of sterling and keep it high. We saw exchange rates, interest rates and job losses then that we are not seeing today.

Mr. Redwood: The Government tell us that they are creating a stable and competitive exchange rate. [HON. MEMBERS: "What's your policy?"] I will tell hon. Members our policy: promote savings, do not tax them. That is what the Government need to do at the moment. Yet so far under the Labour Government sterling has risen by 11 per cent. against the deutschmark and by more against other important European and Asian currencies. The pound is clearly uncompetitive at those levels, as any industrialist will tell the right hon Lady. So will she tell us what today's policy is? Is it to make the pound stable at those uncompetitive levels or does she wish to make it competitive by getting it down from those levels? How does she intend to do either? The truth is that it is out of control and the Government are destroying manufacturing as a result.

Mrs. Beckett: I find it extraordinary that the right hon. Gentleman has the gall to carry on like that when he knows perfectly well that he was a member of a Government who drove interest rates to levels twice those that we see now and saw sterling, as a deliberate act of Government policy, at levels above those that we see now. Yes, our policy is to promote long-term stability and to have in that long term a stable but competitive pound. Long-term interest rates, as a result of what the Government are doing, are lower than short-term interest rates. That is a clear sign that we are going in the right direction. The record of the Conservative party on these matters is absolutely catastrophic and it is extraordinary that it has the gall to raise it.

Small and Medium-sized Companies

7. Mr. Darvill: What measures her Department has taken to encourage small and medium-sized companies to expand their export business. [35979]

The Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry (Mrs. Barbara Roche): My noble Friend the Minister for Trade, the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office—my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett)—and I launched, on 25 March, a new package of measures to help smaller companies to export. These included export explorer, aimed at helping new and inexperienced exporters to break into European markets, and a new internet-based service for matching overseas customers with British suppliers.

Mr. Darvill: Does my hon. Friend agree that those measures show that her Department is working in partnership with business to influence competitiveness, unlike the previous Government, who constantly failed to listen to business and rode roughshod over its concerns?

Mrs. Roche: Yes, of course I agree with my hon. Friend. I thank him for his remarks. We wanted to add to the many excellent small and medium-sized firms that have a good export record new firms which could benefit from some targeted assistance. The proposals have gone down extremely well. We are determined to pursue them. We believe that they will add to the competitiveness of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Given that small and medium-sized companies are sensitive to movements in the pound, does the Minister recognise that in fact Governments do have some influence on the pound—first by giving a guide to the market that there is a measured timetable for entry into the single currency and, secondly, by indicating that if there is a single monetary policy, whether within the United Kingdom or within the European Union, greater emphasis needs to be put on management of the fiscal balance, especially incentives to save? That is available to Her Majesty's Government.

Mrs. Roche: I note what the hon. Gentleman has to say. Of course, he was a Minister—indeed, a Minister at the Department of Trade and Industry—in the previous Government. He was equally responsible for the record of the previous Government, who went from boom to bust and then back again. What the hon. Gentleman has just espoused is clearly not the position of his Front-Bench colleagues. That is presumably why he left the Front-Bench team. May I again say, as my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has said, that we are planning for the long term. What small firms want to know above all is where they will be not only tomorrow but in the next six months. That is what his Government failed to do and we are determined to deliver it.

Mr. Pike: Do not small and medium-sized firms increasingly want to be involved in the export business and to employ more people? One of their worries is that, as a result of the previous Government's record, we are not able to go into the single European currency. They are worried about what will happen when the euro is introduced and we are not able fully to influence exchange rates because we are outside it.

Mrs. Roche: My hon. Friend makes some good points. The previous Government's astonishing lack of preparation let down British businesses. This Administration have gone in, picked up the pieces, and made sure that we put practical measures in place. What is important is that we concentrate on our small and medium enterprises and provide them with a targeted focus. It was the Conservatives' failure on small businesses that drove them to vote for this Government last May.

Mrs. Gillan: The Minister needs to face reality and understand that even her best-intended efforts are failing, because the Government are making it increasingly difficult for small firms to expand their exports. Has she had time to look at the NatWest quarterly survey, which shows that more small firms expect to cut employment in the first quarter of 1998 than to increase it? Has she read this week's Office World survey, which shows that the performance of small firms has slowed at a record rate during the last quarter; that small firms have experienced a reduction in turnover on a scale not seen since the survey began in 1994; that manufacturing is down by 15 per cent.; that 60 per cent. of companies report no growth or a decline in orders; and that Labour's support has fallen to its lowest level since November 1994? Is it not obvious that the honeymoon between small businesses and the Labour party is now over and that the Government are proving disastrous for small businesses?

Mrs. Roche: I noticed that, in the list of purported facts the hon. Lady quotes, she did not mention the Office World survey figure that showed that the party that enjoyed the greatest support among small businesses was the Labour party—she seems to have forgotten that. Can that be the reason why, not so long ago, the hon. Lady told The Sunday Times that the Conservative party had lost the small business vote and that, because the Conservatives had got it wrong last time, people would be seeing few policies from her? The Labour party is absolutely determined to help small and medium businesses, which is why we have taken all the measures we have.

National Minimum Wage

8. Mr. Drew: If she will make a statement on progress towards implementing a national minimum wage. [35980]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are making excellent progress towards introducing a statutory national minimum wage for the first time in the United Kingdom during this Session of Parliament. The National Minimum Wage Bill had its Second Reading in another place on Monday 23 March.

Mr. Drew: I thank my hon. Friend for that statement. Does he accept that the national minimum wage is widely welcomed in Stroud, especially by those decent businesses that aim to pay a fair wage, in marked contrast to those rogue employers who exploit their employees? Does he also accept that those decent businesses find their natural home in the Labour party, unlike those rogues and exploiters who gain solace only in the Conservative party?

Mr. McCartney: I thank my hon. Friend for those comments and congratulate him and my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Levitt), who have campaigned long and hard for the introduction of a national minimum wage. In the south-west, 90,000 people earn less than £2.50; and in the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew), 1,300 families are so poor at the end of the week because of low pay that they have to rely on in-work benefits to survive. That is why at the last election the British people, in droves, supported the Labour party pledge to introduce, as a matter of urgency, a national minimum wage. I repeat the question asked of the Conservative Front Benchers: why have they not, in connection with any of the questions asked about low pay, come to the Dispatch Box and supported their own leader's decision to do a U-turn and support the national minimum wage?

Mr. Prior: Does the Minister expect the national minimum wage to increase jobs or reduce them?

Mr. McCartney: The national minimum wage, set at a proper level, will be a job creator, not a job loser. During the period in which the national minimum wage was introduced and uprated, the United States has created more than 11 million new jobs. There is no evidence whatever that an appropriately set minimum wage will cost jobs, but it will give low-paid workers an opportunity to purchase goods and services that they cannot currently afford. Does the hon. Gentleman know of any country in the world where a national minimum wage for hairdressers has stopped that country's people having a haircut? It is absolute nonsense to suggest that people will lose out by the introduction of a national minimum wage.

Industrial Relations

11. Barbara Follett: What steps her Department is taking to promote co-operation between employers and employees in the workplace. [35983]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are committed to decent, minimum standards of employment for all, underpinned by partnership at work. That is the best route to competitiveness.

Barbara Follett: I thank the Minister for that reply. Does he agree that recent initiatives by large employers such as British Aerospace and Tesco to improve workplace co-operation show that the present Government, unlike the Conservative party, are in touch with the needs of British business?

Mr. McCartney: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. I join her in congratulating businesses on those initiatives. I also congratulate my hon. Friend because I understand that, this morning, her daughter Kim had a baby girl of 6 lb 9 oz. As a grandfather, I should like to congratulate my hon. Friend, and I shall send her a bottle of best Californian red, called Redwood. It is very drinkable, unlike the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood), who is not very eatable.

The Government are absolutely committed to the principles and concepts of partnership in the workplace. Employees deserve to be treated fairly in the workplace, whether or not they are in a union. Joint efforts between management and employees to develop the business are the best way forward for British industry. That is why, overwhelmingly, in Britain, good business thrives where businesses treat their staff appropriately. I add as a footnote that 88 per cent. of top companies in Britain recognise trade unions.

Mr. Chidgey: In the context of the Minister's last remark, does he recall the Labour party manifesto pledge that trade union recognition would be a legal right where a majority of the relevant work force voted in favour? I am sure that the whole House would be grateful if he would take the opportunity to define for us what he means by "relevant".

Mr. McCartney: We gave a commitment at the general election, and we will honour it. Discussions taking place between the Trades Union Congress and the Confederation of British Industry will produce, in the first half of this year, a White Paper, leading to legislation to introduce recognition in the workplace. That measure will be a major achievement in co-operation between both sides of industry.

I repeat that the purpose of the Government's drive for fairness and minimum standards in the workplace is to introduce a new culture in Britain: a culture of partnership. The "Fairness at Work" White Paper will be a major component in driving that policy.

Mr. O'Neill: Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the surest ways of ending co-operation and partnership is to facilitate derecognition of trade unions? Therefore, will he do all that he can in the forthcoming weeks to ensure that firms with very few employees will still be able to enjoy the full fruits of trade union membership?

Mr. McCartney: The Government's policy is clear. We want to ensure that, in the workplace, individuals have the right, not only to join a union, but to enjoy the opportunities for that union to represent them in the workplace. The "Fairness at Work" White Paper will provide an opportunity to make it clear how that fits into the Government's strategy and policy on trade unions. It is also true that we want to encourage, throughout industry, partnership arrangements that bring workers, trade unions and employers together, to develop their enterprise and make it successful. My hon. Friend can rest assured, therefore, that the Government support and promote the interests of people in the workplace, and the idea that those interests should be represented by trade unions.

Mr. St. Aubyn: Given that, this week, on a visit to an employment centre in Penryn in Cornwall, the Education and Employment Select Committee found that there were virtually no jobs on offer at a rate of more than £3.50 an hour, does the Minister accept that, unless the minimum wage is set at a much lower figure than that, in areas such as Cornwall there will not be so many employees in the workplace?

Mr. McCartney: There is another hon. Member who disagrees with his leader. The hon. Gentleman wants to introduce wage cuts in the workplace. The Low Pay Commission has visited every region in the United Kingdom—Scotland, Northern Ireland, Wales and the south-west—has taken evidence and, at the end of May, will set out its recommendations. Hon. Members can rest assured that, when the commission produces those recommendations, I believe that British employers will accept them overwhelmingly and will move quickly to implement a successful national minimum wage.

Research and Development

12. Mr. Jim Cunningham: If she will make a statement on her Department's policy towards encouraging research and development in British companies. [35984]

Mr. Battle: The Government recognise, and publicly acknowledge, the importance of encouraging research and development as an absolutely vital component of innovation and improved competitiveness.

Mr. Cunningham: What responses has my hon. Friend received, first, from industry and, secondly, from universities regarding research and development? The previous Government decimated the west midlands. Several hon. Members led deputations to former Tory Ministers to discuss that matter, but we received no response. As a result, some highly paid engineers in the west midlands became shelf-stackers at Sainsbury's.

Mr. Battle: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that question. From day one, we have worked to strengthen investment in United Kingdom research and development and to build a partnership with industry and academia. We have invested in measures such as the joint research equipment initiative. We have pushed forward the foresight link awards, and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced the university challenge in the Budget. Those measures have been welcomed by industry and by universities as a way of turning the corner and reversing the cuts in research and development that were made by the previous Administration.

Mr. Gibb: How does the Minister believe that raising the employers' national insurance contribution rate from 10 per cent. to 12.2 per cent., as announced in the Budget, will help companies that are engaged in research and development?

Mr. Battle: I am amazed by Opposition Members: they suffer from permanent amnesia. The Conservative Government cut research and development. Their figures show that there was a 6 per cent. reduction in Government spending on R and D and a 3 per cent. reduction in business spending on R and D under the previous Administration. Our measures will strengthen industry. We will encourage business to look to the longer term and to invest in research as a means of achieving a long-term future. Our fiscal measures go some way to underpinning that, which is why they were warmly welcomed.

Domestic Accidents

13. Audrey Wise: What steps she is taking to ensure that publicity is given to the dangers to pre-school children of burns and scalds in the kitchen. [35985]

The Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Nigel Griffiths): On 24 February, the Department of Trade and Industry launched its safety awareness campaign to alert parents to the hazard of burns and scalds in the home. Some 3,500 pre-school children are injured and end up in hospital every year as a result of such accidents. The campaign involved distributing 2 million safety leaflets and screening four television advertisements to illustrate the hazards.

Audrey Wise: I thank my hon. Friend for launching that campaign. I know that he shares my concern about the safety of small children. He is undoubtedly aware that some of the nastiest accidents occur when small children pull pans off cookers. Is my hon. Friend also aware that it is possible to buy pan guards to stop that happening? However, those pan guards are sold as separate add-ons of which most people are totally unaware. Will my hon. Friend ask manufacturers to include integral pan guards in new cooker designs or attempt to get pan guards accepted as a British standard? Does he agree that manufacturers should accept more responsibility for the safety of their products?

Mr. Griffiths: The House, and indeed the country, will be grateful to my hon. Friend for highlighting that specific problem and drawing it to the attention of parents, grandparents and others who are responsible for children in the kitchen. I shall certainly ensure that my hon. Friend's concerns are reflected in the Government's policy and are communicated firmly to all those responsible for manufacturing and distributing cookers.

Dr. Julian Lewis: Does the Minister accept that, if he spent a little less time writing questions for his hon. Friends to ask, he might be able to write better answers for himself?

Mr. Griffiths: I would have found the hon. Gentleman much more convincing if I had not seen the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) pass him a note at the beginning of Question Time prompting him to ask that ridiculous question.

Mrs. Gilroy: Some of the nastiest burns arise from firework accidents. Has my hon. Friend any plans to build on the highly effective campaign—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sorry—we have not moved to the bonfire; we are still in the kitchen.

Innovation

15. Mr. Purchase: If she will make a statement on her Department's policy towards encouraging innovation in British companies. [35987]

Mr. Battle: Innovation is the key to competitiveness, and businesses need to innovate if they are to succeed.

Mr. Purchase: Does my hon. Friend agree that, despite the previous Administration's wilful neglect of our science base, we none the less continue with important work in the scientific field? Does he also agree that British firms have traditionally been rather poor at innovation, with good ideas being sold abroad in order to get the innovation on to the market? Will he assure the House that much of the red tape introduced by the Conservatives for grant qualification purposes will be swept away by the Government, in order to give an incentive to our firms to get the products that we so splendidly discover and develop on to the market in good time?

Mr. Battle: My hon. Friend has for all his years in the House championed the cause of manufacturing and engineering. Not only will we remove barriers; we will positively promote innovation. That is why we are promoting the millennium products initiative and the foresight link initiative. Across the road in Horseguards parade there is an exhibition, Powerhouse::UK, which sets out the innovative products and processes that will lead us through to the 21st century. There are innovations in engineering, biotechnology and communications. It is a showhouse of what can be achieved with positive support.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Clearly, the Government are strongly of the view that innovation and research and development are essential to the future success and competitiveness of British manufacturing industry. Is it not true, however, that to innovate and to undertake research and development requires money? Frequently, manufacturing industry needs to borrow money to undertake innovation, research and development. Currently, the level of interest rates in the United Kingdom is not particularly helpful to the future success of manufacturing industry or its competitiveness. What measures can the Board of Trade take to mitigate the effects of the high level of interest rates, to ensure that what the House wants—the success of manufacturing industry—can be fully achieved?

Mr. Battle: The hon. Gentleman, too, has a record of campaigning for manufacturing industry. Of course the interest rates are worrying. However, the information is patchy. A report by the Chartered Institute of Purchasing and Supply this morning states that manufacturers have continued to defy the ravages of a strong pound, so it is not true that all is lost. We will continue to promote innovation and underpin it with fiscal measures.

The consultation document "Innovating for the future—investing in research and development innovation" is of paramount importance to find new partnerships and new ways to ensure that companies invest in the longer term. Some companies such as pharmaceuticals do, but we have a long way to go with many other companies to ensure that they move forward into the 21st century.

Mr. Reed: Does my hon. Friend agree that British innovation has too often led to manufacturing success for other countries? I thank him and his Front-Bench colleagues who have visited Loughborough university in recent months. I issue an invitation to those who have not yet made it to Loughborough to see the excellent innovation work that is going on. Will my hon. Friend join me in congratulating our right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in making available £50 million-worth of innovation money, which I know from my discussions with Loughborough university was greatly welcomed? It will lead to more job creation from small innovative ideas that have worldwide links. Two companies that Ministers have already visited in my constituency have created 150 jobs from two simple ideas.

That is how we shall create jobs for this country. I hope that my hon. Friend will join me again in a visit to Loughborough university.

Mr. Battle: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, and I welcome his invitation. It is good to hear that the university challenge scheme and other such measures are already working through. The initiatives that we are taking will have a positive effect.

Mr. Stunell: Does the Minister recognise that innovation is difficult for companies that face the random effects of the anti-dumping textile levy? A company in my constituency, Strines Textiles, is facing 100 job losses, not innovation, as a result of the levy. Will the Minister give an assurance that the Government will be strongly behind Strines Textiles' fight to get this temporary levy lifted as soon as possible so as to protect jobs in my constituency?

Mr. Battle: We fought hard and consistently on the measure to which the hon. Gentleman refers and we shall continue to do so to ensure that our industries are not unfairly priced out of the market. We have a consistent line on these matters. We have registered our objections and we shall continue to do so where unfair trading occurs.

Consumer Credit

16. Dr. Vis: What plans she has to consult consumer ' groups about reforms to consumer credit legislation. [35988]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I issued consultation documents in February and March to, among others, the National Consumer Council, the Consumers Association and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Dr. Vis: I thank my hon. Friend for that answer. Is he aware that millions of people throughout the country are grateful to the Government for the work that they are doing on consumer protection after 18 years of virtual absence of such protection? Will my hon. Friend comment on what he might have in mind concerning mortgages, especially with regard to non-status lenders?

Mr. Griffiths: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his support for the policies that we are pursuing. As for non-status lenders, we are increasing the financial limits that are governed by the Consumer Credit Act 1974 from £15,000 to £25,000 to ensure that many more people are offered the protection of the Act, including those who may be subject to the worst mis-selling practices of the mortgage companies at the lower end of the market.

Mr. Hawkins: The Minister is aware from work that we did together during the previous Parliament on a cross-party campaign of my long-standing involvement in consumer credit issues. Will he confirm that in the reforms that he is talking about there will be a concentration on promoting best practice, and that the Government will ensure that praise is given to those major financial institutions that have managed to promote the use of plain English in documents for consumers while staying within the sometimes necessarily complex provisions of consumer credit legislation?

Mr. Griffiths: I am obviously grateful for all the support that we have for plain English and for ensuring that unfair contracts are not allowed to be foisted on consumers. I welcome the action that the Office of Fair Trading took specifically on unfair contracts in respect of one company that was peddling mortgages in a way that was found not to meet the highest standards that the House would expect.

EU Presidency

17. Mr. Geraint Davies: If she will make a statement on the priority her Department attaches to promoting competitiveness in Europe during the British presidency of the European Union. [35989]

Mrs. Beckett: European competitiveness is a key DTI priority for the UK presidency, just as it is in our policies within the UK. On 11 March, I addressed a debate in the European Parliament on this issue, and next month, when I chair the Industry Council, we shall be having the first full debate on European competitiveness, including how industry and Government can work together. A particularly important feature of our approach to competitiveness is the improvement and completion of the single market.

Mr. Davies: Does my right hon. Friend agree that exchange rates largely link to external factors in Europe, Asia and Japan, and that the proportion of exporters that are showing a dip in sales is the same as the proportion that are showing lower input costs in terms of raw materials? Does my right hon. Friend agree that about a third of manufacturers serving the domestic market are in boom? Does she agree also that exporters would be best advised to focus on higher productivity and better product differentiation, and then to focus on the home market? In no circumstances should we expose the wider economy to the risk of inflation because of the short-term pain of some exporters.

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend is entirely right to identify that the overall position is much more complicated than the Conservatives seek to pretend. He is also right that our consistent advice to manufacturers and others has been that Britain's long-term competitiveness lies in the pursuit of quality and high added value rather than in simply attempting to compete on price. On all these issues our message has been consistent, and it has been of assistance to people in dealing with the present circumstances with the level of sterling.

Mr. Garnier: What does the President of the Board of Trade consider to be the pound's optimum level against the deutschmark to promote competitiveness?

Mrs. Beckett: I do not think that anyone would attempt to answer such a theoretical question. I simply remind the hon. and learned Gentleman that neither sterling nor interest rates are yet at the level that they reached under the previous Government, which was the result of a deliberate act of policy.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: May I ask my right hon. Friend a question about competitiveness among Europe's airline operators? Can she give an assurance that British Airways, with its new cut-price operation, will not be allowed to drive existing cut-price airline operators out of business? Clearly, that would not be in the public interest.

Mrs. Beckett: I am always cautious about being drawn into comment on competition issues in the House. The Government have not only advocated and pursued a policy of strong and fair competition but will continue to do so.

Madam Speaker: Sir Teddy Taylor.

Sir Teddy Taylor: Does the Minister agree—

Madam Speaker: Sir Teddy, I am calling you for Question 18.

Sir Teddy Taylor: It is Question 17.

Madam Speaker: You have Question 18. Either you want to put it or you do not.

Sir Teddy Taylor: Question 18. Yes, that is me.

EU Structural Funds

18. Sir Teddy Taylor: What assessment she has made of the impact on United Kingdom industry of the changes in European Union structural funds being proposed by the Commission. [35991]

Mrs. Roche: The Commission's proposals for the structural funds and for other structural and cohesion policies for the years 2000 to 2006 were published on 18 March.

The Commission has not published its detailed financial plans for individual member states. In any event, structural funds are designed for the purpose of regional regeneration. It will be difficult to assess the specific impact of any changes on industry.

Sir Teddy Taylor: In thanking the Minister—[Interruption.]

I had an important question on Question 17, which I was unable to ask.

Does the Minister accept that, as the average family in Britain—[Interruption.] This is not funny—[Interruption.] It is not. Does the Minister accept that, as the average family in Britain—whether poor or rich; whether Conservative, Labour or Liberal Democrat—is paying £5 a week at present towards our net contribution to the EEC, if these changes go ahead, on top of the changes in regional funding, which are damaging to Scotland and many other places, we will have to pay even more? Will she try hard to ensure that the travel-to-work criteria are changed, so that pockets of unemployment in particular areas are not disregarded for grant purposes? Will she accept that the cost of the EEC to jobs and to people in Britain is excessive?

Mrs. Roche: As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, travel-to-work areas are a matter for state aid and assisted area status, not structural funds. He will be glad to hear that we are concerned, as are all member states, to contain the overall costs of structural funds, and that is what we aim to do with the reforms. However, we are disappointed with the draft regulations that have been published by the Commission. Our aim is to have an outcome that is affordable, durable, simpler and more efficient. We are working very hard indeed for an outcome that is fair to the United Kingdom and all its regions.

Mr. McCabe: Is not it true that our negotiations have already secured transitional arrangements until 2004? Does my hon. Friend agree that we should treat with scepticism the views of anyone who still believes, as the hon. Member for Rochford and Southend, East (Sir T. Taylor) does, that joining the Community was a great disaster, and that the Referendum party could really zoom and be very significant indeed?

Mrs. Roche: I agree with my hon. Friend. Our case on transitional periods has already met with some success, but we also want to ensure that those transitional periods are the same length as for objective 1, and we are working hard to achieve that. The Government recognise that our future lies in Europe, our trade is done there, and it is important to the British public and British businesses that we say that and say it loudly.

Miss McIntosh: Will the Minister assure the House today that, in the regional regeneration of which she spoke, rural areas will not lose out to urban areas, particularly in an area such as Yorkshire and Humberside where South Yorkshire is clearly more densely populated than North Yorkshire, but North Yorkshire also deserves a fair whack of the money?

Mrs. Roche: I well understand the hon. Lady's interest and experience in these matters. We are working hard with everyone and we have also had extensive discussions with local authorities. We want the United Kingdom to be represented by a united voice. We want outcomes which lead to flexibility, but also to a proper balance between urban and rural areas. That is essential.

Maze Prison (Narey Inquiry)

3.30 pm

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Marjorie Mowlam): With permission, Madam Speaker, I should like to make a statement on the report of the Narey inquiry into incidents at the Maze prison.

On 10 December, Provisional IRA prisoner Liam Averill escaped from the Maze prison. On the following day, we commissioned an independent inquiry to be undertaken by Martin Narey, the director of regimes in the Prison Service for England and Wales. He was asked to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the escape.

On 27 December, Loyalist Volunteer Force prisoner Billy Wright was killed within the Maze prison. We immediately asked Martin Narey to extend the scope of his inquiry to include the circumstances surrounding the murder.

In addition, Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, Sir David Ramsbotham, was asked immediately to bring forward a full inspection of the Maze.

Martin Narey's detailed and comprehensive report is now before the House. I am grateful to him and his team for completing his inquiry so promptly.

Before going on to consider important aspects of the report, I should like to comment on the third serious incident that has occurred in the Maze—the brutal and savage murder of Mr. David Keys, who was found dead in LVF accommodation on the morning of Sunday 15 March.

I very much regret any incident that leads to the loss of life within prison. I am committed to taking all viable steps to prevent a recurrence, but I must be honest and say emphatically that, even with the most rigorous and severe prison regimes, it is impossible for anyone to guarantee that serious incidents will not happen.

Mr. Keys's murder is, of course, the subject of a Royal Ulster Constabulary investigation and an internal investigation by the Prison Service. However, although Martin Narey had the safety of prisoners continually in mind, the murder raises issues that go beyond the scope of the Narey inquiry. I have, therefore, asked Sir David Ramsbotham, whose inspection of the Maze began on Monday 23 March, to look specifically at the way in which the regime at the Maze impacts on the safety of individual prisoners, and to make recommendations.

As a result of information received during the RUC's investigation, the governor has decided to place LVF prisoners under prison rule 32 for the maintenance of good order and discipline. That is not a punishment, but it does mean that prisoners are kept in cell for up to 23 hours of the day and have restricted association and privileges. Even that reasonable measure resulted in threats to staff, and a number of prisoners refusing prison food, in an effort to overturn the governor's decision.

It is important to bear in mind the fact that Mr. Keys applied to be transferred to the Maze in full knowledge of the conditions there. However, in future, remand prisoners will not move immediately to the Maze, but will be held for a longer period in Maghaberry for assessment. That will give the prison authorities more time to be assured about the safety of such a move.

Martin Narey has described very fully the unique difficulties faced by staff and management at the Maze prison. To quote from his report:

"The Maze contains more than 500 paramilitary prisoners, from five different factions, some violently opposed to one another, living in segregated accommodation and enjoying the support of significant communities outside the prison. It is staffed by prison officers who live in the same communities."

Staff at all levels in the Prison Service and their families have been subjected to a campaign of intimidation and attack directed against them. Since the start of the troubles, 29 members of staff have been murdered by paramilitaries. In 1996-97 alone, there were 122 reported threats against staff, and a further 50 officers had to be given special protection. That campaign has been waged against staff in an effort by prisoners and their supporters to impose their will. The campaign continues. Last weekend, there was a live bomb attempt on the home of a female prison officer in Portadown and, in the early hours of Monday morning, a bomb exploded under the car of a retired prison officer living in Carrickfergus.

Given the small size of Northern Ireland and its small prison estate, the dispersal of paramilitary prisoners is not possible. The only prudent option is to hold them in one place. Although the concentration of prisoners has many security advantages, there is a price to be paid. It gives the prisoners the opportunity to take concerted action within the prison, including action against staff.

I know of no other prison that operates under such difficult circumstances, or where staff are under such continual threat and pressure. I share Martin Narey's admiration for those who work at the Maze. Despite the difficulties and dangers, for 14 years until last December, they had contained a difficult population without a single escape.

Martin Narey has also drawn attention to the support that paramilitary prisoners have outside prison. One important consequence of that has been faced by me and my predecessors: the danger that actions taken inside prison, for perfectly sound and defensible penological reasons, may result in disruption and unrest outside prison. Against that background, I am aware that staff and management at the Maze have created conditions of safety and humanity which compare favourably with other prisons in the United Kingdom and beyond, and have been entirely open to impartial observers from outside such as the International Committee of the Red Cross.

In the aftermath of the escape and the murders, I am required to make decisions about the security of prisons and prisoners. Like all my predecessors, however, I must make decisions that balance the security of custody with the safety of our staff. I must also make decisions that balance the requirements of imprisonment with the wider requirements of public order and public safety.

The Government have already taken significant steps to improve security at the Maze prison. In March 1997, a tunnel was found in H block 7. It was the subject of an inquiry by the previous Government, carried out by John Steele. Following the election of the present Government, we have pursued the implementation of the Steele recommendations. Specifically, morning and evening head counts are being taken; each day, five randomly selected cells per block are being given a fabric check; and full block searches are now a weekly feature.

Material coming from stores is now exchanged on a new-for-old basis, and there is now an accurate picture of the amount and nature of the supplies in the blocks. All prisoners on inter-block movement are being searched.

In addition, a programme of physical security measures has been included in the existing block refurbishment programme. Five blocks have been upgraded to date, and work on the remainder is due for completion by mid-August.

Martin Narey has drawn attention to a number of important lapses in security at the Maze. He has made 59 recommendations that he considers will represent real improvements for staff and prisoners.

As Martin Narey said in his report, changes have already been made. In particular, the governor has taken the initiative to put in place regular random full block searches; regular security checks of H block fences; new arrangements for weekend coverage of staffing shortfalls on visits; new arrangements for searching prisoners on visits and for X-raying parcels; and new arrangements for counting visitors at parties.

Some of the remaining recommendations will be taken forward immediately, now that the report has been published. Other recommendations require some detailed consideration; the necessary project teams are being put in place, for instance, to look at security of the roofs of the buildings and improved processes for dealing with visitors.

Some of the issues to be considered vary in their complexity. However, as an assurance of our determination to act on the recommendations and to tighten security, I undertake to make available to Parliament, in three months' time, a progress report on implementation. In addition, and going beyond the recommendations, we have set up a security audit team, which will begin to work immediately and which will provide the chief executive of the Prison Service with the necessary assurance that changes have been made and are working effectively. That may seem to be a small item, but many changes have been recommended over the years in relation to the Maze, and holding a regular security audit will give us the information to know that the change is taking place.

Finally, I should like to deal with the on-going management of the Maze. Martin Narey has not only recorded a number of lapses in security, but dealt with wider matters to do with the safe and secure running of the prison. Those centre on improving the quality of general management and enhancing staff morale and confidence.

The report suggests that the shortcomings cannot be attributed to individuals, but are the result of a slow, but long-running, deterioration caused by staff fears of the consequences of managing paramilitary prisoners, and by the absence of effective middle management.

The shortcomings have also emerged because there is no easy way of dealing with the Maze and the difficult prisoners it contains. The simple truth, which Martin Narey acknowledges, is that the Maze is different, and the policies operated by successive Governments, which we inherited, have reflected exactly that fact.

I could continue with the status quo, but I consider that unacceptable, or I could turn the clock back at the Maze and reassert the sort of regime that operated during the 1980s. However, in my view, turning the clock back would be at a price within the prison and within the community that no reasonable person would be prepared to pay; certainly, no previous Government have taken a different view.

We recognise the problems, but that is not an excuse for complacency. One irony is that the shortcomings noted by Martin Narey had been noted by the Prison Service long before December of last year, and were beginning to be acted on. They were the reason why Martin Mogg, the most senior governor available within the Northern Ireland Prison Service, together with a new management team, was put in place in October 1997 to take over the running of the Maze. Martin Mogg's appointment is temporary, to ensure the vigorous implementation of the Steele recommendations. I am pleased to note Martin Narey's acknowledgement of the good progress that the team has been making.

However, the fact remains, as Martin Narey has concluded, that "the challenge of the Maze is greater than that of any other establishment in the United Kingdom".

I regard it as critical, therefore, that we act as quickly as possible on the Narey inquiry's recommendations. I assure the House that we will do so.

Implementing the Narey report in full will be a considerable task for the Northern Ireland Prison Service. However, I am confident that it will meet the challenge, and I am confident that when it receives the report in three months, and with the security audit, the House will see that challenge being met.

Mr. Andrew MacKay (Bracknell): May I thank the Minister of State, the hon. Member of East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram), for his courtesy and help in ensuring that I received this report in good time? The Secretary of State's statement is greatly appreciated.

When two prisoners in the custody of the Government are murdered that is a deeply shocking affair, and it is right and proper to have a full and thorough investigation. As the Secretary of State is aware, I would have preferred a full independent inquiry: I asked for that when Wright was murdered at the turn of the year.

As a result of the inquiry and the ensuing publicity, our constituents on the mainland have been surprised and appalled at the regime in the Maze. They were perhaps not aware of the special circumstances of that prison, which have rightly been explained by the Secretary of State and by Mr. Narey. The most particular circumstance is that the prison officers and their families live in the community and are under constant threat. I associate myself with the Secretary of State's remarks about those deeply brave and courageous men and women, who are doing jobs that most of us would not be prepared to do.

Will the Secretary of State confirm that the Narey report is an interim report? It has made some initial recommendations that, on first glance, the Secretary of State is right to implement. However, more needs to be done. Sir David Ramsbotham, the chief inspector of prisons, is looking into life at the Maze and will report soon. I realise that there may be security implications, but will the Secretary of State publish that report in full if possible? Will she also make a statement to the House shortly after it is published?

[Mr. Andrew MacKay]

The Secretary of State has my absolute assurance, on behalf of the Opposition, that, we are seeking, albeit with the benefit of hindsight, like everyone else, to ensure a better and more productive regime in the Maze. We are not looking for scapegoats or to blame others. We shall assist her to improve the regime in the Maze so that the dreadful murders and other events that have occurred will not be repeated.

Marjorie Mowlam: I thank the hon. Member for his comments. I agree with him that the murders were deeply shocking, and no one wants such acts to be repeated.

I was aware that an independent inquiry was the hon. Gentleman's desired outcome. When I decided whether to instigate a report or an inquiry, I considered speed. An inquiry would have taken much longer, and I believed that action should be taken quickly. I also considered decisions by previous Governments. In the past 15 years, during which there were two murders at the Crumlin road gaol, there was no independent inquiry. I decided that the method chosen would allow a thorough investigation with a specific date for completion and recommendations for implementation.

The hon. Gentleman is correct that the report by Sir David Ramsbotham has a wider remit: we widened it after the murder of Mr. Keys. I look forward to the publication of that report in the near future, with, as he rightly said, the proviso that there are no security implications. We also had to take security into account for the Narey report, and I am pleased that we were able to publish it in full. Although Sir David Ramsbotham's report is more extensive, it is the usual inspection, so it would not normally be brought before the House, but I hear what the hon. Gentleman says.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Inverclyde): I have every sympathy with the prison officers of Northern Ireland. Anyone with any knowledge of prisons—military or civilian—in parliamentary democracies knows that accommodations must be made between staff and prisoners; but why are those prisoners allowed to adorn their living quarters with flagrantly offensive murals? Moreover, is it true that they have unhindered access to mobile phones?

Marjorie Mowlam: As my hon. Friend said at the outset, a balance is needed between security and the safety of prison staff, and the necessary judgments must be made to achieve that balance.

The murals are in all the blocks. All the different groups have them on the walls, and—as my hon. Friend knows better than most—they are to be found in the communities as well. Let me put my view succinctly: I believe that the amount of force that would be required to remove them permanently is disproportionate to the extent of the problem. That is the decision we made, and, as hon. Members on both sides of the House are aware, the murals have been there for many years.

Many allegations are made in the papers about behaviour in the Maze, most of them without foundation. Prisoners are not permitted to have mobile phones. Mobile phones that have been found have been seized, and there is no evidence to suggest that they are currently being used. Prisoners do, however, have phonecards, and there are telephone boxes on each wing.

Mr. Phil Willis (Harrogate and Knaresborough): The Liberal Democrats also support the publication of the Narey report. Although it will take some time for us to study all 59 recommendations, I hope that the Secretary of State will accept our support for a very challenging and sensitive document.

Can the Secretary of State assure the House that she will seek the views of the prison officers and line managers who will have to implement the proposals? It is crucial that we do not just make statements rightly praising the courage of the prison officers, but ensure that those who must implement the proposals are given the utmost support and consideration.

Prison safety remains a concern, especially after the appalling murder of David Keys. There is currently a 23-hour protective lockdown each day for LVF prisoners. We note what the Secretary of State said about Sir David Ramsbotham's investigation, but does she accept that the sooner that investigation is finished and a statement is made to the House, the sooner we shall be able to get on with the job of satisfying not only the public in Northern Ireland, but the prisoner community?

Marjorie Mowlam: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his party's support. I appreciate that Liberal Democrats will want to examine the 59 recommendations in the report; if they want to make further points after doing so, we shall be happy to consider them.

Question accordingly agreed to. I certainly assure the House that the implementation of the recommendations will rely on sensible discussion and negotiation with staff, line managers and members of the Prison Officers Associations. My hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram), the Minister with responsibility for security, met members of the POA this week in preparation for the publication of the Narey report, and I shall be meeting them next week or the week after to discuss the details.

I echo the hon. Gentleman's comments about the Ramsbotham report. Of course we want to get it into the public domain as quickly as possible. The one thing that prisons need is stability; uncertainty and a lack of information are not helpful, as in so many other Northern Ireland matters. There was a slight delay in the publication of the Narey report, because we had sought legal advice in order not to inhibit the possibility of criminal prosecutions where they are pending. Similarly, there may be a slight delay in the publication of the Ramsbotham report, but it will be no longer than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. Ken Maginnis (Fermanagh and South Tyrone): May I first acknowledge the courtesy with which Martin Narey listened to my hon. Friend the Member for Lagan Valley (Mr. Donaldson) and me when we visited him, and may I thank the Secretary of State for giving us a preview of the report so that we were able to read it before coming here?

I am disappointed that the report does not deal with the fundamentals that I think it should have dealt with. Whatever superfluity of words the Secretary of State uses to divert attention from the shameful reality that the Prison Service in Northern Ireland operates on a prisoner self-regulatory basis, and however euphemistic the language of Martin Narey with his "regrettables" and "unfortunates", there is no escaping the fact that prison management in Northern Ireland falls far short of the justifiable expectation of the predominantly law-abiding society in Northern Ireland.

The Narey report and the Secretary of State's response are little short of a terrorists charter for paramilitaries to continue—[Interruption.] Listen for once. We have to live there. It is a terrorists charter for paramilitaries to continue to impose by violence and the threat of violence a lawless and undemocratic regime, not only inside our prisons but outside, as is admitted in the report.

Is not the Secretary of State's passive acceptance of this state of affairs so pitiful as to suggest that the Northern Ireland Office team is not fit for high office? When will it, after almost a year, begin to govern? When will it resist the bully-boy tactics of terrorists, in the way that the Prime Minister seems to have rejected the bully-boy tactics of Taoiseach Ahern over the past 24 or 48 hours? This is an inadequate response to murder and mayhem in our prisons. We can only hope that, not having had an independent inquiry, we can have something substantial from Sir David Ramsbotham when he carries out his inspection so that we can begin to get rid of the anarchy that pervades our prison system.

Marjorie Mowlam: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his comments. He refers to the Prison Service as self-regulatory. I would say that of any prison—my hon. Friend the Minister of State uses that language. Yes, it is self-regulatory, in the sense that there needs to be communication between the prisoners and the prison management and officers, as there is in any prison in the United Kingdom. The only difference in relation to the Maze is the backdrop. There are 500 paramilitary prisoners in one place, and the difference is that those prisoners are willing to consider murdering each other and to consider threatening the lives of prison staff and their families, and they can bring some civil disobedience to the streets of Northern Ireland. Those three conditions do not necessarily apply in other prisons. With that backdrop, there will be what the hon. Gentleman calls self-regulation, but I call co-operation and understanding, which are needed for any prison to function.

The hon. Gentleman said that the Northern Ireland team is not fit for high office. I do not know whether he was referring to the politicians or to the civil servants. If he was referring to the politicians, that is a matter of his view and that is fine. On a difficult issue, Northern Ireland civil servants work very hard and do their utmost in difficult circumstances.

The hon. Gentleman's last point was about my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the Taoiseach. What they were trying to do last night was no different from what we need to do on so many problems in Northern Ireland, which is to seek some kind of accommodation and understanding, and to talk.

Mr. Tom King (Bridgwater): Is the right hon. Lady aware that all who have shared in the responsibility in Northern Ireland will know that the problem of adequately containing the largest group of convicted terrorists in western Europe is challenge enough? Certainly, the House would join warmly in supporting her tribute to all those working in the Prison Service and the Northern Ireland Office, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bracknell (Mr. MacKay) did. Clearly, a balance must be struck in the interests of the wider community and in the interests of security.

While the House will study with great interest the many recommendations in the Narey report, I thought none so important as the emphasis on frequent and random searches, because it is one thing to contain prisoners, but it is quite another if prison officers are being asked to contain armed prisoners.

Marjorie Mowlam: I thank the right hon. Gentleman for his opening comments. I agree that a balance needs to be struck and that the overriding issue is the security of the wider community. In that sense, the Prison Service has been doing a good job since the tunnel under the Maze was discovered in March last year, during the previous Government's period in office. The recommendations made then dealt exactly with the points he has raised, and we were working on their implementation in October last year.

Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle): Will my right hon. Friend say more about the treatment of remand prisoners? She said in her statement that no remand prisoner would be sent automatically to the Maze, but would be held back for assessment. Given the picture that she has painted of the Maze and its inmates, does she agree that it would be better for all remand prisoners to be sent to prisons other than the Maze—perhaps even on the mainland? Could she say a word or two about the form of the assessment of remand prisoners to ascertain whether they should be sent to the Maze?

Marjorie Mowlam: When my hon. Friend has a chance to look at the details of the report—that is not a criticism; he will not have had a chance to read the whole report—he will see that the treatment of remand prisoners is covered in some detail. There are positive recommendations which, no doubt, we will be able to implement speedily. Remand prisoners are not sent automatically to the Maze. They arrive at Maghaberry and if they ask to be transferred, they are transferred—the choice is left to them. The conditions are written down and given to them. One of the changes that could make a difference would be prisoners being given slightly longer to consider their position. In relation to Mr. Keys, he himself chose to go, sadly.

Mr. Andrew Hunter (Basingstoke): While I acknowledge that the Maze is a very different and difficult prison to run, can it not be argued—with the advantage of hindsight—that some well-intended, if mistaken, decisions have been made in the past? Is it not a matter of regret that Mr. Narey has ducked one central issue—that to achieve an acceptable level of security at the Maze, it is essential for prison officers to patrol residential areas as well as search them occasionally, sometimes by prior arrangement with the prisoners?

Marjorie Mowlam: I agree with the hon. Gentleman that hindsight is a wonderful thing, but, not having it at the time, previous Governments have adopted particular policies. Narey is a positive report because it looks to the future. We could spend the next five or 10 minutes going over the past 15 years, but that would not help us or the hon. Gentleman. We must look at the gradual deterioration in the implementation of some of the regulations, and we must do what both Steele and Narey recommended—to begin to be sure that individual searches, cell searches or unit searches happen on a regular and random basis, and to be sure that the kind of checks that are needed are put in place. The hon. Gentleman and I would agree on that.

Ms Margaret Moran (Luton, South): Will my right hon. Friend accept the support of the majority of hon. Members for the actions that she has outlined to deal with the very difficult situation in the Maze? In particular, I welcome her comments about the security audit. She referred to the delay in the publication of the report. Will she expand on the reasons behind that?

Marjorie Mowlam: I thank my hon. Friend for her opening comments. We were criticised by parts of the press for the delay in publication. There were two reasons for the delay. First, after receiving the report, we wanted to consider it in detail—my hon. Friend the Member for East Kilbride and I wanted to be sure that we could tell the House that we could implement all 59 recommendations. We are now sure that we can, and the security audit and the report in three months will show that we have done so. Secondly—I did not know this before—such reports have to be checked to ensure that no difficulty will be caused to criminal cases being brought against people accused of murder, and it took time for the report to be considered by another Department.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): The Northern Ireland Prison Service clearly has an extremely difficult job—that is accepted on both sides of the House. Is the Secretary of State aware that people on both sides of the Irish sea—in Northern Ireland and here—are deeply concerned about the regime at the Maze prison, on which the report by Sir David Ramsbotham may, in due course, shed more light? Is not it wrong that she and even my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King), who is no longer in his place, have described as paramilitaries or terrorists people who are, in fact, no more than vicious, brutal criminals, and should be treated as such? The regime that they experience should reflect appropriately the vicious crimes that they have perpetrated.

I share some of the grave concerns expressed by the spokesman for the Ulster Unionist party, the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis), about the current regime. Does the right hon. Lady accept that the regime that operated in the 1980s, which she said was no longer acceptable, should be reconsidered, as it seemed to be rather more effective than the current regime?

Marjorie Mowlam: I note the hon. Gentleman's comments, but there is a difference between rhetoric and reality, as those who have served in Labour and Conservative Governments know.

Mr. Harry Barnes (North-East Derbyshire): In the long run, will not the serious problems at the Maze be solved only by successful outcomes of the peace process and the referendum? Is it not the duty of every hon. Member to ensure that the process is pushed forward, so that those problems can be tackled?

Marjorie Mowlam: Yes.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): With the benefit of hindsight, does the right hon. Lady consider that her visit to the Maze at Christmas contributed to good order and discipline in the prison and to a reduction in violence both inside and outside the prison, or does she think that it enhanced the status and authority of convicted criminals and terrorist godfathers?

Marjorie Mowlam: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his comments. No, if I had thought that the visit would have either undermined the rule of law or enhanced the standing of people in the Maze, I would not have made it. I think that it was an extra step towards ensuring what was referred to in the previous question—the backdrop of a peaceful settlement in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Martin Salter (Reading, West): On a scale of one to 100, where would my right hon. Friend place the recent contribution of the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis) towards a positive solution to the serious security problems that bedevil Northern Ireland?

Marjorie Mowlam: I do not think that it would be helpful to answer that question.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Mid-Sussex): I have every sympathy with the right hon. Lady in having to deal with this fiendishly difficult problem, but does she agree that it would be sensible to assess the security profile of remand prisoners who choose to go to the Maze? In the case of Mr. David Keys, there was a clear likelihood that he would be under threat. Under such circumstances, do not the Prison Service, the military and the intelligence services have a duty, if necessary, to prevent such prisoners from going to the Maze?

Marjorie Mowlam: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his question. That is done at the moment, and, as a result of the Narey recommendations, the matter will be examined in more detail.

Mr. Jeffrey Donaldson (Lagan Valley): As the Maze is in my constituency, I have followed the inquiry with great interest. Having glanced through Mr. Narey's report, I am concerned about getting at the real truth behind Billy Wright's murder and Liam Averill's escape. There are many inadequacies in the report.

I was alarmed to read that, in the course of his inquiry, Mr. Narey met officials from the Irish Government. One wonders what their role is in the management of prisons in Northern Ireland. I was amazed to find that he also met the OCs of all the paramilitary groups in the prison except the INLA. One wonders what their role was.

My hon. Friend the Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone (Mr. Maginnis) spoke of the system of self-regulation in Northern Ireland's prisons. There can be no doubt that that system has contributed to two murders and one escape in recent weeks; until it is changed, problems will continue and the Secretary of State will continue to say that she cannot guarantee the safety of prisoners. That is most regrettable. Control of the wings in the prisons has been given over to the paramilitary groupings, and that must be reversed.

It is regrettable that no individual or group of individuals has been brought to account for serious breaches of security that not only led to the two murders and the escape but contributed to a serious deterioration of the situation in Northern Ireland generally. Will the Secretary of State undertake to review again the management of the Prison Service in Northern Ireland? My constituents cannot have confidence in the service on the basis of the report.

Marjorie Mowlam: I shall answer those points in turn. If it was simply a question of heads rolling, that would be cheap and unrealistic and would not acknowledge the complexities and difficulties that exist in the Maze. There is a question of effective middle management, and I assure the hon. Gentleman that that is being investigated. The murder of Billy Wright is not covered in the report because it was not in its remit. An RUC investigation is being conducted into exactly that question.

The hon. Gentleman listed some people to whom Mr. Narey talked. He chose whom he talked to, and when people came to him to give evidence I presume that he listened to them. The hon. Gentleman also referred to self-regulation, as he called it, and to the murders that have taken place and why we cannot do better. At the risk of alienating my Scottish, Welsh and English colleagues, let me say that there have been two murders and one escape in the Maze in the past 14 years, while—

Mr. Maginnis: No, in the past month.

Marjorie Mowlam: Well, they may have happened in the past month, but they are the only ones in the past 14 years. In Scotland, there have been six murders in the past 10 years, and in England and Wales there have been 13 in the past six years. I am merely putting the matter in context.

Business of the House

4.13 pm

The President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mrs. Ann Taylor): I would like to make a statement about the business for next week.

MONDAY 6 APRIL—Opposition Day [10th Allotted Day].

Until about 7 pm, there will be a debate on trade union recognition, followed by a debate on the state of manufacturing industry. Both debates will arise on Opposition motions.

TUESDAY 7 APRIL—Second Reading of the National Lottery Bill [Lords].

WEDNESDAY 8 APRIL—Until 2 pm, there will be debates on the motion for the Adjournment of the House, which will include the usual three-hour pre-recess debate.

That will be followed in the afternoon by Second Reading of the Crime and Disorder Bill [Lords].

The House will then rise for the Easter recess.

The provisional business for the first week back after the Easter recess will be as follows:

MONDAY 20 APRIL—Consideration of Lords amendments to the Bank of England Bill.

Second Reading of the Data Protection Bill [Lords].

The Chairman of Ways and Means has named opposed private business for consideration at 7 pm.

TUESDAY 21 APRIL—Second Reading of the Finance (No. 2) Bill.

Motion on section 5 of the European Communities (Amendment) Act.

WEDNESDAY 22 APRIL—Until 2 pm, there will be debates on the motion for the Adjournment of the House.

Remaining stages of the Scotland Bill (first day).

THURSDAY 23 APRIL—Debate on the Royal Air Force on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

Friday 24 April—Private Members' Bills.

The House will also wish to know that, on Wednesday 8 April, there will be a debate on convergence of the telecommunications, media and information technology sectors in European Standing Committee B.

Details of the relevant documents will be given in the Official Report.

I do not anticipate being able to give further information next week about the business for the second week back after the recess, and I therefore do not intend to make a business statement next week unless the provisional business alters or I am able to give information about the week of 27 April. If I do give more information, I will do so on Wednesday of next week.

The House is being asked to take the Criminal Procedure (Intermediate Diets) (Scotland) Bill today as new business which was not announced last week. However, I said last week that the Government were looking to take urgent action on the problems that had arisen on the matter. As the official Opposition and, indeed, other parties, have acknowledged the need for the measure, we have been able to get agreement to take it in this unusual way. I am grateful for that, and thank those who helped to facilitate that action.

[Wednesday 8 April:

European Standing Committee B—Relevant European Community document: 13289/97, Convergence of the Telecommunications, Media and Information Technology Sectors. Relevant European Legislation Committee reports: HC 155-xiv and HC 155-xxiii (1997–98).]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard (South-West Norfolk): I thank the right hon. Lady for her statement, and for giving the House the provisional business for the week after the recess. She knows that several Members have been asking for debates on defence matters, so her announcement of a debate on the Royal Air Force is particularly welcome.

The right hon. Lady knows that we have been pressing for debates on statutory instrument 776 on lone parents and on statutory instrument 655 on nursery education. I hope that she can find time for such debates. Does she agree that it is time that we had a debate on foreign affairs now that we are halfway through the British presidency of the European Union? It would be of great value to the House if one could be arranged.

The right hon. Lady also knows that I have asked for a debate on the national health service in Government time at no fewer than six previous business questions. It is a matter of real concern that the Government continue to be unwilling to debate the NHS in their own time.

It is almost incredible that, although we have had eight statements on health policy, there has been no debate in Government time since the general election 10 months ago. I understand that the right hon. Lady has a great deal of business to cram into our working hours, and that she may not immediately be able to say when she might arrange for such a debate, but I hope that she will at least explain why the Government appear so reluctant to expose their health policies to examination in the House.

Can the right hon. Lady tell the House what precedent there is for the Government's handling of the introduction of national insurance changes in the other place? It appears that an amendment to the Social Security Bill in their Lordships' House has been used to introduce changes that were announced in the Budget, without any opportunity for debate or scrutiny in this House. Again, I understand that she may not be able to answer that point today, but if she cannot, I should be grateful if she could write to me to explain the precedent, and whether there has been an abuse of this House.

Many in the House and beyond will have been surprised to hear the Prime Minister yesterday give the job description of his press secretary as to "attack the Conservatives". I see from today's press briefing from Government sources that the press secretary's terms and conditions of employment have changed since the election. I think that we would all welcome the right hon. Lady's confirmation that that is so, and her reassurance that the House was informed of that change. When was it informed, and by what means?

Does the Leader of the House agree that it might be more open of the Government to re-title the post? If, as the Prime Minister was at pains to emphasise yesterday, Mr. Campbell is a political appointee, it is inappropriate for him to be called the Prime Minister's press secretary. I wonder whether it might be helpful and add to the gaiety of nations if the Press Gallery were to be asked to organise a competition among themselves to suggest a more fitting name.

I hope that, in her reply, the right hon. Lady will not provide us with an analogy with Sir Bernard Ingham, who began his distinguished professional career, as we all know, as an enthusiastic press officer for the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn).

Will the Leader of the House arrange for the Secretary of State for Scotland to make a statement on why the sensitive issues of abortion and euthanasia are being treated differently in the Scotland Bill? The former is being reserved to the Westminster Parliament, and the latter devolved to the Scottish Parliament. The Leader of the House may be willing to explain the distinction that the Government are drawing between the two, and whether the Government regard the issue of which Parliament should deal with those issues as one of conscience.

Mrs. Taylor: The right hon. Lady has raised a number of points, and I shall try to answer them all. I am glad that she welcomes the defence debate. Some of her hon. Friends have been asking for such a debate for some time.

On the question of statutory instruments, the right hon. Lady will know that discussion always continues through the usual channels, and that it is on that basis that we decide where matters should be debated. I accept her request for a foreign affairs debate as legitimate, and I hope that we shall be able to find some time for some more general debates on foreign affairs in the not too distant future, although, as she acknowledges, we have some legislation in the pipeline that we have to deal with.

As for health issues, the right hon. Lady—I suppose that I should be grateful to her—reminded the House that there had been eight statements. That proves the willingness of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health to find a great deal of time to be accountable to the House.

The right hon. Lady asked for a debate in Government time. I have to remind her of the point that I made a few weeks ago: in the whole of the five years of the previous Parliament, the Conservative Government had only one health debate in Government time. We might be able to manage that. What happened then was that, when we wanted a health debate, we had one in Opposition time. That is one reason why we have Opposition days: they allow the Opposition to choose the debate.

On national insurance charges, it is true that amendments have been made to the Social Security Bill in the Lords. Those amendments must be in order, or they would not be debatable there. Those matters can, of course, be debated in this Chamber when the Bill comes back from the Lords for consideration of Lords amendments.

On the issue of the Prime Minister's official spokesman, I do not think that there is much need to add to what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said yesterday, except to welcome the right hon. Lady's enthusiasm for the gaiety of nations, as she called it. I am sure that the Press Gallery can and does have a great deal of entertainment making up names for people. I should point out that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's official spokesman said earlier this week that he hoped that everyone had not had a humour bypass. Perhaps the right hon. Lady has taken that to heart.

As for the Scotland Bill, euthanasia and abortion were dealt with this week, and I have nothing to add to what was said.

Mr. Jim Marshall (Leicester, South): Is my right hon. Friend aware of the great anger in Leicester arising from this year's local government revenue settlement, which has led to a reduction in services and a council tax increase of 25 per cent.? Against that backcloth, can she arrange an early debate in the House, so that we can try to influence the Government on the future of local government financing before they make any firm decisions?

Mrs. Taylor: We had debates on the settlements for this year a couple of months ago. My hon. Friend is an experienced Member of Parliament, and I am sure that he will find opportunities to raise the matter, even though I cannot promise him the debate he wants.

Mr. Paul Tyler (North Cornwall): We on the Liberal Democrat Benches would certainly support a debate on the future of local government finance, which would be of interest to all hon. Members on both sides of the House.

On the subject of statutory instruments, I draw the right hon. Lady's attention to early-day motion 1168.

[That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that the Council Tax Benefit (General) Amendment Regulations 1998 (S.I., 1998, No. 911), dated 30th March 1998, a copy of which was laid before this House on 30th March, be annulled.]

It deals with statutory instrument 911 on council tax benefit, and has already been endorsed by both the leadership of the Conservative party and my right hon. and hon. Friends. This is a subject that causes considerable concern to hon. Members on both sides of the House, so can she the right hon. Lady find time as soon as possible for a debate on that early-day motion?

The right hon. Lady chairs the Select Committee on the Modernisation of the House of Commons, and I know that she is using her best efforts to secure an early date for a debate on its recent reports. Will she redouble those efforts, because there is growing frustration—especially among more recent entrants into the House—at the lack of progress on the recommendations of that Committee? Can we have an early debate and some indication of the timetable for any necessary changes to our Standing Orders that may result?

Finally, last week, I put to the Leader of the House a question that I am afraid I made too specific: I asked whether she was able to give me any indication as to whether the rumours were true that business would be interrupted the following day by a statement on the future of the Rural Development Commission and the Countryside Commission. The right hon. Lady, quite rightly, said that there was no proposal to interrupt business. However, on Friday afternoon, a written answer was slipped out that dealt with precisely that matter.

That is an extremely important issue, and not only for the commissioners and all their staff who have served the nation well. The Rural Development Commission goes back to the days of Lloyd George, and the Countryside Commission has done a great job for the rural areas. They are important agencies, which have done a great job, so to slip out, at the end of Friday afternoon, an important statement of that sort, with no opportunity for debate, is the worst possible example of the Government having learnt nothing from their predecessors. The previous Government used to do that, but we had hoped better of this Government.

Mrs. Taylor: I have noted that the Liberal Democrats would also like a debate on local government finance. The hon. Gentleman mentioned the statutory instrument, which will obviously be discussed through the usual channels. I have to point out to the Liberal Democrats' spokesman that today is their Opposition day, and, had they wanted to debate local government finance, they could have chosen that topic for today's debate.

It is true that the Modernisation Committee has produced four reports. We have had one full debate on the subject, and I am hoping that we shall be able to have another. We have been able to make further progress this week: yesterday's Bill was debated under a programme motion, which is another step in the right direction.

The hon. Gentleman moved quickly from modernisation to Lloyd George—I am not sure what we should read into that. I am glad that he acknowledged that the reply I gave him last week was accurate. I do not think that the written question was slipped out in any way, and I am glad that I was able to help the hon. Gentleman to obtain a copy of it last Friday. It was not slipped out—indeed, I should not be at all surprised if there had been a press release accompanying it.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Is my right hon. Friend aware that it ill behoves the Tories to be rabbiting on about having a debate on the subject of the press secretary to the Prime Minister, given the role played by Bernard Ingham, who was press secretary to Tony Benn and then become a complete turncoat and joined Margaret Thatcher? He was responsible for sacking a Cabinet Minister, John Biffen, who at the time was doing a pretty reasonable job as Leader of the House. So I do not think we should take any lessons from the Tories about that.

As for the statement about knocking Ministers' heads together, let me say this to my right hon. Friend. When you decide to accept patronage, a ministerial car and some extra money, you leave the Back Benches, and you leave the freedom of being able to speak your mind as often as you would like to. Collective responsibility provides not only liberties but restrictions. If people want to open their mouth as often as I do, they should come and sit next to me.

Madam Speaker: Order. I hope that, when the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) opens his mouth, he keeps within the procedures of the House. I have not actually heard him ask a question about what he wants next week, and it is too late now.

Mrs. Taylor: I think my hon. Friend was asking for a debate on the principle of collective responsibility. He outlined that principle so succinctly that there is no need for a debate.

Mrs. Caroline Spelman (Meriden): I wonder whether the right hon. Lady is aware how fast the crisis in agriculture is growing. That was brought home to me when I heard that the Massey Ferguson factory just outside my constituency was going on to a three-day week. Perhaps she is not aware that the Welsh Institute of Rural Studies estimates that 7,300 job losses can be attributed to the crisis, or that, at the weekend, Bernard Matthews announced that he was on the point of moving his poultry business to eastern Europe. Will she therefore give Government time for a debate on the impact of the strong pound on agriculture?

Mrs. Taylor: I do not believe that all the problems that the hon. Lady mentioned are the consequence of the strong pound. If she believes they are, she might seek to catch your eye during the debate on manufacturing industry, Madam Speaker, because it obviously has relevance to agriculture.

Mr. Harry Barnes (North-East Derbyshire): May we have a debate on the backdating of social security benefits? Some harsh limitations have been placed on backdating, in previous legislation by the previous Government and in the Social Security Bill that is passing through another place. The process by which social security claimants must make applications is complex. Sometimes they find themselves going down one road and then having to apply down another road later, perhaps missing out on considerable benefits in the process.

Mrs. Taylor: I believe that we would all sympathise with the point that my hon. Friend makes about the complexities of the system, which is among the issues that we shall always take into account during the review. I cannot, however, guarantee to find time to reopen issues on which the House has taken a decision.

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): Notwithstanding the rambling reminiscences of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), will the Leader of the House consider seriously the express wish of Her Majesty's Opposition for a debate on the role of the Prime Minister's press spokesman? Does she agree that the analogy with Mr. Bernard Ingham is supremely inappropriate? Are we not considering a press spokesman who is supposed to offer advice but wishes to take executive decisions, and instructs Ministers what they should and should not do? Does the right hon. Lady agree that, if that is his preferred course, he should cut his salary in half, abandon his job and stand for election to the House?

Mr. Skinner: He is only a baby.

Mrs. Taylor: As my hon. Friend said, the hon. Gentleman is not terribly experienced in the House. He may like to suggest to Conservative Front-Bench spokesmen that, next time they have an Opposition day, they should choose a topic of that kind.

Mr. Brian White (Milton Keynes, North-East): Given that the Government's policy of promoting 60 per cent. of development on brown-field sites will require high-quality construction, given the concerns that have been expressed to Ministers about the warranty system and about the inspection system, and following the reply that she gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Dobbin) last week, can the Leader of the House find time for a debate about housing standards and the construction of houses in the near future?

Mrs. Taylor: I recall the point being raised last week, and I know that some of my hon. Friends have concerns on that matter. It is impossible to provide Government time for such a debate. Last week, I suggested that it might be possible for my hon. Friend the Member for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Dobbin) and others to apply for an Adjournment debate. Perhaps I should mention at this point that the Wednesday morning debates are a useful opportunity for many Back Benchers to raise issues of that kind that affect their constituents; my hon. Friend might like to consider trying to catch your eye then, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): The right hon. Lady will be aware that I serve on the Modernisation Select Committee under her distinguished chairmanship. She will also be aware that, from time to time, I am inclined to display an independent tendency. I was most interested to learn earlier this week of the Labour party's extraordinary structure that allows Whips to vote one way on a single-line whip while the rest of the party is on a three-line whip. As I believe in independence in this place, will the right hon. Lady confirm whether the precedent that her Government set on that occasion during the passage of the Scotland Bill could be referred to the Modernisation Select Committee?

Mrs. Taylor: Opposition Whips will always be very interested in what the hon. Gentleman has to say about whipping and the rules that should apply. The hon. Gentleman raises the issue of the vote the other night concerning abortion. Abortion has always been a matter of conscience in the Labour party, and there has always been a free vote on that issue. The vote earlier this week was not about abortion, but about devolution and whether abortion should be devolved. Hon. Members who had a problem with their conscience were allowed, with the permission of the Chief Whip, to seek to exercise their principles.

Mr. John Cryer (Hornchurch): Could we have a debate in the near future about British sport? It has declined markedly in the past 20 years, partly because of the previous Government's destruction of local authority facilities and partly due to their destruction of industrial areas. Those areas provided room to play cricket and for, boxing, rugby and other sports. The problem of de-listing has also resurfaced, with Rupert Murdoch trying to get his grubby little fingers on every sporting event from the five nations rugby tournament to the national tiddlywinks championships.

If the Tories are so keen to debate the national health service, perhaps my right hon. Friend will consider holding that debate during Easter week. Plenty of Labour Members would attend, but I do not think that many of the gutless Opposition Members would be here.

Mrs. Taylor: My hon. Friend did not cover everything, but he had a good go. I understand why many people are concerned about the future of sport in this country, given some of the things that have happened in the past couple of decades. I am sure that my hon. Friend welcomed the Government's announcement about the sale of playing fields, and the extra action that we have taken to assist in that respect.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport is considering the recommendations regarding listed sports events. I think that my hon. Friend knows that, under the Broadcasting Act 1996, the Secretary of State is solely responsible for the list of protected events. He is taking significant steps to consult hon. Members—some of whom have been to see my right hon. Friend about the matter—and he intends to listen carefully to their advice. I am sure that all hon. Members have their own views about this issue, and my right hon. Friend is willing to listen to them. On that basis, I hope that he will reach the right decisions.

My hon. Friend suggests having a debate on the national health service during Easter week instead of the recess. I understand the pressure for extra parliamentary time, and the difficulties involved in fitting everything into the parliamentary programme. However, I believe that hon. Members are entitled to a recess—not least because some of them wish to work in their constituencies.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): Will the right hon. Lady find time in the near future for a debate on the wider issue of civil service independence? That independence is highly respected and valued, not only by civil servants but by the British people whom they serve. That debate is necessitated not just by the Prime Minister's extraordinary statement yesterday that Alastair Campbell is a creature of new Labour, but by the recent sacking of several public information officers who were unwilling to embrace enthusiastically the new Labour manifesto. It is a serious point that should be discussed on the Floor of the House.

Mrs. Taylor: The independence of the civil service is an important principle. Some Opposition Members find it difficult to understand that civil servants do not represent their viewpoint. There was an attempt under the previous Government to make sure that the Government viewpoint was put, and some Opposition Members think that that viewpoint should continue, regardless of which Government are in power. Independence means exactly that: the civil service serves the Government of the day. In case the hon. Gentleman had not noticed, his party lost the last election.

Mr. David Taylor (North-West Leicestershire): Is my right hon. Friend aware of the death by explosion a few days ago at the age of about 200 of the Leicestershire deep mining industry, when the ventilation shaft at the Asfordby colliery was blown up by RJB Mining? Will she find time in an already crowded timetable to investigate the corrupt privatisation of the British coal industry? That has led to the loss of collieries like Asfordby, which has one third of Britain's clean coal reserves—1,000 million tonnes. Those have been for ever sterilised by that explosion.

Eight hundred million pounds of taxpayers' money has been invested in a project that could have secured the role of coal in power generation. Could my right hon. Friend find time to investigate why that pit was lost, in a carnival atmosphere generated by Richard Budge?

Mrs. Taylor: I can well understand the concerns expressed by my hon. Friend, in view of the impact of that decision on his constituents. He is aware of the pressures on parliamentary time, and will understand why I cannot give him the debate he seeks. Perhaps he will consider the possibility of getting an Adjournment debate, or of contributing to next Wednesday's debate.

Mr. Nick Hawkins (Surrey Heath): First, may I support what the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Cryer) said about the importance of listed sports events? In the light of the confirmation given by the Leader of the House that the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport is listening on the issue, can we have an early debate after the Easter recess in Government time? The matter concerns many hon. Members of all parties, and many of us have already written to the Secretary of State about it.

Secondly, may I return briefly to the debate earlier this week, and the issue of the exception from reserved powers in relation to abortion? In the light of the right hon. Lady's earlier answer, in which she suggested that permission was given to two Government Whips to vote against the Government on the matter, it is extraordinary that many of her other colleagues were not informed that it was regarded by their Chief Whip as a free vote. In The Scotsman today, one Labour Member is reported to have said that he is livid about the matter, and others have complained that at no time were they told that it was a free vote on a matter of conscience.

Mrs. Taylor: I have nothing to add to what I said about the issue of abortion. The vote was about devolution, but there were some hon. Members who saw it as a conscience issue, and they sought the authorisation of the Chief Whip to vote as they did. That is the end of the matter.

On listed events, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport is, as I said, trying to get the opinion of the House, and to allow hon. Members to tell him what their priorities are. I cannot promise an early debate on the matter, but if hon. Members take up my right hon. Friend's offer to listen to their views, they can make their views known in that way. It is questions to my right hon. Friend on the Monday that we return from the Easter recess.

Mr. Derek Twigg (Halton): My right hon. Friend will be aware that a number of weeks have passed since the publication of the report on the scrutiny of evidence about the Hillsborough disaster, and she will know that I have asked many times for a debate. Can she tell us whether we are close to finding time for one, and can she confirm that it is hoped that that debate will take place between Easter and Whit?

Mrs. Taylor: My hon. Friend has raised this serious matter several times. I have expressed my sympathy with him in his desire for a debate, so that the families affected by that disaster can feel that every aspect has been discussed. I cannot give a date for such a debate today, but I am hopeful that we shall have a debate between Easter and Whitsun. He asked whether we were close to a debate, and that is as far as I can go at this stage: I believe that it might be possible to get a debate between Easter and Whitsun.

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): Will the Leader of the House consider arranging a debate on farming in Government time as speedily as possible? The farming community is concerned that the Government do not appreciate the seriousness of the situation in the countryside.

[Mr. Tony Baldry]

The right hon. Lady will recall that one of the first actions of the Government was to abolish the regional panels. Those were panels of farmers and others, which used to give advice to Ministers on what was happening in different parts of the countryside. Those have gone, so Ministers no longer have that line of communication.

The farming community will be surprised to learn that the Minister of Agriculture is to spend much of the Easter recess travelling through China. They would prefer him to travel through the United Kingdom to discover the state of British farming. Please may we have an early debate on the state of farming in the UK?

Mrs. Taylor: The hon. Gentleman says that Ministers do not have a full appreciation of problems. I reject that entirely. Perhaps Conservative Members do not have a full appreciation of the significant steps that have been taken by my right hon. Friend and his colleagues at MAFF, not least the extra aid to livestock producers and the agreement by the Agriculture Council on 16 March to lift the export ban on beef from Northern Ireland. My right hon. Friend and his colleagues take matters very seriously, and they are entitled to some recognition of the progress that they have made.

Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle): Last October, we learned that the Lord Chancellor had decided not to proceed with a judicial appointments commission as set out in the 1994 Labour party policy document "Access to Justice". The Lord Chancellor said, however, that he would report to Parliament annually on the exercise of his powers to appoint judges. I recall him saying that it was his intention to present a report to Parliament in April. Given the importance of the issue and the reservations expressed by many hon. Members on both sides of the House about the appointment of judges, is there not a powerful case for allocating time later this month to debate that report?

Mrs. Taylor: My hon. Friend, who has raised other requests at business questions, knows the pressure on time. I will consider what he said, but I cannot promise him a debate. It is questions to the relevant Minister on the Tuesday after we return from the Easter recess.

Dr. Julian Lewis (New Forest, East): Does the Leader of the House realise that the inadequacy of her answers to my hon. Friends the Members for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) and for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins) makes it all the more necessary that, in her capacity as Chairman of the Modernisation Committee, she should explain to the House next week how the Government's attitude towards whipping practices allows a three-line whip to be put on a vote, which hon. Members are not allowed to break, but which two Whips are allowed to break? How can she seriously maintain that Whips alone wanted to exercise their conscience, and that other hon. Members had the opportunity but chose not to do so?

Mrs. Taylor: The hon. Gentleman could not have been listening to what I said earlier; nor can he be aware of the remit of the Modernisation Committee, which has nothing to do with the whipping in the House.

Mr. Ben Bradshaw (Exeter): Will my right hon. Friend do what she can to ensure that a copy of the Clarke Tilt report on the British film industry is placed in the Library and the Vote Office? That was promised a week ago, and it still has not happened.

Mrs. Taylor: I shall look into the matter, and try to remedy the situation.

Opposition Day

[4TH ALLOTTED DAY—SECOND PART]

International Arms Trade

4.48 pm

Mr. Menzies Campbell (North-East Fife): I beg to move,

That this House, mindful of the conclusions of the Scott Report, commends Her Majesty's Government for its efforts to obtain agreement for a European Union Code of Conduct on the arms trade; and urges Her Majesty's Government to ensure that any such code sets high common standards governing arms exports for all Member States, and, in particular, to insist that export guidelines are transparent, unambiguous and pay due regard to human rights.

A debate on the international arms trade is particularly timely today, for three distinct and important reasons. First, it is approximately two years since the publication of the Scott report. Secondly, only a few weeks ago, Britain was ready to go to war, if necessary, to eliminate Saddam Hussein's programmes of weapons of mass destruction. Thirdly, the Government are currently engaged, with the support, I hope, of all right-minded Members, in efforts to obtain an effective European code of conduct on the arms trade.

Mention of the Scott report allows us to remind ourselves of one or two features of that event. It is worth reminding ourselves that the central conclusion of the Scott report was that the Conservative Government deliberately failed to inform Parliament of Government policy on arms sales to Iraq. They survived the debate on the Scott report by one vote—as a result of persuading three Democratic Unionist Members to stay away and twisting the arm of Mr. Rupert Allason. One might think that that is hardly an expression of overall confidence in the House.

More than any episode, the arms-to-Iraq affair exposed the Tory Government for what they were. When the Leader of the Opposition goes on a circuit of the spa towns of Edwardian England saying to the collected membership of his party that the trouble was that the party allowed itself to be perceived as arrogant, the truth is that it was not perception but reality. The Conservative party was arrogant, and the Scott report underlined the extent of that arrogance and the degree of cynicism with which the Conservative Government regarded their responsibilities to Parliament.

In The Observer on 18 February 1996—about two years ago—the conclusion was reached that "Britain helped to give Iraq the machine tools and the technology to wage nuclear and chemical warfare."

We now know that Britain did more than that. There is now clear and credible evidence that Britain laid the foundations for not only the nuclear and chemical programmes but the biological weapons programme that was being pursued in Iraq. It was Iraq's possession of those weapons and anxiety about the threat of their use, or of their actual use, that was the cause of the United Kingdom's being willing to deploy armed forces in the Gulf and, if necessary, to put the lives of those men and women at risk to prevent Saddam Hussein from utilising these programmes.

Some of the details of the biological weapons programme are now well known. We know, for example, that British and Swiss companies exported to Iraq large quantities of the growth media in which biological weapons are cultivated. Between 1987 and 1988, 39 tonnes of growth media were exported by two companies. That was enough for Iraq to produce four tonnes of deadly bacteria. Exports of the media in such large quantities are highly unusual. Indeed, sales of growth media for sound medical reasons are usually counted in pounds and not tonnes.

In addition, Britain trained many of the key Iraqi scientists. The covert biological weapons research programme was directed by General Amer Saadi, who obtained a masters degree in chemistry from Oxford university, and Rihab Taha, who had a doctorate in microbiology from East Anglia university. The procurement of supplies was controlled by one Ahmed Murthada, a British-trained engineer who led Iraqi research into the warfare uses of ricin, a toxin that derives from castor beans.

We know that British support was not confined to training or the supply of ancillary materials. There is now evidence to show that there is an irresistible inference that some of the anthrax that Iraq obtained as the foundation of its programme originated in Britain. It has emerged that Iraq obtained much of its anthrax supply from a United States company—the American Type Culture Collection, which is known as ATCC—with a base in Rockville, Maryland.

Between 1985 and 1989, Iraq obtained at least 21 strains of anthrax from ATCC and about 15 other class III pathogens, the bacteria that pose an extreme risk to human health. It has not been reported that many of the anthrax strains were British. Extensive American investigative journalism has revealed that they had been sold to ATCC, notwithstanding the fact that the company was well known to be re-exporting pathogens without restraint, not least to Iraq.

It was pretty easy to obtain pathogens from ATCC in the 1980s. It was necessary to submit a written request on headed notepaper from a credible but not necessarily reputable institution—[HON. MEMBERS: "The House of Commons?"] Those who suggest House of Commons paper are perhaps doing us less than justice. It was necessary to agree to responsibility for the receipt, handling, storage and use of the material, and then demonstrate in a short telephone conversation that one was scientifically literate. For the payment of a $78 fee, one could have access to deadly material. No more was required. It could hardly have been easier.

I have asked the Government recently in written questions whether any pathogens were exported direct to Iraq. I expected to receive confirmation that they were not, but in a written answer I have been told that the Department of Trade and Industry says that it has no way of telling whether any anthrax or other pathogens were exported direct to Iraq. Apparently no records are kept of destinations.

The DTI indicated that the remaining records of applications—there are records of applications but not of destinations—for licences to export to Iraq were in the Scott report. I doubt whether you will stay awake through the long hours of the night poring through the appendices to the Scott report, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but if you do it will be unhelpful and unrewarding. The appendices shed no light on any possible export of pathogens to Iraq. However, they raise other concerns about chemical weapons.

In the mid to late 1980s, Iraq made numerous attempts to purchase special chemicals from the United Kingdom, many of which are known as precursors—the vital ingredients for chemical weapons. Many of the export applications were blocked, but some were not.

In 1985, Iraq was able to import small quantities of chloroethanol and potassium fluoride, precursors for up to six different nerve gases. In 1989, an application was received for a licence to export phosphorus trichloride—a precursor to yet more nerve gas—but there is no record of whether that application was approved or refused. As far as we know, subsequent orders for these and other chemicals were refused, but the records attached to the Scott report are full of gaps. We have no way of knowing which chemicals were sold to Iraq or, more particularly, to what use they were put.

Recent events when UK forces were deployed to the Gulf—when their lives might have been at risk—show the price being paid for the failures of the Conservative Government in these matters. The country is entitled to say that we need protection against a recurrence. I think that the best protection against recurrence is domestic parliamentary scrutiny.

When the Foreign Secretary made his coruscating speech on the Scott report, one sentence summed up the strength and determination of what he had to say. He said:

"Secrecy made this scandal possible."—[Official Report, 26 February 1996; Vol. 272, c. 605.]

The damage caused by secrecy has been acknowledged by the Government in their White Paper on freedom of information, which was published at the end of last year. The opening line reads:

"Unnecessary secrecy in government leads to arrogance . . . and defective decision-making."

A little later, on page 18, it states:

"Commercial confidentiality must not be used as a cloak to deny the public right to know."

There is no reason in principle why Parliament should not exercise scrutiny over arms exports, or exports of dual-use technologies. It happens elsewhere. There is a system to that effect in Sweden—one of the most successful arms manufacturing countries. Commercial confidence does not appear to be breached.

If we can have parliamentary scrutiny of Government communications headquarters and the intelligence services, as we now have by a Committee whose members are drawn from both Houses of Parliament, surely we can have scrutiny of defence and defence-related equipment without any prejudice to the national interest.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. and learned Gentleman's flow. I agree with his point about parliamentary scrutiny. Does he accept that such scrutiny should also extend to information held by the UN weapons inspectorate in Iraq which, it is understood, has considerable knowledge of the individual companies that have, often in breach of the sanctions policy, exported chemical and biological material and weaponry to Iraq—yet it has maintained silence under the cloak of commercial confidentiality?

Mr. Campbell: I certainly agree with that. The hon. Gentleman and I were both in the House when the Scott report was published and discussed. He will recall that my attitude to these matters is similar to his. Transparency is the best protection against such abuse.

To be effective in these matters, Governments cannot act alone. That is why our motion commends the proposal for a European code of conduct on the arms trade, and in particular the Government on their efforts to secure such an agreement during their presidency of the European Union.

The stated objective of the code is to "strengthen the exchange of information relevant to the export of conventional arms with the aim of setting high common standards for arms exports from all EU member states."

Those are laudable objectives but, unhappily, there is a gap between the present text and what I believe to be the essential standards that are required for an effective code. The preamble to the code states that member states are "committed to the maintenance of a strong defence industry".

I do not dispute that for a moment, but in a code of conduct of this kind there should surely be a balance, or an acknowledgement, that the security of all of us in the European Union depends on the protection of human rights, the rule of law and economic and social development, and that a strong defence industry should serve those aims.

The code also proposes measures for the exchange of information and consultation. It provides that member states have to notify one another when they refuse export licences, but gives no details of the information that has to be notified, or indeed the time frame in which it should take place. To be effective, notification must surely include the type of equipment refused a licence and the prospective destination and end user, and the information should be circulated in a prescribed period.

There is a more fundamental and serious omission—there is no provision in the code for countries to notify other countries of licences that are granted. The code requires a country to intimate if it is refused a licence, but there is no obligation to intimate if it has granted a licence. That provision should lie at the heart of a code with such laudable objectives.

The code also proposes export guidelines, but these are ambiguous and leave too much room for subjective interpretation. If there is any ambiguity about whether a prospective military export breaks the guidelines, there should be a presumption that the export will be denied. In the case of ambiguity, the only possible conclusion to reach is that that export should not be entitled to take place.

There are eight guidelines in the code. I shall address three in particular. The signatories bind themselves to take into account human rights and not to export equipment that might be used for internal repression. However, there is a qualification to that obligation. Indeed, it constitutes a loophole. It allows the export of repressive equipment

"if the end-use is judged to be legitimate, such as protection of members of the security forces from violence".

Every state that has ever been guilty of repression will seize on that as a justification. If ever there were part of the code that defeated the code's objectives, it surely lies in that qualification.

Another guideline relates to regional security—there are references to regional security in the code—but the guidelines should be strengthened so that they state explicitly that arms exports will be denied where a proposed sale might have a destabilising effect on a region.

The code also talks about development. There should be an express presumption that arms exports will be denied to countries that spend more on the military than on health and education combined. There should be a presumption to deny exports that undermine the objectives of bilateral and multilateral aid.

There are additional measures that the code should embrace if it is to be effective. The code states that it is the duty of member states to "promote transparency" and the need to "harmonise export licensing procedures" is mentioned. Again, those are laudable objectives to which no one could object, but unhappily there are no measures to ensure that they are realised.

Parliamentary scrutiny, to which I have referred in a domestic context, should be embedded in a code that applies to member states of the European Union. All member states should be obliged to produce an annual report to their Parliaments of the arms export licences that have been granted or denied.

There should be a common system of end-use controls. End use is often the means by which transactions, which on the face of it are legitimate, are rendered illegitimate. These agreements should have the status of legally binding contracts and there should be a follow-up system to check that the end user is the one that was first proposed.

Brokering should be controlled. Member states should establish a central database of arms brokers. It should not be possible for people to create £100 companies with two £1 shares paid up and set themselves up in the United Kingdom, or anywhere else in the European Union, as arms brokers. If people want to practise that trade, they should be obliged to register so that we may know precisely who, in this dark and rather subterranean world, is active. It was perfectly plain that, throughout his inquiry, Lord Justice Scott was often thwarted because of inadequate details of some of the companies that were operating in this area.

Mr. Gordon Prentice (Pendle): The hon. and learned Gentleman called for transparency in these matters. Would that extend to commissions? As he will know, in some arms exports, some 25 per cent. of the value of the export is siphoned off to commissions. That must cause him concern.

Mr. Campbell: I hope that it would cause all hon. Members concern. There are newer Members to whom the hon. Gentleman's point may have been more expressly directed than those present this afternoon. He is absolutely right. Transparency in these matters is essential.

The Council of Ministers of the European Union should review annually the code's implementation and make recommendations for its development or alteration. The results of any such review should be reported to national Parliaments and to the European Parliament for debate.

European Union states are among the leading arms exporters in the world. In 1996, they had 40 per cent. of the world market in arms exports. That entitles us to say that they have a special responsibility to promote restraint and transparency in the transfer of conventional arms and technologies for military use. The aim of setting high common standards for arms exports from all EU member states is one to which I hope all hon. Members find it easy to subscribe.

In our recent history we have seen the consequence of the indiscriminate export of defence and defence-related equipment. Nothing would cause the public more concern, apprehension and even anxiety than the knowledge that there might be a repeat of the circumstances that obtained during the Gulf war—that British forces might find themselves on the wrong end of equipment or of materials, the ability to manufacture which had been provided in a profligate and wholly unrestrained way by the previous Government.

I commend the code as a common EU action that is entirely worth while and much more likely to be effective on a collective rather than an individual basis. The Government deserve the support of the House in their efforts to ensure that such a code is effective and meets the laudable and praiseworthy objectives set out in its preamble.

5.10 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Tony Lloyd): I am not sure whether I have been damned with faint praise or praised with faint damns, but I strongly welcome the motion tabled by the Liberal Democrats. I thank the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) for his courtesy in making me aware of one part of his speech to which I otherwise would not have been able to respond.

Clearly, the Government do not oppose the motion. We welcome the Liberal Democrats' support for our work on the EU code of conduct for arms exports. The proposals which we and the French have tabled will set genuinely high common standards for exports from all EU member states. In so doing, they represent a break from anything that has existed in this area in the past.

Let me set the EU code of conduct on arms sales in a wider context. It is an important measure but it is only one part of the story which the Government have to tell on the regulation of strategic exports. When the Government came to power we were determined to add an ethical dimension to British foreign policy. That, inevitably, has implications across the range of international relations, from greater readiness to raise human rights in bilateral dialogue to support for ethical trading standards.

When talking about ethical trading standards, it is inevitable that they should apply specifically to arms exports. The hon. and learned Gentleman was right when he said that we do not recoil from the idea that we have a strong defence industry. The industry's recent export performance, which has increased under the Government's tight export regime, is one of Britain's success stories. The International Institute for Strategic Studies estimates the United Kingdom's share of global arms exports in 1997 to be 22 per cent. of the global total, about half as much again as that of France and second only to that of the United States.

That is a tribute to the competitiveness of British industry. But it gives us—a point made by the hon. and learned Gentleman—a particular duty to manage arms exports responsibly. We need to ensure that arms exports are in line with UK interests and that jobs and prosperity, although important, are not bought at the cost of human rights abuses or international instability.

The hon. and learned Gentleman referred to the Scott report which partly inspired the Government's policy. There can be no doubt that that report revealed a scandal at the heart of the previous Government. I hope that, with time, that will become the common framework within which Britain judges the matter.

We are also aware that that was not the only scandal at the time. There were other areas in which arms exports were at best lax and at worst simply unacceptable. We were, and are, determined to ensure that the situation described by the Scott report does not happen again.

In February 1997, on the first anniversary of the Scott report's publication, the then Labour Opposition committed themselves to a range of measures designed to achieve that. In our election manifesto we said that we would not permit the sale of arms to regimes which might use them for internal repression or international aggression.

On taking office, one of the Government's first foreign policy priorities was to put that commitment into practice. We initiated a review of the criteria used in considering licence applications for the export of conventional arms and dual-use goods. In July last year, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced the outcome of that, which was that the new criteria would give full weight to the UK's economic, commercial and financial interests. The Government are keenly aware of those.

The defence industry is a strategic part of the UK's economic base. It supports more than 400,000 jobs. Its ability to export is crucial to the viability of the defence industry and to the preservation of those benefits. Defence exports help the national balance of payments and reduce the unit cost of equipment for UK forces. They can also contribute to security and stability by helping to strengthen bilateral and collective defence relationships.

But the criteria—this is the important point about balance—also deliver in full on earlier commitments by stating that licences will be refused where there is a clearly identifiable risk that proposed exports might be used for internal repression, aggressively against another country, or to assert by force a territorial claim. Those are important changes in previous criteria and an important step forward in ensuring that Britain can claim to be staking out a position that balances national interest in terms of jobs and defence with national interest in terms of the promotion of human rights.

On the same day that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced the new criteria for arms exports, he also announced another important step forward—a ban on the export or trans-shipment from the UK of weapons of torture, including such choice items as electric-shock batons and shields, stun guns, gang chains, leg irons, shackles and electric-shock belts. There is clear evidence that such equipment has been used to inflict torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment on our fellow citizens in the world. Thus, another of our pre-election commitments was fulfilled by my right hon. Friend.

Mrs. Maria Fyfe (Glasgow, Maryhill): A firm in my constituency was involved in the sale of weapons of torture, allowing their manufacture to go on in Mexico while the paperwork was done in Britain. How might the Government be able to tackle such a problem?

Mr. Lloyd: My hon. Friend raises a genuinely important point. As with the EU code of practice on conventional arms exports, we are trying initially to work towards a European framework for the banning of sales and exports of weapons of torture, but it is our ambition to internationalise those processes. My hon. Friend may be more aware than I am of the state of legal proceedings in the case to which she refers. I do not know what stage it has reached in the Scottish judicial process, but such prosecutions should have the support of the House. We are considering ways of preventing third-country traffic and the use by British firms of offshore activities as a means of avoiding the impact of British legislation. My hon. Friend will probably recognise that there are serious legal difficulties in enacting such a frame of reference, but she raises an important point.

Similarly, the Labour Government quickly delivered on their commitment to ban the export of anti-personnel land mines. Britain was among the first to sign the Ottawa convention banning anti-personnel land mines internationally. As soon as the parliamentary schedule allows, we aim to introduce legislation that will allow us to ratify the convention.

Having spoken of national controls, I now want to turn to the reasons why the EU code of conduct represents a significant step forward. I note the points raised by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife, but he will appreciate that, in trying to break new ground and internationalise a process for the first time, inevitably we have to work at a pace that is acceptable to all our partners and allies.

Our primary concern was to make sure that national action would not prevent certain regimes from acquiring certain equipment, as we experienced when Britain was undercut by other countries. That would do our own industry a disservice but, more importantly, it does a fundamental disservice to the human rights values in the national code of conduct. Our intention to work for a European code was another of our February 1997 policy pledges and it was reconfirmed by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary when he announced the new criteria.

Progress has been excellent. We started off by talking to the French. The hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife referred to the size of the European market, which accounts for some 40 per cent. of global exports. However, Britain and France account for some 80 per cent. of European exports. As nearly one third of global exports are from Britain and France, the House will understand the logic of beginning the process by talking to the French.

We have received enthusiastic responses from the rest of our European partners and that has been important in generating the will to take the process forward. We have been able to agree on a joint draft text with the French, and it is now being circulated among our other European partners. It is still our aim to achieve agreement during the United Kingdom presidency.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton and Wanstead): I am delighted that the code of practice has received a positive response from other European Union countries and I congratulate the Government on promoting it. However, certain loopholes have been pointed out by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell), among others. Even if the code is signed, will my hon. Friend, together with our European partners, ensure that there will be an on-going process so that those and any future loopholes can be closed?

Mr. Lloyd: I am aware of the specific point to which the hon. and learned Member for North–East Fife and my hon. Friend referred, but we do not believe that it is a loophole as we find it acceptable to provide protection for security forces. However, the sale of certain equipment is acceptable only when it does not infringe the more important criterion that the equipment is not used for the purpose of internal repression. We do not believe that internal repression should be permitted to pursue what might be described as legitimate security operations. We take the opposite view—that legitimate security operations should not take place if they involve internal repression. Our national criteria upon which the European code is based allow for no such loopholes. We shall always look at the form of words and the practice to see whether improvements are required, but it is not our view that there is such a loophole.

Mr. Corbyn: I am glad that my hon. Friend has reached this point. Does he believe that the EU code, when it is fully operational, will prevent Britain from selling arms to Turkey? After all, we provide 10 per cent. of Turkey's armaments. Does my hon. Friend accept that the Turkish army is waging a civil war against the Kurdish people in eastern Turkey and that the most appalling violations of human rights are taking place using equipment manufactured and sold by Britain and almost every other EU country? Does he accept that an arms embargo on Turkey would have a dramatic effect on improving human rights there?

Mr. Lloyd: Neither the national code nor the European code introduces the concept of arms embargoes. As my hon. Friend will be aware, arms embargoes apply to certain countries. For example, the United Nations Security Council recently announced a global ban on arms sales to the former Yugoslavia.

The EU code would not provide a blanket ban. However, it would make our national framework operate on an EU-wide basis that would prevent the sale of arms to any country that fell foul of the criteria in respect of internal repression or external aggression. That is a test which, properly brought to bear, has a material impact on the sale of arms. It already has an impact on the way in which Britain has been conducting such affairs internationally and it will have the same impact at a European level.

The code that will operate at a European level is an elaboration of the common criteria agreed in 1991 and 1992, in line with UK national criteria that are already well defined and well understood. It is also designed to prevent undercutting—the specific point raised by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife. It includes a consultation mechanism providing for partners to circulate to other partners information about denials of export licences and requires a partner to consult the denying partner before deciding whether to issue an export licence for essentially the same goods to the same client. That will bring pressure to bear to prevent undercutting in arms sales that has allowed would-be purchasers to shop around. It gives European defence sales new and increased strength.

Agreement on the code will be a major step forward in the effective international regulation of arms exports. The consultation mechanism that we have proposed breaks significant new ground. Never before has such a mechanism been applied to conventional arms exports and the Government deserve credit for initiating work on the code and pursuing it so vigorously.

Agreement on the code, however, is not the be all and end all. Many complex issues such as strengthening end-use controls cannot adequately be addressed in a document such as the code. We are continuing to work on them at national level as it is important that we get our national framework right. They arise out of the Scott inquiry and, as the House knows, we have not yet received its final report. We want to take those matters forward in international forums. No one is pretending that an EU code of conduct is the final wisdom. We want to internationalise all the processes in which we are engaged and include such issues as end-use control in that European framework. When we have experience of how the code works in practice, we shall to consider what further measures are needed to improve its operation.

We are continuing to work on issues wider than the European framework. A good example is what we are doing in respect of the Wassenaar arrangement on export controls for conventional arms and dual-use goods and technologies. That international framework has the potential to make a valuable contribution to the promotion of responsibility and transparency in transfers of arms and dual-use equipment.

The United Kingdom has been at the forefront of efforts to develop the Wassenaar arrangement so that it can fulfil its potential. We continue to press for an expansion of the reporting categories for conventional arms transfers and we have volunteered to notify export licences denied on grounds of regional stability. Regional stability is an important criterion. It is a totally open reporting system and, in one case, we have already made such information available. We have played a leading role in work on what makes transfers destabilising. As a result, we have firmly established the United Kingdom as one of the most constructive and active players within the Wassenaar arrangement.

The United Kingdom remains determined to strengthen the UN register of conventional arms. That is not an easy process; last year, the UN panel of experts produced a disappointing report, although we endorsed it because we wanted to build on the consensus. The United Kingdom will continue to work individually and with European Union partners to persuade more countries to contribute to the register and to broaden the categories of weapons covered.

The biggest issue on which we want to make progress is illicit trafficking, especially in small arms and light weapons, which were the dominant weapons in virtually all the 49 large-scale conflicts that took place in 1995—the most recent reference point. It is estimated that over 55 per cent. of small arms are traded illicitly, and are often recirculated from one conflict to another. In southern Africa in particular, there is no doubt that weapons were passed from one country to another and used in different conflicts at great human cost.

Graca Machel, widow of the former President of Mozambique, has campaigned on a range of issues, especially illicit arms. She recently told me that the effects of the glut of cheap, easily available small arms have been devastating, not only on her country, but throughout huge parts of the African continent and worldwide.

We are determined to play a role in the fight against small arms proliferation and illicit trafficking, and during our presidency of the EU we have taken forward vigorously work under the EU programme to combat illicit trafficking in conventional arms. The programme could achieve progress for the world.

In February, Britain hosted an international conference on the problems of arms trafficking within and into the EU. The United Kingdom believes that, outside the EU, the programme should focus initially on southern Africa. In May, the Department for International Development will fund a seminar in South Africa that will be run by Saferworld, a British non-governmental organisation, in co-operation with a South African NGO. It should identify practical ways of helping affected regions and, we hope, produce project ideas for funding by donors.

We are also supporting work outside the EU programme. We have previously expressed support for the work of the Government of Mali to secure a moratorium on the import, export and production of light weapons in the Sahara-Sahel region, and are putting money into the project.

At a conference in Oslo yesterday, £300,000 was pledged on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development to the United Nations Development Programme project to co-ordinate and assist security development for the implementation of the moratorium once it is agreed. Those are practical steps.

The hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife spoke about Iraq's chemical and biological weapons programmes. The House was rapt in its attention to recent events, and there can be no doubt about the British Government's present commitment to ensure that the UN inspection system works. We demand the destruction of Iraq's capacity to deliver weapons of mass destruction of any kind—nuclear, biological or chemical.

The hon. and learned Gentleman is right to ask how those programmes came about. He asked about a number of issues, but I cannot give him answers because events took place under the previous Government—we are as tied as Scott was in pursuing them. We must ensure that we move to a regime that stops such events happening again and staining the honour of this nation. That can be achieved in a number of ways—for example, by examining controls of dual-use technology. I shall look carefully into the transfer of equipment to the American Type Culture Collection. We have made inquiries, but I hope that he will forgive me for saying that there was not enough time to provide a substantive answer. We will look into the matter.

The control of dual-use technology is an important and difficult issue, but although national controls are important, we can do better. The Government are determined to make progress on a convention for biological weapons; it would mirror the convention for chemical weapons, which allows for challenge inspection, and could provide a framework within which biological weapons production would be controlled in the same way as chemical weapons production and would ensure that it could not take place. We are working on it, and already have agreement at EU level. We are determined to pursue the matter as far as we can and to bring to the world the benefits of a convention that would ban biological weapons.

I have discussed the matter with the Indian Government through their high commission, and we shall take every opportunity to move the agenda forward to rid the world of these vile chemical and biological weapons.

The handling of defence exports raises difficult questions for foreign, industrial and defence policy. Inevitably, passions are aroused, and there is controversy. Striking the right balance between protecting the United Kingdom's prosperity and ensuring that British exports can be used only for legitimate purposes is important to the Government, who have given a clear commitment that their foreign policy is based on humanitarian principles.

Britain can be proud of the record that we are establishing. I have outlined a record of achievement and of progress in significant areas on which we are building the basis for a much more rational and much more acceptable frame of reference for arms controls. The story, across the board, is of commitments achieved or in hand, and of progress and responsible management of our exports in line with the United Kingdom's interests.

There was a significant break with the past when the Government took power, and I hope that hon. Members will endorse it.

5.36 pm

Mr. David Faber (Westbury): I, too, congratulate the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) on raising this matter. I hope that he will forgive me if I do not follow him down every avenue, but I shall agree with him later in my speech on loopholes in the European code of conduct.

I shall continue the quotation from which the hon. and learned Member derived one line. The first paragraph of the declaration that forms part of the draft code of conduct states:

"EU member states are committed to the maintenance of a strong defence industry which is a strategic part of their industrial base as well as their defence effort. They recognise that defence exports can contribute to international stability by strengthening bilateral and collective defence relationships in accordance with the inherent right of self defence recognised by the UN Charter."

I endorse those views.

Article 51 of the UN charter clearly states the right of all nations to self-defence, and Conservative Members respect the right of other countries, as sovereign states, to protect their independence and exercise their right to self-defence. That is why I believe that a properly regulated arms trade is entirely legitimate. The responsible exporting of defence equipment to our friends and to our allies makes an important contribution to world peace and stability. It deters the expansionist aspirations of unfriendly and aggressive regimes.

As we have heard from the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife and the Minister, the latest instance of the need for defence equipment was during the recent

United Nations operation, which was reinforced so well by British forces in the Gulf and elsewhere, to secure Saddam Hussein's agreement over weapons inspections in Iraq. Hon. Members saw only a few weeks ago the impressive range of military technologies that is at the disposal of our troops in the Gulf. It is a tribute to them and to the British defence industry that they were and remain so well prepared for military action.

Britain's defence industry is a success story. It is the second largest exporter in the world—second only to the United States. It takes the largest world market share of any British industry, and supports more than 415,000 jobs, 140,000 of which are directly dependent on defence exports.

The industry is the biggest contributor from exports to the Treasury—70 per cent. of defence production is for the export market.

In 1995, against stiff competition, the United Kingdom won export contracts worth some £5 billion, and in 1997 the figure rose to £5.5 billion, a record of which we can be justly proud. The value of our exports means that the cost of equipment for UK forces is reduced, and that the nation's essential technology base is secured. Most of the equipment supplied to Britain's armed forces comes from Britain's defence industry. The Ministry of Defence has estimated that British arms exports save it £300 million a year on what it needs to buy.

That is the constructive view of the Ministry of Defence, but we sometimes wonder whether it is also the view of the Foreign Secretary and the Foreign Office. When the Foreign Secretary came to power, he initially tried to improve his standing in his party by refusing a couple of small export licences to Indonesia: a decision which apparently infuriated the President of the Board of Trade. Other Foreign Office attempts to restrict arms exports to Indonesia have been stopped by the Ministry of Defence. As a result, the Foreign Secretary has understandably directed his efforts towards Europe, and much has been made of his efforts to persuade our European partners to sign up to the code of conduct.

What does the Ministry of Defence make of these machinations at the Foreign Office? I am sorry that the Under–Secretary of State for Defence, the hon. Member for Warley (Mr. Spellar), has had to leave the Chamber, because it would have been interesting to hear from him. Only last month, the MOD issued a press release boasting of a 10 per cent. increase in Britain's arms exports, and published a Green Paper, "Defence Diversification: Getting the most out of defence technology", which contained proposals for a defence diversification agency. Has the Foreign Secretary had a chance to read it? Paragraph 3 states:

"The Government said in its election manifesto: 'We support a strong UK defence industry, which is a strategic part of our industrial base as well as our defence effort.'"

The Opposition agree with that. The Green Paper also states that the Government

"believes in a strong defence against the new security challenges that face this country and its Allies in the post-Cold War world".

We agree with that, too. It says that whatever changes emerge as a result of the strategic defence review,

"one underlying reality is that a strong defence will continue to require a strong defence industry."

Paragraph 5 states:

"This country derives great benefits from a healthy defence industry—not only from being able to meet most of the equipment requirements of our own armed forces from domestic sources, but also from the wider industrial benefits including the economic and employment advantages that derive from the export of defence equipment."

The Minister of State touched on that at the end of his speech. I understand that that is also the view of the recognised organisations within the trade union movement.

Paragraph 10 of the Green Paper states:

"However, it is widely recognised that the defence industries of Europe must restructure if they are to meet the fiercely competitive challenge posed by the very large corporations that have already formed as a result of a series of mergers of US defence contractors. The impact of this process on the UK defence industry is yet to be seen, but our defence industry is highly competitive and is in a strong position to play a leading role in the restructuring process."

The Government are right to be concerned. While we have 25 per cent. of the current world market, the United States, with an industry 10 times the size of ours, already has 38 per cent., and that is before it has begun to flex its muscles in the export market, having always relied heavily on its internal market.

What role does the Foreign Secretary envisage his ethical foreign policy will play in helping the Ministry of Defence and the defence industry to meet the growing competitive challenge from abroad? The Green Paper says that one of the roles of the new defence diversification agency will be to encourage "companies active in servicing defence needs . . . to exploit potential new opportunities for their products and technologies in the UK and overseas military and civil markets."

I hope that the Foreign Secretary will do what he can to achieve that aim.

The Green Paper contains six half-page reports describing the success that arms manufacturers and the MOD's Defence Evaluation and Research Agency have had applying military technology to civilian uses. In fact, the entire Green Paper is one big advertisement for Britain's defence industry.

There is, therefore, conclusive proof that the Ministry of Defence has largely ignored the Foreign Secretary's push for a so-called ethical foreign policy, and that he has little influence in the Government and especially in Departments that should be working closely together on Foreign Office-related business. [Interruption.] The Government Whip, the hon. Member for Doncaster, North (Mr. Hughes), tut-tuts, but an article in The Spectator informed us last week that

"George Robertson has gone completely native at Defence. He talks about 'his boys', and Robin Cook doesn't have a clue what's going on half the time, because the Foreign Office only knows what the MoD chooses to tell it."

This may be a good moment to mention the £2 billion arms deal that the Government are planning with South Africa, which we read about at the weekend. It is primarily for submarines, but is part of a wider arms deal involving aircraft, frigates, tanks and helicopters. Will the Minister confirm that the Government have agreed to repay the purchase price of the submarines—some £200 million—as "industrial participation"? Is that not a clear example of an arms-for-trade deal such as the Foreign Secretary opposed vociferously when he was in opposition? Is this the same Foreign Secretary who said that aid or trade should never again become entangled with arms sales?

The Green Paper says that, within the new criteria to be used in considering arms export licence applications,

"the responsible export of defence equipment will continue to bring benefit to the British economy."

In fact, little could be further from the truth. In reality, the Government have failed to process hundreds of export licence applications from British companies that are responding to perfectly legitimate orders from abroad, at a time when the Government's defence export service predicts that international demand will decline by 15 per cent. in the next two years. That is bad news for British business, most notably the defence industry.

The Select Committee on Defence heard only yesterday that the industry is gravely concerned that the policy reviews have created a backlog that is resulting in delays of up to nine months in some cases. That could allow foreign competitors to steal business that would otherwise have gone to British companies.

Export licences to export strategic goods are issued by the President of the Board of Trade: the export control organisation in the Department of Trade and Industry is the licensing authority. They are issued under part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order, otherwise known as the "military list". The ECO either deals with applications direct or circulates them to other Departments with an interest—most notably, the Foreign Office, the Ministry of Defence or the Department for International Development.

I shall give the House an idea of the number of applications involved. Between 3 May 1997 and 6 March 1998, 6,918 applications were circulated to the Foreign Office, 8,673 to the Ministry of Defence and just 783 to the Department for International Development. That is a great number of potential orders for British manufacturers on which a great number of British jobs depend.

In response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Reigate (Mr. Blunt) on 25 March, the Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry confirmed that, on 6 February 1998, 1,586 applications were outstanding, some going back to 1 September 1998. The ECO measures its performance against two stated aims: to provide a substantive response to applications that are circulated to other Departments within 20 working days, and to provide a response within 10 working days to those that are dealt with internally by the DTI.

When the Government took office on 1 May, the ECO was successfully hitting those targets. A remarkable 97 per cent. of non-circulated applications were dealt with within the 10-day period, and 69 per cent. of circulated applications were dealt with within 20 days. Since the Government came to power, and particularly since the DTI has had to consider the criteria set out by the Foreign Secretary on 28 July, that record has plummeted. By 6 February—which is the end of the last four-week period for which the DTI has been able to give me figures—the success rate for non-circulated cases had fallen from 97 to 61 per cent., and for circulated applications from 69 to 52 per cent. In the previous month, the latter figure had been as low as 41 per cent.

That is a disgrace. It represents an administrative logjam of scandalous proportions, and is a kick in the teeth for exporters already under pressure from the high level of the pound, as presided over by the Government. That is not the fault of those working in the Departments, but they have been thrown into a state of administrative confusion by the so-called ethical dimension of the Foreign Secretary's new policy.

The greatest irony is that, according to the little evidence we have, there is no noticeable rise in the number of applications that have been turned down in that period. For all the Government's rhetoric, there has been virtually no change in the number of applications being refused since 1 May. It is not surprising that the Government refuse to publish the figures on the number of licences that have been refused. The Minister for Small Firms, Trade and Industry was only too happy to publish figures of licences refused by the previous Government up to 1 May, but from now on, she tells us, rather grandly,

"the Government will report annually on the state of strategic export controls and their application since 2 May."—[Official Report, 12 December 1997; Vol. 302, c. 722.]

We can be sure that actual figures will be noticeable by their omission.

When I asked the Foreign Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development how many applications they had recommended for refusal, I received a standard reply from all three, which included the sentence:

"The advice that is given by these departments to DTI falls into the category of internal discussion and advice, the disclosure of which would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion and which is being withheld under exemption number 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information."—[Official Report, 27 March 1998; Vol. 309, c. 310-11.]

How very convenient. So much for open government.

Slowly but surely, anecdotal evidence is being replaced by hard facts, as increasing numbers of companies find that they are missing out on legitimate orders. The Minister may recall the case raised recently by my right hon. and learned Friend the shadow Foreign Secretary, involving a British company that lost an order to its competitors in Scandinavia for the supply of blue helmets to UNHCR personnel in Kabul. That firm has received no further approaches for equipment from the UNHCR.

Perhaps the Minister can confirm that a small company was approached to supply four machine guns to a Spanish shipyard, which were in turn to be fitted to four patrol boats and then to be sold to the Colombian navy to fight the drug barons in that country. That involved a thorny ethical decision, to be sure; but did not the Minister refuse the application, only to be overruled by the Foreign Secretary?

How ironic it is that, only last night, the Foreign Secretary made a welcome statement about resources for mine clearance. The money is certainly welcome, but it would appear that United Kingdom companies will not be allowed to participate in the mine clearance campaign. Recently, because of the inordinate time that it took to process its application, one of the leading mine-clearing device producers in the country lost a substantial order for mine-clearing equipment to its principal Scandinavian competitor. More ironically still, its competitors in Sweden and Finland do not even have to apply for such a licence, as the machinery is dealt with under the heading of agricultural machinery. So much for a level playing field throughout Europe.

On the issue of licensing, I am sorry that the Minister was not able to enlighten us about when the promised White Paper—which we hope will lead to primary legislation to reform the 1939 legislation—will be published. There is clearly a will in the DTI to proceed with such legislation as soon as possible, but I believe that the Minister himself recently confirmed that there would be no legislation in the current Session. It would be helpful to have an indication of the timing.

Let me now deal with the proposed EU code of conduct, of which the Minister gave details. It was constantly referred to by the Foreign Secretary when his party was in opposition, and, as we have heard, is now a central plank of the Government's EU presidency. As has been said, we already have eight EU common criteria for arms exports, the first seven of which were agreed at the Luxembourg Council in June 1991; the eighth was added at Lisbon in 1992. The previous Government were instrumental in drawing them up, and always supported them.

Some say that the criteria are too lax. At the risk of delaying the House, let me remind hon. Members of some of their contents. They refer to:

"The respect of human rights in the country of final destination.

The internal situation in the country of final destination, as a function of the existence of tensions of internal armed conflicts.

The preservation of regional peace, security and stability.

The national security of the member states . . .

The behaviour of the buyer country with regard to the international community, as regards in particular its attitude to terrorism, the nature of its alliances, and respect for international law.

The existence of a risk that the equipment will be diverted within the buyer country or re-exported under undesirable conditions."

Those criteria are clear and forceful; the only way in which to improve them is to introduce a means of enforcement. We now have a new United Kingdom code, and we are to have a new European code as well. The Minister recently referred to developing the EU criteria, and today he described the new code as an elaboration of them.

In a written answer on 2 February, and again today, the hon. Gentleman made much of the so-called "no undercut" mechanism. Having read the draft code carefully, however, I must disagree with him, and agree strongly with what was said by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife. At the beginning of my speech, I quoted the first paragraph of the declaration by EU member states. Opposition Members heartily support the Government's commitment to a strong defence industry, and to countries' right to self-defence, but many outside the House must be bitterly disappointed, having been given the impression by the Government that the code would sound the death knell of the European defence industry.

The draft code is considerably weaker than the Minister has suggested when it comes to undercutting. The relevant part of paragraph D of the declaration states:

"Before any member state grants a licence which has been denied by another member state for an essentially identical transaction within the last three years it will first consult the member State which issued the denial. If following consultations the member State nevertheless decides to grant a licence, it will notify the member State issuing the original denial giving a detailed explanation of its reasoning."

Although the code is supposed to introduce a common standard in the assessment of whether an arms export order should be processed, there is nothing in it to compel member states not to take up contracts previously turned down by others.

If a member state decides to undercut another, there will be a confidential bilateral meeting between those concerned. If the undercutting state decides to go ahead with the export contract, all it will have to do is confirm to the other state its reasons for so doing. Such a statement would remain confidential between the states concerned. Clearly, once a fellow member state has informed its partners of a decision to refuse a licence, it must then trust to the integrity of its partners. That is in stark contrast to what the Foreign Secretary told my hon. Friend the Member for South-West Devon (Mr. Streeter) on 10 February at Question Time. He said:

"I assure the hon. Gentleman that if any country proposed to take up a contract that we had denied, we would pursue the matter through all 14 member states."—[Official Report, 10 February 1998; Vol. 305, c. 127.]

We might well do that, but there is no provision in the draft EU code for other states in Europe to do likewise. Indeed—ironically—if undercutting becomes commonplace, member states are less likely to turn down arms contracts in the first place.

No one doubts the integrity of our partners, but different countries have different priorities for their defence trade and national interests. France's defence industry is heavily state-subsidised, and we should bear in mind the fact that almost universal public condemnation of its decision to carry out nuclear tests did not stop it doing so.

As well as issues of transparency and lack of ambiguity—rightly mentioned by the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife—the Liberal Democrat motion refers to human rights. As I said earlier, that issue featured strongly both in the last Government's guidelines and in the common criteria agreed in Luxembourg and Lisbon. The draft EU code, however, is ambiguous at best, and at worst weak. Paragraph 2 is full of caveats concerning internal repression. I will not repeat the section already mentioned by the Minister, but a later section states:

"In some cases, the use of force by a government within its own borders does not constitute internal repression. The use of such force by governments is legitimate in some cases, e.g. to preserve law and order against terrorists or other criminals. However force may only be used in accordance with international human rights standards."

That is undoubtedly true, but, whether the Minister likes it or not, it is a loophole in what the Government claim they are trying to achieve.

Most astonishingly of all, the next section states:

"The attitude of recipient states towards relevant human rights instruments should also be taken into account although non-adherence should not preclude countries from receiving arms."

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Is the hon. Gentleman saying that the Government should not fight terrorism, or is he saying that, if they do, they should have no recourse to international law? In either case, the Government disagree fundamentally with the position of Her Majesty's Opposition.

Mr. Faber: Of course I am not saying that; I am saying exactly the opposite. I entirely agree that, in many instances, it is necessary to sell such arms. As the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife pointed out, many countries have traditionally used that as an excuse, and will continue to do so. However, there is no instrument in the draft code of conduct to enforce the code, as such. Contrary to what the Minister says, it does not represent a step forward in terms of enforcement from the EU common criteria agreed in Luxembourg and Lisbon. The final statement that strikes me as an open invitation to many countries to use the excuse available to them.

I and, I am sure, the House look forward to the Foreign Secretary's report, which is due in the summer, on the impact of his policy on arms exports. I hope that it contains an apology to the hundreds of contractors whose exports have been stalled in the past few months, and I hope that he remembers to mention the exports to South Africa and Indonesia that he has approved. I hope that the Government and the Foreign Office, in particular, will give serious thought to a sensible balance between support for our own industry and the crucial need, agreed by all hon. Members, to uphold basic human rights throughout the world.

5.59 pm

Ms Tess Kingham (Gloucester): In debating the international arms trade, it is important not to engage in sterile discussions about profit and loss statements, balance sheets and technicalities. We should consider not the recipients of arms—the military—but the civilians—the ordinary women, men and children who are most touched by the arms trade. Some 84 per cent. of all casualties are civilians, and they are the people on whom I should like the debate to focus.

I should make it clear at once that I am not a pacifist. I believe in a country's legitimate right to self-defence, and I have no difficulty with countries purchasing arms for such use. The area in which my constituency is situated relies greatly on the defence industry. I stress "defence industry". Before being elected to Parliament, I worked for 10 years for international aid agencies. Much of the work centred on areas in conflict, and I witnessed, or was told about, weapons that were sold by European countries and used not for defence but to wreak havoc and terror on civilian populations.

With War on Want in Mozambique, I saw people with their noses and lips cut off by the Renamo rebels who had shot, raped and looted, using weapons that had been supplied through South Africa and Europe. With Oxfam in El Salvador, I spoke to survivors of the Rio Sul Lempa massacre. That was a horrendous atrocity in which more than 200 women, children and old men, with nowhere to flee, were massacred on the banks of a river. I am told that, on that day, the water ran red. The El Salvador army was implicated in that massacre, and the previous British Government had given it military assistance. I was ashamed. European countries have continued to supply arms to Morocco, which illegally occupied Western Sahara in 1974 and used napalm on its people, attracting the condemnation of the international court and a UN resolution against the occupation. Those experiences motivated me to become involved in politics and today's debate is close to my heart.

I am well aware of the role of European countries and their arms export policies in conflicts such as those that I have outlined. In my work before I came to Parliament, I came to realise that, as the Minister has said, small arms do much damage throughout the world and cause much instability. The small arms industry is not of major economic significance to Europe. It has a low value and few jobs depend on it, but small arms cause devastation. I was in Albania for last year's elections, and at that time a rifle could be bought for $15. The proliferation of small arms makes that country volatile. I have recently returned from Rwanda. During the outbreak of genocide in 1994, people were killed with machetes and hoes but small arms were used to corral people, to contain them, before they were killed. It was mechanised, systematic murder.

It is estimated that 6,500 people a week are killed by small arms, and I welcome the Minister's statement about their control. There is no doubt that the irresponsible sale of arms to unscrupulous regimes costs civilian lives. It also takes a vast amount of public money to clear up the mess that is left by conflicts. There are currently more than 30 conflicts in the world, and the resulting damage consumes billions in international aid, and the donors include Britain. Such money is used for emergency relief, post-conflict reconstruction and peacekeeping. In 1995, the estimated cost of that was £2 billion.

There is no doubt that stricter controls on arms transfers are long overdue. That is why I am proud to be a Labour Member. My Government took action on this issue soon after they came to power. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced an ethical code for arms sales in July, just two months after Labour came to power. Our new ethical code is to staunch the flow of weapons to countries that use them for internal repression or external aggression. The Government are also committed to an EU code of conduct on arms transfers. The Minister outlined much of that code, which I welcome, but I want to make sure that it has teeth. I am reassured by the Minister's statement, but several areas must be addressed and tightened up if the code is to have an impact.

The first issue is parliamentary scrutiny. As we have heard, the Scott report concluded that, if exports to Iraq had been subject to such scrutiny, they would not have been approved. European Union countries should produce annual reports on arms sales, and we should press for a comprehensive EU register of arms.

Ms Julia Drown (South Swindon): Should annual reports cover just strategic arms exports or should they cover all arms exports? Furthermore, in examining such annual reports, should we not assess the whole cost of arms, including public investment in research and matters such as export credits and offsets, because the absence of such costs makes arms and defence appear much cheaper than they are?

Ms Kingham: I welcome my hon. Friend's intervention. Annual reports should be comprehensive, but I am sure that the Minister will respond to that. Perhaps we should look at those matters in more detail. I should like to see such reports and a register of arms being debated in the House, but Parliament should at least be notified of proposed exports to sensitive countries. As we have heard, that happens in Sweden and it does not seem to cause much difficulty in the parliamentary process there. Perhaps the matter could be investigated under freedom of information proposals.

The second area of major concern relates to end use and brokering. There is a major loophole and an urgent need for arms brokers to be subjected to national and European Union scrutiny. EU countries could establish a central database of arms brokers with all proposed transactions subject to licensing. The EU should also have a common system of legally binding procedures on end use. There are too many loopholes, some of which are to be found in the Channel Islands, and they must be closed.

Many arms deals by companies and individuals in the EU involve the transfer of arms via third countries. The weapons never pass through the EU. In 1994, the company Mil Tec in the Isle of Man sent arms from Israel and Albania to Rwanda. That was in defiance of a UN arms embargo and those weapons were used at a time of genocide when up to 1 million people were butchered. There was blatant contravention of the embargo. There must be an EU agreement on a standard mechanism for implementing EU, Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe and United Nations arms embargoes because, at the moment, there is no such mechanism.

Much of the small arms trade is conducted outside the EU. The Minister has spoken about illegal trade so I need not cover that ground again. I was encouraged by his statements on that issue. I hope that the Government will press hard for an international code of conduct on arms transfers and that they will support the Arias initiative. We should also use our persuasive powers on countries that wish to join the EU or to enter into formal agreements with it so that they are responsible in their legal arms exports and will clamp down on the many illegal arms sales in their territories, especially those of small arms. The UK is the second major exporter of arms. We have already taken the lead in Europe by pushing for an EU code of conduct on arms, which I fully support.

With the memory of the victims of conflict whom I have seen and spoken to over the years ever fresh in my mind, I sincerely hope and believe that the new Labour Government will address the concerns that I have raised today. A strong and bold code of conduct on arms transfers will leave a legacy of hope and peace for millions around the world whose lives are blighted by the fear of conflict. As we enter a new millennium, I can think of nothing more appropriate or worth while for the Government to do.

6.9 pm

Mr. Nick Harvey (North Devon): I start by congratulating my hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) on the characteristically lucid and precise way in which he opened the debate on a subject which, for too many years, has been dark and shadowy in terms of parliamentary scrutiny. I agree entirely with him that we can and must recognise the change in attitude on the part of the British Government on the issues since the change in regime last May.

I join my hon. and learned Friend in paying tribute to the Foreign Secretary in coming forward with an ethical foreign policy—a worthwhile initiative, which will be judged over time by what it is able to achieve. The initiative was welcome and it struck a different tone and headed in a different direction from that to which we had become accustomed under the previous regime.

Government Back Benchers, such as the hon. Member for Gloucester (Ms Kingham), can bring to the subject not only personal knowledge, but a different point of view from those we have seen and heard from Government Back Benchers when the Conservatives were in power. A combination of the initiative on the part of the Foreign Secretary and Back Benchers with a different perspective will, over time, bring about a significant change from what we have seen in the past.

My hon. and learned Friend said that it was now two years since the Scott report was published and debated in this House. Anyone who was there that afternoon will recall clearly the drama of the occasion, and the fact that the Foreign Secretary—who was then in the Opposition—and my hon. and learned Friend had, I think, three hours in which to digest several volumes. None the less, they were able to pinpoint some key facts which, after two years, have not been treated as seriously as they should have been. I wish to refer to the matter of accountability to this House—a matter that I hope that the new Government and the Leader of the House will address. We must make changes to ensure that such things can never happen again.

For the benefit of those who were not here, and as a reminder to those who were, let me say that particular condemnation fell on the head of the former right hon. Member for Bristol, West, William Waldegrave, who was found by Scott and the inquiry to have wilfully misled this House. In particular, it was said that letters that he had written did not seem "to correspond with reality". His claim that the answers he had been giving to questions and in letters and public statements, in which he denied that any change in the Government policy's towards arms exports had taken place, was "so plainly inapposite as to be incapable of being sustained by serious argument."

This was

"misleading to anyone who does not know the substance of the decision."

I recognise fully that Ministers in this Government are not likely to find themselves engaging in the same sort of activities, but it is a point of procedural and constitutional necessity that changes must be made to prevent any member of any Government ever getting involved in that sort of concealment and subterfuge.

As Members of Parliament, we depend on certain things, such as straight answers to parliamentary questions. Occasionally, one does not put the right question and one may not receive an informative answer, but one expects a straight answer. It was found that "answers to PQs, in both Houses of Parliament, failed to inform Parliament of the current state of Government policy . . . This failure was deliberate and was an inevitable result of the agreement between the three junior Ministers" who had set out on a policy of concealing from both Houses of Parliament the truth about what had been going on. There was specific condemnation of what they had done. The giving of answers to parliamentary questions, the report said,

"is not simply a part of the game . . . played for the benefit of and under unexpressed rules understood by the Parliamentary players. The answers are also an important medium by which information about government and its activities is made available to the public. It is to be noticed that the respects in which the answers to the PQs about Government policy on defence exports to Iraq were inadequate and misleading were also respects in which some of the letters written in response to correspondence from members of the public were inadequate and misleading."

[Mr. Nick Harvey]

The report concluded:

"In the circumstances, the Government statements made in 1989 and 1990 about policy on defence exports to Iraq consistently failed . . . to comply with the standard set by paragraph 27 of the Questions of Procedure for Ministers and, more important, failed to discharge the obligations imposed by the constitutional principle of Ministerial accountability."

That was a damning condemnation of the previous Government and members of it who, acting in deliberate and wilful collusion, had concealed from the House the details of what they were doing.

Mr. Paul Tyler (North Cornwall): My hon. Friend is performing a helpful and important function for the House. Does he share my disappointment that, apart from a political eunuch—a Whip who cannot speak, or even listen to this attack—there is not a single Conservative Member in the Chamber? Is there some way that we can be sure that those very important lessons for the Conservative party are taken back to those who should be listening?

Mr. Harvey: I agree that it is shocking, but by no means surprising, that there are precious few Conservatives here to defend the record of the previous Government, but I hope that we shall be able to channel back to them the opinion of the House on their performance at that time.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Fife is known to have been a sportsman of some note, and it was characteristically sporting of him not to lay about the Conservative party because he felt that it was not here to answer. I shall show no such restraint. I have bitter recollections of a number of campaigns in which I have engaged over time on those matters which seem to bear out precisely the account of the Conservatives' activities that the Scott report highlighted.

I have been involved for some time in the campaign to prevent the export of Hawk aircraft to Indonesia. I listened with some astonishment to the words of the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) on this point. [Interruption.] I welcome the hon. Gentleman's return to the Chamber. It was astonishing that he condemned the Government for the export of arms to Indonesia since the election last year. While I would not wish to query the validity of what he said, had I been wearing spectacles, I would have wiped them to check who was speaking. It was almost as astonishing as listening to Conservatives lambast the appointment of councillors to quangos or listening to the Conservatives' environment team complain about the construction of houses in the countryside—a policy that they started.

Mr. Faber: It is probably not the hon. Gentleman's glasses which need wiping—perhaps he needs to turn up his hearing aid. I pointed out that, when in opposition—with the notable exception of the right hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), who took a more pragmatic view—the Labour party was vigorously opposed to arms sales to Indonesia. Since they came to power, the Government have changed their mind and have endorsed the very same sales—presumably because they have access to the same information and security advice at the Foreign Office as we had when we were in government.

Mr. Harvey: I take the hon. Gentleman's point, but two wrongs do not make a right. The new Government are wrong to have sanctioned those sales of Hawk aircraft to Indonesia, and any other sales that have taken place. They have argued that the contractual position bequeathed to them by the Conservative party meant that it would have been extremely expensive to cancel the sales, but I still say that they should have done it.

The hon. Member for Westbury looked at the international competitive market in arms and argued that, if we did not get stuck in to make sure that we got our share, others would take the market away. That is exactly the same argument used centuries ago about slavery—we could not possibly afford to get out of the slave trade because others would take the market.

Sale of weapons to Indonesia cannot be justified. Under the Conservative Government, I attended meetings between representatives of Tapol, the campaign for human rights in Indonesia and East Timor, and Ministers from various Departments. The discussions were, frankly, farcical—despite being shown photographs of tanks that had been built in the midlands being used to quell crowds with Hawk aircraft flying overhead, Ministers argued that arms exported from Britain had not been used directly to suppress the citizens of Indonesia. Water cannon from this country have been used for the same purpose.

I could barely believe the discussions—the Ministers seemed supremely indifferent about whether it could be proven that British arms had been used. I believe that the fact that the regime was capable of such acts, and willing to use arms no matter where they had come from, renders Indonesia a market in which we should not be interested and to which we should not make any endeavour to sell.

Mr. Richard Allan (Sheffield, Hallam): Is it not precisely such issues that cause so much concern about loopholes? The use of water cannon or armoured cars for crowd control could be justified on the ground of security force self-defence, which would enable such sales to continue.

Mr. Harvey: My hon. Friend is right. Such arguments can be constructed precisely to justify the circumstances that I have been describing. I echo the appeal of other hon. Members that the Government closely consider that point, perhaps giving the legitimate use of self-defence argument an alternative form of expression.

In reflecting on the record of the previous Government, one cannot help but recall the Pergau dam saga, in which the confusion between aid, trade and arms sales was exposed most horribly. We must take such issues into account in establishing whether the Government's ethical policy is a success.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: Does my hon. Friend remember that the decision about the Pergau dam was the subject of a successful application by a non-governmental organisation for judicial review in the High Court? Does that not reflect the bankruptcy of the previous Government's policy?

Mr. Harvey: It certainly does, and it emphasises the point that Parliament must have an effective means by which to consider those issues. I know that Governments have sometimes felt that some issues are so sensitive and confidential that it is not appropriate or possible for Parliament to discuss them, but I do not believe that that argument should be tolerated in those matters.

The Prime Minister has appointed a Committee comprising Members of both Houses of Parliament to scrutinise very sensitive issues of national security, so I believe that an equivalent mechanism can and must be found to consider arms sales. Moreover, as has been suggested, there must be detailed reports to Parliament.

During the previous Parliament, I tried on several occasions, as trade and industry spokesman for the Liberal Democrats, to pursue at oral questions the matter of the export of electric-shock batons. I can still hear the bland responses of Ministers, who said that my questions were irrelevant, impertinent and not a matter of legitimate interest. They claimed that nothing untoward had taken place, and refused to give informative answers or recognise the fact that Britain could in any way be condemned for its part in helping brutal regimes to suppress civilians.

I also recall that, in the Argentinian conflict, there was considerable evidence that British troops were confronted by enemies bearing arms that had come from the United Kingdom and France—such was the mess into which the previous Government's policies inevitably led us.

I do not pretend that the Foreign Secretary has set himself an easy task in mapping out an ethical policy. For example, all trading nations are guilty in their attitude towards China, which represents a huge, appetising and lucrative market. All those countries proceed with great caution, not wishing to offend China and imperil their chances of exploiting the future market—

Mr. Allan: Including newspaper proprietors.

Mr. Harvey: Most assuredly including newspaper proprietors. By treating the regime in China with kid gloves, we shall make it increasingly difficult to take a stand in the future. Unless we take a strong line at the outset, it will become more and more difficult, as contracts are signed and supply arrangements are made, to intervene.

When the period between 1979 and 1997 is written about in the history books, many facts that were hidden or misunderstood will begin to emerge. When people in this and other countries tell their stories, it will be not only Mr. William Waldegrave who will stand condemned, but many others, including prominent individuals from the Conservative regime. It will be seen that, for all its proud claims about its achievements, the Conservative party collectively acted in a very untoward way. The House and the public would not have wanted or approved of some of the diplomatic efforts to secure trading advantages for this country. There will be a stain on the Conservative party and this country when the world comes to understand what the previous Government presided over and, in some cases, actively colluded in, and gained profit from.

I congratulate my hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Fife on raising this matter. We encourage the new Government in their efforts to build a meaningful ethical policy and in their work on the code of conduct. Serious warnings have been given, which we urge the Government to address. I hope that the message will be taken to the Leader of the House that our procedures need to be reformed, so that the House can, in some way, get to grips with those issues. We must ensure that no Government of any colour can carry on as the previous Government did—there must be a mechanism for preventing what went on then.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): It is a pleasure to follow the hon. Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey). I congratulate the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) on what he said, and on choosing this subject for debate.

Times have assuredly changed. If such a debate had occurred a year ago, Conservative Ministers would have obfuscated, refused even to consider the human rights implications of arms sales, and become hysterical at any mention of the Scott report and sales of arms to Iraq, Iran or anywhere else.

I welcome the Government's initiative in stopping the export of weapons of torture, in moving so rapidly to eliminate anti-personnel land mines from the world stage, and in at least making a start down the road to the European Union code of conduct on arms sales. That code rightly mentions human rights, parliamentary scrutiny, end-use control, implementation of embargoes, brokering and legal status, all of which are important issues.

We should be slightly careful when we talk about controlling what happens to arms sales. I have a vivid memory of 11 September 1973, when British-built planes and Land Rovers and British-made equipment were used by the Chilean army to murder the elected President. All that equipment was sold to democratically elected Governments: the Christian Democrat Government of President Frei before 1970, and the Popular Unity Government of President Allende after that.

Those weapons would have fitted in with any of the criteria that we have discussed. The Chilean army was not willing to accept the democratic will of its people, and staged a coup that was successful in the sense that it murdered the President and ushered in a reign of terror that lasted for a very long time and cost the lives of very many people.

We must remember that arms are made to kill people, and if they are used to abuse human rights anywhere in the world, those who have made them and those who have caused them to be made and exported should consider their role carefully.

Last night, the House of Commons was invaded—in the nicest way possible—by more than 750 people who came to an Amnesty International-sponsored meeting on the situation in Algeria. The meeting was so successful that we had to organise two overflow rooms.

What is going on in Algeria is absolutely horrific. I do not pretend that an arms embargo on Algeria would solve the whole problem there, but the monumental arms sales have exacerbated the situation. Someone, somewhere along the line, promoted the sale of the weapons that are now being used in probably the most horrific conflict anywhere in the world. The percentage of Algeria's population that has been killed in the present conflict is higher than that of Britain's civilian population killed in the whole of the second world war, from 1939 to 1945.

On 8 March, we held a memorial meeting, in Committee Room 10, on the 10th anniversary of the chemical bombardment of Halabja. We showed a film, survivors spoke, and people described the continuing loss of life in Halabja as a result of the use of chemical and biological weapons. The film was deeply disturbing. We must recognise that the precursor chemicals that were used to manufacture the weapons, the manufacturing ability, the delivery systems and the aircraft, all came from western Europe.

[Mr. Jeremy Corbyn]

Many Members of Parliament at the time constantly asked questions about those sales and exports, and about the denial that anything was going on. The United Nations inspection team in Iraq apparently knows the identity of all the companies that manufactured and exported fertiliser-making equipment, which much of the offending material was sold as before being used for the foul purposes to which it was put.

A veil of secrecy is being used to protect those companies and the people who work for them, but I am not sure that they should be protected. The people of Halabja were not protected: they are still dying, and the pollution continues. The least that we can do is to give what support we can to humanitarian and medical agencies that are trying to get help there to deal with the cancers and the many deaths from other causes.

Arms exports to Nigeria have gone on for a long time, despite the endless military coups, the abuse of democracy and the execution—more like state murder—of Ken Saro-Wiwa and other Ogoni activists. The United Nations seems none the less to condone and support Nigeria in a quasi-peacekeeping role elsewhere. We should be careful. The weapons embargo on Nigeria is important, but so is Nigeria's recognition, or lack of it, of human rights.

I have in front of me a picture with the caption "Butcher of Jakarta comes to London", inviting people to a protest rally this weekend. President Suharto is visiting Britain at the moment. I have before me an Amnesty International report on East Timor, where 200,000 people have been killed.

Time after time, when hon. Members raised the issue of the sale of Hawk aircraft, anti-personnel weaponry and other equipment, Tory Ministers told us that they were being used not for internal repression but for external defence. Where is the external threat to Indonesia? Suharto bought the weapons to continue the illegal occupation of East Timor. I am disappointed that the new Government cancelled only some of the export orders for Indonesia that were in train at the time of the general election.

The imposition of a total arms embargo on Indonesia would make a significant difference, but above all it would be seen as a signal to those who have lost friends and relatives in East Timor and are being overflown and bombed by Hawk aircraft that somebody, somewhere in the world, cares about them. It is all very well applauding Jose Ramos Horta and Bishop Belo and awarding them prizes, but if we carry on selling arms to the regime, what is it all for? They want not awards but peace and self-determination.

The situation in Turkey has not been good since the coup in 1980. There is brutal repression of trade unions and human rights organisations, with imprisonment and executions. A major conflict is taking place in Kurdistan, with aerial surveillance, bombardment, the rasing of villages and constant incursions into northern Iraq by the Turkish army.

Human rights abuses in Turkey are well documented, and, indeed, legion. The least we can do is examine the criteria that we apparently support on the sale of weaponry to other countries, and measure Turkey's record against them. Where are the democratic controls, the parliamentary scrutiny, the respect for human rights? Where is the right of the Kurdish people to self-expression, let alone self-determination?

We are keen on banning arms sales to some countries because we are worried about human rights, but we seem perfectly happy, for other geopolitical or commercial reasons, to sell arms to other countries with an equally appalling record. For example, Saudi Arabia is a major purchaser of British arms and equipment, but there is not much discussion about it, even in the media, because we do not want to upset the oil barons of the middle east.

If we are to follow an ethical foreign policy, we must look in the long run at the whole industrial base of the arms trade. In promoting his ethical foreign policy immediately after the general election, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary probably understood very well that there would be tensions among the arms industry, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Foreign Office and others.

The policy enabled those of us who are passionate in the interests of human rights at least to raise the subject, and that is important in itself, but I would prefer it if we could aim for the longer-term objective of ensuring that we have a proper arms conversion agency, to allow the brilliance and skill of those who manufacture weapons of mass destruction, high-quality aircraft and other military equipment to be put to use manufacturing goods for the benefit rather than the destruction of humankind.

We could not achieve a transfer of that entire manufacturing base overnight, but we have to start somewhere.

Ms Drown: Does my hon. Friend agree that there is some tension in the House, because there is much agreement today about the need for an ethical arms trade policy, but, when another debate comes up about jobs, hon. Members will defend jobs in the arms industry in their constituencies? Does he agree that, as a strong part of the new Government's developing policy, the first part of money released through defence diversification should go back into the areas concerned, so that the skilled people there can find jobs in more constructive areas of employment?

Mr. Corbyn: My hon. Friend reads my mind. What brilliance; no one else can. Her point is important. I do not seek to make enemies or to criticise people who work in the arms industry. That is not my purpose, or that of anyone else concerned about human rights. I am concerned that a diversification agency should reduce Britain's dependence on arms manufacture and export. It must invest so that, instead of the market madness of the Tory Government, we examine rationally how to reduce the volume and value of the arms industry and its exports, and put the money into socially useful products.

The subsidy to the arms industry is enormous. About £5,000 per job is subsidised every year. The subsidy on exports is more than £300 million a year. The Export Credits Guarantee Department's exposure on arms exports is vast. Following the collapse of the south-east Asian tiger economies, I understand that £800 million is still unpaid by Indonesia. The figure is duplicated in many other countries.

The British taxpayer is to be asked to pay for the weapons that are going to be used to kill people in Indonesia and many other places. It is a ludicrous business to depend on. If we are concerned about human rights, we cannot at the same time promote arms exports knowing full well that Governments such as Suharto's will use them against the poor people of East Timor and many other places.

Since the second world war, conflicts have arisen all over the globe. They were sometimes cold war conflicts by proxy, sometimes demands for self-determination, and often arguments about oil and natural resources. The common thread is that, in every one of those conflicts, in which 40 million people have died since 1945, someone along the line has made a great deal of money from the export of the weapons that helped to fuel them.

What always sticks in my mind is visiting a scrap metal yard in northern Iraq after the Iran-Iraq war. I walked around and saw the manufacturer's labels on the shell casings and aircraft remains, and thought of all the money made all over the world from that appalling and useless conflict in which 500,000 people on each side were killed. We pay that price in our conscience, but other people pay it with their lives as a result of the arms export industry and the competition of arms dealers around the world. Why not instead look ahead to something a bit bolder than the diversification agency proposed in the Green Paper, to a time when the skill and brilliance involved in producing arms produces goods that benefit humankind rather than killing it?

6.42 pm

Dr. Jenny Tonge (Richmond Park): It has been an interesting debate, but Her Majesty's Opposition are conspicuous by their absence. Earlier, they challenged the Leader of the House to give them time for debates on defence and foreign policy, but they cannot be bothered to turn up to a debate on the international arms trade. A plague on them.

Mr. Faber: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Dr. Tonge: No, I will not, because I have very little time. The hon. Gentleman took more than enough time.

We had a detailed response from the Minister. There were a lot of words, but they must be matched by action. I urge him to more action and a few less words. I agree with the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) that there was a lot of rhetoric, and that nothing much seems to have changed yet. We shall see.

The hon. Member for Gloucester (Ms Kingham), my hon. Friend the Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey), and, of course, the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) brought passion to the debate. We heard about the effects of the international arms trade.

We live in an unstable world, because the end of the cold war left us with a paradox. There is less threat, but also less peace. Of the major armed conflicts in the world today, not one is a classic war of one state against another. Typically, wars today are violent, and ethnically or religiously oriented. Almost all are in poor countries. For those embroiled in such conflicts, the dominant threat is not nuclear arsenals but small arms controlled by warlords, as so aptly noted by the hon. Member for Gloucester.

Civilians suffer 90 per cent. of casualties, of whom more than 40 per cent. are children, as the hon. Member for Gloucester and I saw illustrated vividly in Rwanda—something we will never forget. Such violence, ethnic cleansing and mass rape undermine the values on which depend human relationships and respect for human rights. A little bit passion in the debate would have been appreciated.

As civilised nations with human rights, we call on the world to do something. However, those called upon to do something are the men and women in the military who once protected us from a single threat. I am grateful for that, as one of the generation that was protected and given a good life as a consequence. They are now called on for peacekeeping, and, more often, peace enforcement.

I hope that the defence review—which, it was promised, would be policy-led—reflects the strategic change, while recognising the continuing need for a well-equipped military. The hon. Member for Westbury was very hot on the importance of a strong defence industry.

Mr. Stephen Hesford (Wirral, West): The hon. Lady mentioned the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber). Does she agree that speeches such as his make the Government's position very difficult, in an area which is already difficult? There was no support from Conservative Members for an ethical foreign policy. The Opposition said virtually nothing about human rights.

Dr. Tonge: I agree. I remind the hon. Member for Westbury that a strong defence industry that is good for the economy comes at the expense of the lives of women and children and the torture of people all over the world. In the next century, that cost must be taken into account.

Mr. Faber: Does the hon. Lady accept that most of my quotations in defence of the British defence industry were from last month's Government Green Paper?

Dr. Tonge: I thank the hon. Gentleman for pointing that out, but I stick to what I said about his remarks.

If we are to promote an ethical foreign policy, it must be backed by a code of conduct for arms sales, as ably argued by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell). My first major concern is the matter of licences not being granted if there is a risk of arms being used for internal repression.

I still have no idea who or what decides what internal repression is. I should be grateful if the Minister would explain it. Baroness Chalker spoke in terms similar to the Government's about internal repression, but still licences are granted. Not much has changed. Since 1 May, there have been 22 to Indonesia, 16 to Kenya, 86 to Turkey, two to Algeria, and so on. That is why full parliamentary scrutiny of arms sales in advance is imperative.

Arms broking was also mentioned by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Fife and the hon. Member for Gloucester. It is essential that all EU residents and registered companies comply with the European policy on arms exports. We must stop the scandal of brokerage. The hon. Member for Gloucester told us about the scandal in Rwanda and Mil Tec's involvement. The issue must be cleared up and included in the policy.

On the subject of scrutiny in Parliament, I ask the Minister to consider carefully Sir Richard Scott's suggestion of a standing interdepartmental committee.

[Dr. Tonge]

The Department of Trade and Industry is responsible at the same time for promoting and for restricting exports. The Scott report questioned whether the DTI should continue to be the licensing authority when the material reasons for refusing export licences were usually the preserve of other Departments such as the Department for International Development.

A standing committee would facilitate communication between the DTI, the Foreign Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development, and concerns could be raised. It would enable parliamentarians to scrutinise sensitive export licences in advance.

Several hon. Members mentioned annual reports, but they allow only retrospective debate after the exports have been licensed. In Sweden, a parliamentary committee scrutinises proposed exports to countries of concern in advance. Even the United States—the largest arms exporter—has a system of prior notification. As three former distinguished members of the armed forces said in a letter to The Times recently, Britain must have a more restrictive and transparent arms policy at the same time as it supports our armed forces and promotes an ethical foreign policy.

This year is the 50th anniversary of the universal declaration of human rights. It is an opportunity for a global effort to work towards the new world order that western leaders declared after the end of the cold war, but which has evaded us. The horrors of recent years have proved that peace will not come by rhetoric alone. We are approaching a new century. As we led in the fight against dictators and repression in this century, Britain, along with her allies, must promote humanitarian principles and codes of conduct in the next. In a world of less threat, less peace, we must work for peace.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: With the leave of the House. This has been a fascinating debate in many ways. I have some sympathy with the remarks of the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) about the need for passion. I have just returned from Sierra Leone. I shall say this dispassionately, because if I say it emotionally it will be almost an abuse of emotion.

I saw pictures that almost defied description of the torture that had been meted out to the victims of the former junta. People had been beheaded or had their limbs torn off. I met survivors of torture. That is what war and brutality are all about, and that is, among other reasons, why we have to introduce ethical standards into all our debates on foreign policy and our relationship with our fellow human beings in this world.

The hon. Member for Richmond Park called for fewer words and more action. Perhaps she will forgive me for saying that a considerable amount of action is being taken. I shall give her some instances.

Even this debate about arms sales has to be put into the wider context of a world that moves away from the perception of conflict as the norm towards conflict prevention as a more rational way of going forward. Picking up the pieces after a conflict is always incredibly expensive and inefficient and can never recompense the victims. In various areas, the Government are making progress, and in some areas we are doing precisely what I have described.

The hon. Lady described rape as an act of war. The Government are working hard to establish an international criminal court. Among the things that we want such a court to do is to accept that rape as a tactic of war will be seen as a war crime.

Dr. Tonge: Does the Minister accept that rape is an act of genocide, not only of war?

Mr. Lloyd: We are in danger of getting into a battle of semantics rather than a battle of practicalities. We want to ensure that the crime of rape as an act of war is penalised through the international criminal court and seen for what it is—an act of atrocious violation.

Those are practical steps forward. We are doing work in The Hague and in Arusha, where an international tribunal on events in Rwanda is being held. We are giving practical support to ensure that those two tribunals are able to provide a framework within which justice is seen to be part of the process of reconciliation. We are taking steps in Africa, where Britain is undertaking active training in peacekeeping to prevent the outbreak of conflict. We are taking part at the level of the United Nations in efforts to move things forward in a practical way to build a capacity to stop conflict breaking out. Those are practical steps, and they are important.

Britain ought to be proud that we are at the forefront of practical steps, and that we are part of moving this world on. The hon. Member for Richmond Park is right: passion is necessary in defence of the rights of those who get little by way of defence elsewhere, but it is in that context that we are making real and tangible progress in the context of arms sales. I have already explained to the House the practical steps that we are taking on illicit arms trafficking and international registration. Those are practical steps.

The European Union code of conduct is a practical step. It brings our European allies on board in a process that they have never previously undertaken collectively. Again, that is progress. That is why, sadly, the speech of the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) was so sad and so churlish. After a new leader of the Conservative party has been elected and after time for reflection, it would have been enough to say, "We are genuinely sorry. What the previous Government did was an outrage. It was a disgrace and a stain on this nation." That would have been a sensible speech.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Derek Fatchett): He did not vote for the new leader.

Mr. Lloyd: Perhaps we have an old Tory here—proud of Scott, proud of the Pergau dam scandal, proud of all those stains on our national honour, which are now being washed away because Britain does not want that any more.

The hon. Member for Westbury talked about delays. When the Labour Government came to power, they inherited a system in which the previous Government did not care about arms sales, had no proper control system and asked no questions. Ministers took no decisions except the decision to sell.

Inevitably, when a new Government come to power determined to break with that past, the system creaks under the strain. We have had to rebuild the system. We have had to work with the very competent officials who are now making the system work. Yes, we inherited a system that produced delays. We are now getting those delays out of the system, but the responsibility falls on the previous Government. That is widely understood in the industry, which recognises that the balance is now being got right.

It is astonishing that the hon. Member for Westbury wants us to apply a system in which the delays would not occur. He wants us to go back to the system in which everything went through, and we let whatever was put to us pass by; in which there was no control. We are not prepared to do that, because we must have better standards of practice.

Mr. Faber: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Lloyd: The hon. Gentleman will forgive me—

Mr. Faber: The hon. Gentleman referred to me.

Mr. Lloyd: The hon. Gentleman referred to me in his speech, and he will forgive me if we cannot always give way on that basis.

The hon. Gentleman has to make up his mind whose side he is on. Is he on the side of an arms sales policy that balances out national interest—of course—and jobs—of course—but recognises that recourse to the words of respect for human rights is not enough and that it must be put it into practice? That is what is happening under the Labour Government, and what we did not see under the previous Government.

Several hon. Members referred to Mil Tec. Mil Tec was itself something of a scandal, because the previous Government failed to include the Isle of Man in the legislation that brought the UN embargo into effect. That was astonishing, but lax, as was so much that was done by the previous Government. We are simply not prepared to operate according to those standards.

This has been an important debate. It is the first to concentrate on how we get the balance right. The Government are happy for the debate to have taken place, and we congratulate the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell). We believe that Parliament has a right to be involved in the process, and today Parliament has taken part. It is a shame that the hon. Member for Westbury, speaking on behalf of the main Opposition party, failed to take part in the process of parliamentary scrutiny.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House, mindful of the conclusions of the Scott Report, commends Her Majesty's Government for its efforts to obtain agreement for a European Union Code of Conduct on the arms trade; and urges Her Majesty's Government to ensure that any such code sets high common standards governing arms exports for all Member States, and, in particular, to insist that export guidelines are transparent, unambiguous and pay due regard to human rights.

Orders of the Day

Criminal Procedure (Intermediate Diets) (Scotland) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

6.59 pm

The Minister for Home Affairs and Devolution, Scottish Office (Mr. Henry McLeish): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

I am grateful for the agreement that has been reached through the usual channels to allow time for this very short but very important Bill to be debated. Many right hon. and hon. Members present tonight have been in the Chamber long enough this week, so we shall try to dispatch the business as quickly as possible.

The importance of the matters the Bill addresses cannot easily be overstated. As a result of a procedural irregularity, which has only recently come to light, a large number of summary prosecutions and previous convictions dating back to 1981 have been called into question. As of 27 March, the Crown had already been forced to abandon 71 cases. Many more are in the pipeline. The situation has already attracted widespread public attention and the purpose of the Bill is to put matters right as quickly as possible.

The difficulties the Bill is designed to address emerged as a result of recent judgments of the High Court of Justiciary in the cases of Mackay and Milligan. Taken together, those judgments make it clear that a summary court has no power to hold an intermediate diet if the trial diet has to be postponed for any reason. It follows that any order made at such a diet is a nullity, including the decision to fix a new date for trial, and that any subsequent proceedings, including a conviction and sentence, may themselves become fundamentally null.

Before considering the implications of the High Court decision, it may be helpful to hon. Members if I take a moment to explain, as briefly as possible, the background to it. Intermediate diets were first introduced into summary procedure in 1981 by virtue of section 15 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980, which enabled, but did not require, the court to fix a diet, known as an intermediate diet, in respect of a case that was going to trial.

The purpose of the intermediate diet was to ascertain whether the parties were ready for trial and the accused still intended to plead not guilty—and therefore to ensure, so far as possible, that cases did not have to be adjourned on the day. Such last-minute adjournments are not only expensive and disruptive to court business; they cause a great deal of inconvenience to witnesses who have been summoned to court in the expectation of the trial going ahead. After their introduction in 1981, it appears that intermediate diets had comparatively little success and most courts gradually stopped holding them routinely.

However, in the early 1990s, following consultation and pilots in a number of sheriff courts, it was concluded that, with minor procedural changes, intermediate diets had the potential to be more productive in anticipating and avoiding the need for adjournment on the day of trial. Accordingly, the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1995 contained provisions enabling the court to make inquiries into the state of preparedness of the parties. It also empowered the Secretary of State by order to make the holding of intermediate diets mandatory in prescribed courts. That power has been exercised from April 1996 onwards, so that almost all summary courts, with the exception of a few of the smaller ones, are now required to hold intermediate diets before trial.

There is no doubt that the introduction of mandatory intermediate diets has resulted in a considerable increase in the number of cases disposed of without the need for a trial diet. In 1993–94, for example, 3,177 summary cases were disposed of by a plea of guilty at an intermediate diet. Three years later, in 1996–97, that figure had increased fourfold, to 13,583.

However, a widespread practice developed of fixing a further intermediate diet in cases where the trial diet had to be adjourned until a later date, in order to ascertain whether the case would go ahead on the new date. The purpose of these further intermediate diets was exactly the same as the initial diet, which was to determine whether the parties were ready for trial and therefore to avoid last-minute adjournments, if at all possible. That is the practice that has now been held to be invalid by the High Court's recent judgments.

In Mackay, the appellants appealed against the competency of proceedings on the ground that no intermediate diet had been fixed when their trial was further adjourned. That appeal was dismissed, but in doing so the High Court concluded that there was no statutory basis for intermediate diets to be held before any adjourned trial diet. In the light of the court's opinion in that case, which was handed down on 19 November 1997, the Crown took the view that further such diets should no longer be fixed, although some sheriffs continued to fix them.

Following Mackay, pleas as to the competency of summary proceedings were taken in a large number of cases around the country. A number of sheriffs raised the same issue themselves and, in order to clarify the situation, the Crown appealed against the decision of a sheriff in one such case, which resulted in the case of Milligan coming before the Appeal Court. On 12 March, the court held that a summary court had no power to make an order at what was described in Mackay as an "unintended" intermediate diet and that any such order was a nullity. It followed that the proceedings themselves became fundamentally null where the adjourned trial diet did not proceed on the date originally fixed.

I should emphasise that, to the best of my knowledge, no case has yet come to court in which a person has sought to have his or her conviction quashed in a case in which proceedings have been completed, but the same issues could well arise. The decision therefore raises a real possibility that persons convicted and sentenced at trial diets that were fixed at an invalid intermediate diet would be able to have their convictions and sentences quashed. In that event, those concerned might seek compensation—for example, where they had been imprisoned or disqualified from driving—the return of any fines they had paid and their criminal record to be expunged. In current cases, the Crown would have to consider instituting fresh proceedings, which might themselves be the subject of challenge.

Although no precise figures can be given of the number of cases involved, the Crown Office estimates that about 1,000 current cases are likely to be affected. Several thousand completed cases may be involved as well. Although the cases involved are those dealt with under summary procedure, which generally involves less serious offences, they are also likely to include persons who have received custodial sentences for violence, indecency, housebreaking and drugs offences and custody and disqualification for offences involving dangerous, disqualified or drunk driving.

If the Government took no action to address what appear to be the likely consequences of the High Court's decision, I have no doubt that the effect on both the criminal justice system and public confidence in Scottish criminal justice would be extremely severe. There would be considerable additional delays, expense, uncertainty and in a very real sense injustice. That is why we have brought forward the Bill today, with the agreement of the Opposition parties.

We have concluded that the best remedy is to amend the provisions relating to intermediate diets in section 148 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, to make it explicitly clear that courts may fix an intermediate diet at any time, whether before, on or after any date assigned as a trial diet. That provides the courts with the discretion they always thought they had to fix an intermediate diet when a trial diet is adjourned to a later date. That is the effect of clause 1(1)(a) and (b). Clause 1(2) provides that the amendment shall operate retrospectively, and clause 1(3) applies the same amendments to the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975, which preceded the 1995 Act.

Parliament is rightly reluctant to resort to retrospective legislation, unless a compelling case can be made out for doing so, because of the obvious potential for unfairness and oppression. There is no such unfairness or oppression in this instance, so I believe that this is one of the very rare cases in which it is both necessary and appropriate that legislation should have retrospective effect. The holding of an intermediate diet where a trial diet had been adjourned, which is what has been found to be invalid, involved no prejudice of any kind to the accused. Indeed, in many cases the additional intermediate diet which, it now appears, rendered the subsequent proceedings invalid, will have been fixed on the application of the defence.

Intermediate diets were introduced as long ago as 1981 and have operated ever since to the benefit of all parties, with no suggestion being raised until now as to the validity of such diets in certain circumstances. It would surely be absurd if Parliament did not legislate to cure what is no more than a technical procedural irregularity that caused no prejudice of any kind to the accused, with the result that a large number of cases had to be abandoned or reopened.

The Bill is vital to the proper administration of criminal justice in Scotland. Without it there is a risk of severe damage being done to public confidence in the system of justice and the prospects of substantial resources having to be expended in dealing with cases that, apart from a purely technical irregularity which the High Court found to be fatal, are otherwise entirely sound. I commend the Bill to the House.

7.8 pm

Mr. Michael Ancram (Devizes): This is an unusual situation because this is a question not only of emergency legislation, but of retrospective legislation. Although we want this business to be concluded swiftly, I think it right that we show that we have tested it against the criteria that emergency legislation and retrospective legislation should be tested against. After all, emergency legislation bypasses the normal tests and democratic restraints that the House and the other place can exercise, and it should be used only in exceptional circumstances; there is a natural democratic presumption against retrospective legislation.

I believe that the tests are severe and precise. It must be seen that the legislation is strictly necessary and, significantly, that it does not cause injustice or unfairness after the event.

As the Minister said, a number of cases—I think he said 70 or 80—have been deserted or abandoned because of this situation. There are also 1,000 cases hanging around, waiting to be tried, and thousands of cases—the number is unquantifiable—could be affected retrospectively if the Bill were not passed.

I am grateful to the Minister and to the Secretary of State for consulting us, not only generally on the issue, but on the terms of the Bill and for being prepared to accept certain suggestions made by us to, I believe, make the Bill more effective. I also place on the record my gratitude to Lord Mackay of Drumadoon, a former Lord Advocate, who I readily accept has helped me to find my way through this procedural minefield in a way that might otherwise not have been possible, and who has enabled me to apply the tests that I have set out and to say tonight that I believe that they are met.

There are two areas: current cases and cases that have gone before. For current cases, the practical consequences of not changing the law are as follows. The Crown would be unable to seek convictions in cases in which more than one intermediate diet had taken place. Any orders made at such further intermediate diets would be incompetent. Such orders would include not only procedural decisions, such as the adjournment of trials; warrants for apprehension granted at such diets would also be affected. In such cases, the Crown would have no alternative but to abandon the proceedings. In certain instances, it might be possible to raise fresh proceedings, but in others the case would be time-barred. There may be other current cases in which a conviction has taken place, but the accused has not yet been sentenced or the days for making an appeal have not yet expired. In such cases, also, unless the law is changed, the conviction will fall.

On those grounds, to protect current cases, there is an obvious need to move with urgency. That is why I am satisfied that the tests for emergency legislation are met in this instance.

Obviously, the more sensitive question is whether the Bill should have retrospective effect. In my view, such legislation is justified only in the rarest of instances. Having very carefully considered all the issues involved, I believe that the circumstances justify the Bill having retrospective effect. That is necessary to protect some current cases, which will be affected by the problem that has arisen. It may also be necessary to protect an unquantifiable number of completed cases, dating back to 1981, in which convictions have been returned in proceedings in which more than one intermediate diet has taken place.

Since intermediate diets were introduced, sheriffs, procurators fiscal and defence lawyers have proceeded on the basis that it has been competent to hold more than one intermediate diet. That was the position before the holding of intermediate diets became mandatory, and that remained the position until the decision in Mackay, which the Minister mentioned.

Much more important, it should be remembered that the problem that has arisen relates to the competency of pre-trial procedure rather than the rules of procedure regulating the conduct of trials or questions relating to the admissibility or sufficiency of evidence at such trials. If the law is changed retrospectively, therefore, no question can arise of any accused being able to argue that the change has prevented him from arguing that he has suffered any substantive interference in his right to a fair trial. That is an important test.

The worst that an accused could complain of is that he has been inconvenienced by requiring to attend court more often than might have been the case and, I think in a few instances, that he has been remanded in custody, pending trial, for failing to attend a second or subsequent intermediate diet that, in the light of Mackay, ought not to have taken place. However, in the few instances in which the accused has ended up in custody, he would have done so only because he disobeyed an order of the sheriff to attend a specified diet, and in such circumstances it would be difficult to argue that any great injustice had arisen.

In those circumstances, I believe that it is necessary to balance the public interest and the interests of any accused that may be affected. I believe that, when that is done in the light of the circumstances, the balance tilts firmly in favour of allowing the Bill to proceed with retrospective effect. It would be most unsatisfactory if current prosecutions were to founder, or past convictions were to be quashed, as a consequence of a procedural irregularity of a nature that has only recently, and totally unexpectedly, been identified, in the circumstances that the Minister set out.

On the basis of those exceptional circumstances, on behalf of the Opposition, I am prepared to support the Second Reading of the Bill and to see it pass through all its stages as speedily as possible.

Mr. Menzies Campbell (North-East Fife): I suppose that, technically, I should declare an interest as an occasionally practising member of the Faculty of Advocates, although, until now, my interest in the intermediate diet has been somewhat peripheral and I do not believe that I have ever attended one, even in a professional capacity.

Like every lawyer, I find retrospective legislation repugnant. That is why I consistently voted against legislation the purpose of which was to allow the prosecution of alleged war criminals many years after some of them had first come to the United Kingdom. Leaving aside questions of principle, looking at the matter pragmatically, it seems to me that my opposition to that legislation has proved more sound than even I thought at the time.

[Mr. Menzies Campbell]

However, in this case, cogent arguments exist to justify both emergency and retrospective legislation, so I can adopt much of what has been said by the right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram). I am prepared to give the Bill a fair wind, for two reasons. First, it creates no crime that did not previously exist; secondly, it constitutes no extension of the jurisdiction of the court. Had either of those principles been offended against, my position might have been different. However, in the light of what has been said by the Minister on behalf of the Government, it seems to me that the Bill should pass speedily through the House, because it is in the interests of justice that it should do so.

Mr. Alex Salmond (Banff and Buchan): I have a fellow feeling with the Minister of State to be among such luminaries—adornments—of the Scottish legal system. I do not know whether we are Daniel in the lion's den or have fallen among thieves, but perhaps we should be careful about how much expertise we both claim with so much talented advice available to us.

I shall not detain the House except to say that I support the remarks made on behalf of the Opposition parties. Obviously, retrospective legislation is extremely undesirable, but in this case the case has been made. In fact, in this case the Government had no alternative but to introduce the Bill. For that reason, the Scottish National party will join other Opposition parties in supporting the Bill.

I want to pursue with the Minister a point that I have been pursuing with the Secretary of State for Scotland. I understand that the legal advice available to the Government is that there is little chance of an appeal to the European Court of Human Rights, basically because, for the reasons that have been given by the right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram), it is difficult to substantiate an argument that a person has been prejudiced as a result of the Bill, but the right hon. Gentleman did mention that people may have been detained in custody, albeit as a result of their own actions, as a result of the procedures that, currently, are regarded as irregular.

The Government have received from their lawyers advice to the effect that, because of the circumstances of the case, the European Court is unlikely to rule in favour of any person who goes before it pursuing such a claim. However, there have been circumstances—in relation to the fishing industry, for example—where Government lawyers have been extremely confident about their advice to the then Government before the European Court but were then sorely disappointed when judgments came in on the other basis.

Although I accept that the Bill is necessary, that there is no alternative, and that the retrospection is necessary—however undesirable it may be—I want to ask whether there is any possibility of a Treasury indemnity for the Scottish Administration of a new Parliament, established next year. I would not like there to be the possibility—however remote—that the Scottish Parliament may be presented with an unquantifiable legal bill as a result of cases that may be pursued. I accept that that may be a remote possibility. If it is, there should be no difficulty presenting such an indemnity as it is unlikely to cost the Treasury any money. I know that the Secretary of State has considered the point and that the Minister has had an opportunity to do likewise. I should like to pursue that point while giving general support to the Bill and the arguments about why it is necessary.

Mr. McLeish: With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like to reply to the debate.

I thank the Opposition for adopting a very constructive and thoughtful approach. The right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram) identified the important principles behind the Bill and outlined the criteria that have been satisfied—at least in his eyes. I also thank the hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) for his support.

I shall deal briefly with the point raised by the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond), who had the courtesy to write to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The hon. Gentleman raised the question of an indemnity for the Scottish Parliament in the event of its having to meet financial liabilities as a result of the problems that have arisen in relation to intermediate diets. As I understand it, the hon. Gentleman is concerned that either the domestic courts or the European Court of Human Rights might find the retrospective nature of this legislation unlawful, leaving the way open for convictions to be quashed and resulting in entitlement to compensation.

I assure the hon. Gentleman and the House that we have taken careful legal advice and, on the basis of that advice, we are totally satisfied that the retrospective provisions of the Bill are entirely consistent with both domestic and European law. I would not otherwise commend it to the House. From the perspective of the Scottish Parliament, the position would be far worse if the legislation were not enacted. While I recognise that the hon. Gentleman has made a reasonable point, it is a hypothetical one. I assure the hon. Gentleman that we do not envisage any unquantifiable liability ending up with the Scottish Executive or the Scottish Parliament. The most important consideration this evening is to move forward with the Bill in order to ensure that the liabilities to which the hon. Gentleman referred do not end up with the Scottish Executive or the Scottish Parliament.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith, pursuant to Standing Order No. 63 (Committal of Bills),

That the Bill be committed to a Committee of the whole House.—[Mr. McFall.]

Question agreed to.

Bill immediately considered in Committee; reported, without amendment; read the Third time, and passed.

Swale Crossing

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. McFall.]

7.23 pm

Mr. Derek Wyatt (Sittingbourne and Sheppey): Mr. Deputy Speaker, thank you for giving me the chance to put the case for the second crossing of the Swale. I have placed copies of this speech on two of my local constituency websites: Swale chamber of commerce, www.fenet.co.uk/swale; and Swale borough council, www.swale.gov.uk.

I am sorry that it is not possible to show a video of the current problems with the bridge or even colour slides in the Chamber tonight. I hope that one day this will be a Chamber of the 20th century of which we may be proud. In the meantime, I welcome my hon. Friend the Minister this evening. I hope that he will watch—and persuade the whole transport team to watch—the video depicting the problems with the bridge. It was made by Ray Featherstone, the youth leader of Sheerness county youth centre, with the help of local youngsters on the Isle of Sheppey a few years ago.

When I was parliamentary spokesperson for the new constituency of Sittingbourne and Sheppey in 1996, I was asked by Councillor Dennis Grover whether I could arrange a meeting on behalf of the Sheppey Industry Association with the then shadow Minister of Transport, my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Clare Short). I duly did so. The day before we were due to meet her in the House, she was transferred to what was then Overseas Development. I called Dennis to tell him that the meeting was off because my right hon. Friend had been moved to Overseas Development. As quick as a flash, he responded, "That's all right. The island has a better chance with her there—after all, we've been overseas for 1,000 years."

Although Great Britain is an island, there are people in our country who share a different understanding of the word "island". They are the people who live on Mull, Skye, the Isle of Wight, or, in my case, the Isle of Sheppey. They call themselves "islanders" because, for 1,000 years or more, they have been detached from mainland Britain. Islanders possess a different view of life and increasingly, because the islands have suffered greater hardships in terms of employment opportunities, health care, education and housing, they feel that they have been unloved and left out in the cold because no one in government understands their unique problems.

Our legal offshore islands suffer, at a micro level, all the problems of the United Kingdom mainland—but they suffer them at a level that is much more personal and debilitating. For instance, in the community of Leysdown on the east end of the Isle of Sheppey, where I recently conducted a Saturday surgery, it costs the population of 1,060 £4.20 return to go to the nearest shopping centre in the town of Sheerness. The bus runs once an hour and stops at 6 pm. The nearest accident and emergency unit is at Medway hospital on the mainland, which is only 20 miles away. As that hospital's A and E record is not what we would wish, many people travel to the A and E unit at the Kent and Canterbury hospital, which is only 32 miles away and is currently facing closure. Our new Sheppey community hospital has been delayed and delayed and delayed.

Worse still, if plans to close the magistrates courts in both Sheerness and Sittingbourne go ahead, it will cost citizens £6.80 to go to Chatham, or more to go to Maidstone magistrates court. They will have to travel across the bridge every time. Public transport currently takes more than three hours to get from Leysdown to Chatham—and longer to get to Maidstone—but it does not necessarily go at a convenient time when cases may be heard, and there is a considerable cost to the individual. Those problems have been compounded by the bridge. Nevertheless, they have been borne with some stoicism for generations, not just by the people of Leysdown, but by the people of Warden Bay, Eastchurch, Minster, Halfway, Queenborough, Bluetown and Sheerness.

The 1991 census gave the population of the island as 35,500, and today it is close to 40,000. The population almost doubles at weekends—especially when the clocks go forward—as many Londoners travel to Sheppey to visit their caravans at the east end of the island. The traffic is constantly delayed by the bridge.

Thirty-eight years ago yesterday, the then Conservative Government closed the naval dockyard at Sheerness, which caused unemployment on a scale never before experienced in our community. It broke up our community. Long-term unemployment continues to be a huge problem on the island, and stands at 23.8 per cent.—one of the highest levels in the south-east of England. Today, the port, under the ownership of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, is thankfully booming. It is the fifth biggest port in the United Kingdom and is perfectly placed to serve continental Europe—if we could only sort out the bridge.

Two years ago, the port was in competition with other United Kingdom and continental ports for a huge contract with a car importer. The port already imports cars for Citroen, Mazda, Volkswagen, Peugeot, Hyundai and Chrysler. The deal was done in that hands were shaken on it. The port management was chuffed as it had again proved the excellence of the port. Twenty minutes or so later, the car importer phoned from his car cancelling the contract—he was caught in an horrendous tailback of traffic as a result of the bridge being up.

The current bridge is a single-span lifting bridge. At the time of the closure of the docks, Percy Wells—our best ever Member of Parliament for the old constituency of Faversham—had campaigned for 20 years for a new bridge. He had been told by the Admiralty that it had to be a single span, as the other two bridges had previously been. How amazing—just before the bridge was built, the Admiralty left Sheerness. The bridge design was already redundant.

Every time a small yacht or a small tanker goes through it for pleasure or en route for Ridham dock, the bridge has to go up. In the summer, because it is a concrete bridge, it expands, and it has to be hosed down manually before it will come down again. It might be thought that such a small irritant, causing a waiting time of perhaps 20 to 30 minutes, is not much to shout about in the general scheme of things, but that would be wrong.

Ridham is expanding. In 1987, there were 442 liftings a year caused by the dock. By 1995, that had risen to 1,034 liftings a year or three a day—an increase of 120 per cent. The bridge was built in 1960 for traffic flows with a design capacity of 13,000 vehicle movements a day. Now the flow is just over 24,000 vehicle movements a day, or 85 per cent. over the design capacity. At the weekends it can double or treble. In April 1997 the Kent county council 12-hour traffic flow recorded 21,063 vehicles, including 3,003 heavy goods vehicles.

The heavy goods vehicles equate to 14.25 per cent. of all traffic using the bridge and according to a Swale borough council report, there would be serious problems for the port, should the HGV traffic continue. We hope that it will continue, because Railtrack wants to make Sheerness a nodal point for rail freight, linking the port ultimately through the channel tunnel to Europe. That would not only create more jobs for Sheerness, but substantially increase the HGV traffic over the bridge.

As public transport declines—it cannot get any worse for us on the island—more and more people have to consider the car as the only way of getting around, notwithstanding the helpful changes in the Budget for rural transport. Over the past three years the problems relating to the bridge have been compounded by the new A249 dual carriageway, as well as a series of awful accidents on the bridge itself and either side of it, leading to delays of up to 10 hours and queues of 12 miles or more.

The Conservative Government, in their wisdom, decided that the solution to the bridge was to build the new A249 first. The A249 connects the M2 motorway to a roundabout, which in itself has caused unnecessary accidents because it is so poorly designed. The roundabout is 200 yd short of a single road leading to the bridge. In other words, 1,750 cars and lorries an hour travel on the new dual carriageway, only to meet a roundabout and then a single track across the bridge, which in the summer goes up eight times a day, but sometimes fails to come down.

It is not surprising that the group of Tory Ministers responsible for that decision are known as the East Ham group—East Ham being one stop short of Barking on the underground. Of course it had been their intention to build the bridge. Plans had been drawn up and £2 million of public money—our taxpayers' money—was spent on its design before the public inquiry was due to get under way last June.

The scheme was seriously flawed. It was back to front. It was the island that needed to be connected to the mainland, not the other way round. The islanders' needs should have been addressed first.

I support the transport review being conducted by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, even though it has led to a delay in our bridge, because it is wrong to waste taxpayers' money on schemes that have no Treasury Bills attached to them and which do not fit into a UK-wide transport strategy. Moreover, I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Paymaster General, who has reversed the previous Government's private finance initiative policy, by not insisting that PFIs take the risk of paying for planning inquiries.

The results of the current review will be published in July. Whether our bridge goes forward fully funded depends on five criteria: accessibility, safety, economy, environment and integration. On accessibility, safety, economy and integration, I make the score 10 out of 10. I could be biased. On environment, we have had some problems, but all the environment groups have bought into the need for the island to be connected to the mainland. The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds must be especially congratulated on seeking a practical solution for the bridge.

To those like the Council for the Protection of Rural England who want a tunnel, the Highways Agency responded earlier in the week. It stated:

"A tunnel crossing has been considered in detail but rejected primarily on environmental grounds. You will be aware that the Swale and its surroundings are Special Protection Areas under EU legislation, Sites of Special Scientific Interest under UK legislation and an internationally important Ramsar wetland site. Our proposals are required to have the smallest possible ecological effect on any option considered."

The Highways Agency went on:

"In conclusion, the ecological effects of the proposed bridge would be less than those of a tunnel, and it must be borne in mind that it is the ecological aspect of the environment for which the Swale area is protected."

There is one criterion missing from the list: the Isle of Sheppey's psyche. Such a concept does not fit neatly into the way in which civil servants frame regulations, and cannot easily be understood by Ministers who never visit the island and have no real understanding of it.

In spite of the existing bridge, the Isle of Sheppey has some world-class businesses—Weidmuller, a family-owned German company in Halfway, is expanding by one third and hopes to open a new extension at the end of June; Abbott Laboratories, a Chicago-based pharmaceutical company listed on Wall street, in Queenborough; and the port of Sheerness, especially its fresh fruit operations and its car imports, as well as Co-Steel from Canada. There are businesses that have aspirations to become world class, such as Danepak, a Danish company, and our own local furniture maker, Regis Ltd.

In the global economy that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked us to embrace, those industries will not stand: they will fall if the bridge is not built. That would plunge the community into a new economic scenario worse than anything it has ever experienced.

Mr. Jonathan Shaw (Chatham and Aylesford): I congratulate my hon. Friend on securing this Adjournment debate. The second crossing over the Swale is not only important for the good people of the Isle of Sheppey; it is essential for the regeneration of my constituency, the Medway towns and further afield, right down the Thames gateway area. That is reflected in the early-day motion tabled today by Kent and London Members of the Thames gateway group. Does my hon. Friend agree that the crossing is essential not just for Sheppey, but for the wider area of Kent and east London?

Mr. Wyatt: I thank my hon. Friend, and of course I agree with him. One of the problems is that we are running out of space on the mainland of Sittingbourne to develop new factories. We have space on Sheppey, but we have no bridge that works.

I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to fulfil a pre-election pledge, which apparently emanated from Millbank tower and is frequently quoted in my local papers, that the bridge would be built before the end of the century. I urge the Minister to sign the cheque this evening for the second crossing of the Swale.

The Minister for London and Construction (Mr. Nick Raynsford): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Sittingbourne and Sheppey (Mr. Wyatt) on his success in securing the debate. I appreciate that the matter is important not just for him, but for all the people of north-east Kent, those who live and work on the Isle of Sheppey, and, as my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw) emphasised, others who live in the Medway area.

My hon. Friend the Member for Sittingbourne and Sheppey made a powerful case for a second Swale crossing. As he knows, the Government have embarked on a fundamental review of transport policy. The case for this scheme must be considered in the context of that review. Our objectives are a strong economy, a sustainable environment and an inclusive society. Transport links are a vital part of those aims.

Good communications, including transport links, are central to the economy and quality of life. However, the backdrop to the fundamental review is a candid recognition that we need a shift in direction. Revised national road traffic forecasts published last autumn show traffic increasing by almost 40 per cent. over the next 20 years. If current policies continue, congestion will get worse, the impact on the environment will be even more severe, and those who have no access to private transport will be even more disadvantaged.

Therefore, we must develop an integrated transport system that makes the best use of the contribution that each transport mode can make, and ensures that all options are considered on a basis that takes into account from the outset considerations of accessibility, integration, safety, the environment and the economy—factors which my hon. Friend highlighted, because he has taken account of our review, and he knows that those are the criteria by which schemes are being assessed.

Above all, an integrated transport system must be sustainable. One of the encouraging aspects of what is an ambitious task is the degree of consensus on the need for change. We cannot achieve that in isolation, and we are actively engaging those involved in transport. It is a feature of the policy development work now under way that we are involving a wide range of external advice and expertise, including local authorities, businesses, trade unions, transport professionals and transport users. That is the context for the roads review—examining the role that trunk roads should play in an integrated and sustainable transport policy.

My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister returned from the successful Kyoto summit at the end of last year with a legally binding target for the European Union to reduce greenhouse gases by 8 per cent. The United Kingdom contribution towards this target, which has to be determined by the spring or the summer, is likely to be above the average, but, for CO_2 emissions, it is still likely to be somewhat lower than the domestic 20 per cent. reduction aim.

To meet that target, measures will need to be taken in all sectors of the economy. Under unchanged policies, emissions from transport are projected to rise at a faster rate than any other sector. The Government have signalled their intention to tackle the growth of emissions from the transport sector. A number of measures to reduce CO_2 emissions from transport, in addition to the fuel duty strategy, are being considered as part of the integrated transport policy review.

Against that background, and the background of increased congestion, we have three broad options for roads: first, to make better use of existing infrastructure; secondly, to manage demand; and, thirdly, to provide new infrastructure. I shall briefly cover those options.

The first option is to make the best use of the existing road network. It is the obvious first choice to make best use of existing infrastructure. It has been provided at substantial cost, and we must optimise that investment. Technologies old and new can help us to make better use of our roads network. They include variable speed limits on, for example, sections of the M5, variable message signs to guide motorists away from congested areas, and the dedicated bus lane on the M4 to Heathrow airport. Those are examples, and I readily accept that none of those options would tackle the problem that my hon. Friend has rightly identified—the difficulty with a bridge that opens, but does not always close, on the link to Sheppey.

Some of the measures to which I have referred may also bring safety benefits, and we shall need to ensure that those are given proper priority. However, we need to be realistic about the benefits that the various options can bring. I hope that I have made it clear that I recognise their limitations in relation to the circumstances of the case that my hon. Friend has raised.

The second option is managing demand, to which we must give serious consideration. Managing demand encompasses reducing the need to travel, by land use planning—for example, an assessment of the extent to which a shift to other modes can be encouraged—and, inevitably, the question of controlling demand by pricing or rationing mechanisms. At a local level, many local authorities are exploring, by means of integrated transport packages, how to combine those measures so that mobility is maintained, but the adverse environmental consequences of that mobility are reduced.

The third option is providing new infrastructure. The Highways Agency's programme of small safety schemes is continuing, but all major new construction is under review. Providing new infrastructure is a difficult option, financially and in terms of the impact that it may have on the environment. Our starting point is that we shall not proceed with major new road construction unless we are satisfied that there is no better alternative; even then, there will be difficult choices to be made within the limited resources available.

There is no substitute for a rigorous case-by-case examination of the options. The second volume of the roads review consultation document, which we published last year, sets out, region by region, the perceived traffic problems and the roads programme inherited from our predecessors. We are carefully examining all the responses, and we expect to publish the outcome of the review later this year.

The existence of a scheme in the inherited programme is seen as prima facie evidence that there is a transport problem. We sought from our regional consultations a view on whether those are the most important problems or whether others deserve greater priority. We envisage two outputs from this part of the review: first, a firm short-term investment programme and, secondly, a programme of studies to consider the remaining problems out of which the medium and long-term investment programmes will emerge.

As my hon. Friend rightly said, the A249 trunk road provides the only road link between the Kent mainland and the Isle of Sheppey, with its important deep-water port at Sheerness. The single-carriageway road is heavily trafficked, and the Swale has to be crossed on the lifting road-rail Kingsferry bridge, which is raised to shipping several times a day. Long queues often form, and traffic can be delayed, which is of considerable concern for a variety of reasons. Individuals are inconvenienced and, as my hon. Friend has suggested, investors may be deterred from investing because of concern about congestion. The emergency services and the region's national health trust, whose nearest accident and emergency hospital is located off the isle, are also concerned.

The prospects for Sheppey's commercial and industrial development are significantly hampered by the current poor access arrangements for the isle. The Government recognise that.

The second Swale crossing scheme has been proposed to improve the reliability of access to and from the isle for the benefit of local residents and businesses, and to provide a second emergency access. The scheme would provide a fixed-bridge crossing with a 29 m clearance for shipping. It would improve a 5 km section of the trunk road route up to Queenborough. I note that implementing the scheme would complete the programme of improvements from the M2 to the port of Sheerness. My hon. Friend rightly said that the rest of the programme had been put in place, but that that crucial element had been left behind by the previous Government.

The Swale and surrounding areas are recognised nationally and internationally as important sites for birds and their habitats. My hon. Friend has rightly and fairly mentioned the potential environmental difficulties that might arise from the proposed scheme. Great care will need to be taken to minimise the impact of the scheme on these important ecological sites. The project will allow intended developments such as the Thames gateway project to help to generate employment, enhancing the commercial prospects of the isle. The cost of the scheme is estimated at £79 million, which includes the cost of preparing and supervising the project, but excludes value added tax.

The Government office for the south east held three day-long seminars last autumn as part of our consultation process on integrated transport. A seminar in Ashford on 14 October considered transport corridors in the east of the region, including links with Sheppey.

Strong representations were made in support of the second Swale crossing scheme, and there was a clear consensus among delegates that the scheme should be given high priority. That view has also been strongly reflected in the written contributions that we have received about the scheme. My hon. Friend has been diligent in pressing the case for the scheme, and has been in regular correspondence with my noble Friend Baroness Hayman, who is responsible for roads policy within the Department.

I recognise the importance of a second Swale crossing scheme for the local community, and I take this opportunity to assure my hon. Friend that we shall be taking all these views, as well as the points that he and others have made, fully into account in the current review.

Developing a forward-looking integrated transport policy that supports a strong economy, contributes to a sustainable environment and helps to create a just and inclusive society is a huge challenge. Through the work now under way on trunk roads, we want to achieve a robust short-term programme and a system for planning future investment in the road network—whether by measures to make better use of the existing network, or by providing new infrastructure—that is fair and seen to be fair, and which addresses transport problems squarely in the context of an integrated strategy.

I am grateful to my hon. Friend for bringing these important transport issues to the attention of the House. I know that he has been consistent in his advocacy of the proposed second Swale crossing, and I am sure that he will continue to press the case for this project in the months ahead. However, I am sure that he will also appreciate that, until we have completed our review, we cannot say what conclusions we shall reach on the proposed Swale crossing.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twelve minutes to Eight o'clock.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Drinking Water

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 261, if he will enable the Drinking Water Inspectorate to seek financial authorisation for water companies from Ofwat to enable water companies to carry out remedial works which will prevent a breach of standards before that breach occurs. [35299]

Angela Eagle: It is the duty of water companies to supply drinking water which complies with the Water Quality Regulations. The financial regime operated by Ofwat already allows companies money to maintain their systems at the levels required to meet current water quality standards. Allowing companies further money for such works would not be appropriate. If unforeseen circumstances arise, or new standards are introduced which result in water companies needing to carry out works or install new treatment plant, the mechanism already exists for this expenditure to be certified as necessary by the DWI and taken into account by Ofwat in the next price review.

Secure Stations Initiative

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the Suzy Lamplugh Trust's Secure Stations Initiative; and if he will make a statement. [35127]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Suzy Lamplugh Trust has worked with the Department in the development of the Secure Stations initiative which we will be launching shortly. We are also aware of a research project put forward by the Trust into Safety at Stations for Disabled People with North West Trains but we understand that it is not yet underway. We greatly value the work of the Trust in these and other areas of personal security in public transport.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the outstanding arrears for each London borough with respect to (a) domestic rates, (b) community charge, (c) council tax and (d) rents. [35211]

Mr. Raynsford: Information on outstanding arrears with respect to domestic rates is not available.

Information on community charge and cumulative council tax arrears for local authorities is not collected centrally. However, the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) regularly publishes estimates for individual authorities. The information shown is provisional and relates to the position at 31 March 1997, and will be available in its Revenue Collection Statistics 1996–97 publication which is expected to be available from May 1998.

The information collected on rent arrears for English authorities is based on the cumulative total of rent arrears at the end of the financial year, and is reported to the Department on Housing Subsidy Claim returns.

Chrysotile

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which substitutes for Chrysotile the EU Scientific Committee on Toxicology, Ecotoxicology and the Environment identified on 11 February as being more hazardous than Chrysotile. [35300]

Angela Eagle: The report the European commission presented to its Scientific Committee included a review of the main substitutes for white asbestos such as polyvinyalcohol, para-Aramid and cellulose fibres. The Scientific Committee's interim opinion was that insufficient evidence had been provided to justify a conclusion that substitute fibres had been proven to be safer. The Committee did not conclude they were more hazardous. Nor did it argue that the categorisation of Chrysotile Asbestos as a category 1 carcinogen was wrong.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with countries that have bans on Chrysotile concerning the lifting of such bans on the basis of the report by the EU Scientific Committee on Toxicology, Ecotoxicology and the Environment. [35301]

Angela Eagle: There have been no discussions whatsoever about lifting existing bans on white asbestos.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many members there are on the EU Scientific Committee on Toxicology, Ecotoxicology and the Environment; and how many of them are specialists in asbestos-related illness. [35302]

Angela Eagle: There are 15 members of the European Commission's Scientific Committee on Toxicology, Ecotoxicology and the Environment. Members are appointed by the European Commission as independent specialists. I understand that the European Commission considered the range of expertise necessary in making its appointments.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what toxicological effects other than those of Chrysotile were considered at the 11 February meeting of the EU Scientific Committee on Toxicology, Ecotoxicology and the Environment; and if he will make a statement. [35303]

Angela Eagle: The European Commission's Scientific Committee on Toxicology, Ecotoxicology and the Environment has a wide remit. The meeting on 9 February considered several issues in addition to white asbestos and its substitutes.

Social Housing

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish figures on Government investment in social housing, giving the numbers of beds for each year since 1994–95 in (a) London and (b) the United Kingdom. [35128]

Mr. Raynsford: Investment by Registered Social Landlords in new social housing in England is funded by the Housing Corporation through its Approved Development Programme (ADP) and by local authorities under the Local Authority Social Housing Grant (LASHG) scheme.

The table shows the number of new social homes approved under these programmes in London and England in each year since 1994/95 together with the number of people they can accommodate. Additional social lettings are also provided through grants to tenants to help them buy a new home and vacate their existing dwelling for reletting, and the Housing Corporation's Do-It-Yourself Shared Ownership scheme for tenants (DIYSO). The social lettings provided by these home ownership schemes are not included in the figures.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will make a statement on his policy on aircraft noise nuisance; [35400]

(2) if it is his policy to continue to reduce aircraft noise after 2002. [35399]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government's policy is to minimise the impact of airports on the environment while ensuring that land use planning and conservation policies take account of the economic benefits of maintaining a strong and competitive British airline industry and providing sufficient airport capacity where it is economically and environmentally justified. This necessarily involves striking a balance between the needs of an efficient aviation industry, providing jobs and serving the local, regional and national economy and the need to minimise the impact on the environment and the communities around airports. There has been a substantial improvement in the noise climate around Heathrow over the past two decades, which has been accelerated since 1990 by the compulsory progressive phase-out of Chapter 2 jet aircraft, a process due to be completed by 31 March 2002. While this makes the securing of further improvement all the more challenging, the Government are committed to doing everything practicable to ensure that the noise climate around the airport continues to improve after 2002. We have given local people around Heathrow an additional commitment to take all practicable steps to prevent a deterioration in the noise climate after the Chapter 2 phase-out is complete.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how often he meets the BAA and airline representatives to discuss aircraft noise from planes using Heathrow Airport. [35398]

Ms Glenda Jackson: DETR Ministers meet with airline representatives and BAA plc from time to time to discuss a wide range of matters, including the nuisance caused by aircraft landing and taking off at Heathrow.

Water Pressure

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to ensure that water companies meet their water leakage targets and maintain enough water pressure for fire fighting; [35388]

(2) what statutory obligations are placed on water companies to maintain adequate water pressure for fire fighting; [35387]

(3) which water companies in respect of which areas have reduced the mains water pressure since 1991. [35386]

Angela Eagle: Water companies continually monitor and alter the water pressures in their systems to meet prevailing circumstances in their areas. Under section 65 of the Water Industry Act 1991, water companies have a duty to ensure that water in mains which serve domestic properties or have fire hydrants fixed on them will normally be supplied at sufficient pressure to reach the top most storey of every building within their area. The Director General of Water Services has a duty to ensure that companies meet these provisions of the 1991 Act. Where water companies reduce pressure as one means of reducing leakage, they must still meet the requirements of the Act.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is (a) the average pressure in water supplies made available to the London Fire Brigade by Thames Water and (b) the (i) optimal and (ii) minimum required level for operational efficiency; [35351]

(2) what was the average pressure in water supplies made available by Thames Water to the London Fire Brigade in each of the last 10 years. [35352]

Angela Eagle: The average pressure of water in the mains in London is between 15 and 30 static head. There has been no appreciable variation in the pressure in the last 10 years.

For operational purposes, the London Fire Brigade requires a minimum flow rate from a hydrant of approximately 760 litres per minute. At present, they do not have any difficulty with flow rates.

Marine Pollution (Wales)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the cleaning of vessel tanks off the coast of Wales and its impact on the marine environment. [35520]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None.

Transport Policy

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what submissions concerning traffic management as a means of road traffic reduction he has received in respect of his consultation document, "Developing an Integrated Transport Policy"; and if he will place a copy of these in the Library. [35637]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A large number of the 6,500 responses received mentioned ways of making better use of the existing network and urban traffic management although not always explicitly in the context of seeking road traffic reduction. A report of the views expressed in the consultation is being prepared for publication with the White Paper on Transport policy. I will ensure copies of that report are placed in the Library.

M62 (Junction 8)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the public inquiry into plans to build Junction 8 on the M62 will take place. [35422]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The public inquiry for this scheme is planned for this Autumn. We have yet to fix a precise date for its opening, but I will ensure that my hon. Friend is notified as soon as we have.

Rural Social Services

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the impact of the 1998–99 rate support grant on the provision of social services in rural areas. [34065]

Mr. Raynsford: The impact of the 1998–99 revenue support grant settlement on the provision of social services in rural areas depends upon local authorities' decisions on the size and allocation of their budgets.

Regional Airports

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make a decision regarding air service access to regional airports. [35424]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Liberalisation of air services agreements to permit the operation of international services to regional airports is considered during many air services talks. Air services within the European Economic Area are already fully liberal. The airlines of a further 66 countries have access to any regional point in the UK, and the airlines of a further 21 countries have access to some regional points.

We are reviewing the responses to the informal consultation on international access to regional airports and are also mindful of the current deliberations of the Environment and Transport Select Committee on access to regional airports. A decision will be made when all the relevant information and advice has been considered.

Council Tax

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish figures for band D council taxes in England in 1998–99, showing (a) figures for each notifiable authority excluding parish precepts, (b) figures for each notifiable authority including parish precepts, (c) the percentage increase in council tax for each notifiable authority including parish precepts, (d) council tax for the area of each billing authority, (e) the percentage increase in council tax for the area of each billing authority and (f) equivalent figures for each class of authority. [35660]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested will be placed in the Library of the House.

Rail Franchising

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when plans by First Group plc to take over Great Western Holdings were submitted to the Director General of Passenger Rail Franchising; what powers the Director General has in such cases to prevent takeovers; what range of conditions he can impose on such takeovers; what are the duties of consultation of the Director General before determining such conditions; and if he will make a statement. [35419]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The first intimations that First Group were considering the takeover of Great Western Holdings Ltd. (GWHL) were given to the Franchising Director orally in the latter part of January 1998. The Franchising Director confirmed to the First Group that any change of control would require his approval; that in considering his approval he would take into account the Objectives, Instructions and Guidance (OIG) issued to him on behalf of the Secretary of State on 6 November 1997 (a copy is in the Library of the House) which, in his view, obliged him to ensure that benefits were secured for passengers if the change of control were to be allowed; and that the Office of the Rail Regulator and the Office of Fair Trading would deal with competition aspects of the proposed takeover. He was not party to the properly private discussions between First Group and GWHL. He heard from First Group on the evening of 3 March that, in view of Press speculation, they wished to announce on 4 March that they were in advanced discussions with GWHL. On 4 March the Franchising Director met First Group to discuss the passenger benefits to be provided under the 3 franchises involved, Great Western Trains and North Western Trains (which First Group seek to acquire) and Great Eastern (which First Group already own).

The Franchising Director's powers are contractual. Under the franchise agreements for Great Western Trains and North Western Trains his prior consent to change of control must be obtained. He has unfettered contractual discretion to refuse or attach conditions to his consent.

Having taken the view that, as a result of the proposed takeover none of the terms and condition of the franchise agreements would be changed the OIG obliged him to ensure that additional benefits were secured for passengers if the takeover were to be allowed. The Franchising Director announced on 6 March 1998 various benefits on the basis of which, subject to contract, he proposes to approve the takeover. These will include additional rolling stock; station improvements, including the provision of wheelchair access and bicycle facilities; security cameras and greater bus/rail through-ticketing. He is discussing details of the package with PTEs who, as parties to the North Western Trains franchise agreement, he is required to consult on issues affecting them. The Franchising Director has general obligations under his OIG to consult and liaise with other bodies. He has no specific duties of consultation about conditions to his consent to a change of control.

Environmental Task Force

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the number of non-governmental groups that have to date shown an interest in participating in the Environmental Task Force within the New Deal welfare to work programme; and what responses he has received from these organisations. [33113]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have been asked to reply.

Many non-governmental groups have shown great interest in the Environment Task Force option of the New Deal. However, the contracting process for this option is currently underway and the numbers participating are now yet available. Responses from non-governmental groups have been varied, ranging from comments on the design and implementation of the option to expressions of interest in tendering for delivery.

TREASURY

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if current holders of TESSAs and PEPs will be required to transfer their investments to ISAs from April 1999; [33270]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on existing holders of TESSAs and PEPs of the replacement of TESSAs and PEPs by ISAs in April 1999. [33271]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 10 March 1998]: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced in his Budget, 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 1102, all PEPs held at 5 April 1999 can continue to be held as PEPs, outside the new savings account, but with the same tax advantages as the new account. TESSAs held at 5 April 1999 can run to maturity outside the new account, and the capital from maturing TESSAs can be rolled over into the new account without counting against the annual subscription limit.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government will require providers of ISAs to submit sufficient information to provide a breakdown of how many people invested (a) up to £1,000, (b) £1,001 to £2,000, (c) £2,001 to £3,000, (d) £3,001 to £4,000, (e) £4,001 to £5,000 and (f) £5,001 to £6,000 in the most recent year for which figures are available. [34961]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 17 March 1998]: Precise details of the information to be submitted will be for discussion with industry representatives when drafting detailed regulations for the ISA.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the estimated cost of tax relief on PEPs in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 2000–1, as calculated in the consultative document on ISAs, is attributable (i) to CGT exemption and (ii) income tax relief. [33510]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 9 March 1998]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary gave on 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 210, and to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 3 February 1998, Official Report, column 574.

Pensions (Tax Relief)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the most recent statistics collated by his Department on the distribution, by income, of the benefits from tax relief on contributions to occupational and personal pensions. [34339]

Dawn Primarolo: The distribution of tax relief by income of participants in occupational and personal pension schemes is not available, but the total cost of tax relief, based on aggregate information from a variety of sources, is published annually in table 1.6 of "Inland Revenue Statistics".

Airports (Seizures of Medicines)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list for each year since 1991 those medicines and medical equipment seized from passengers at airports, who were travelling to Baghdad via Amman; and if he will make a statement; [31678]

(2) if medicines seized at Heathrow on 6 February from Amman-bound passengers will be returned to them; [31677]

(3) what medical materials were seized at Heathrow airport on 10 February from passengers bound for Baghdad via Amman. [31674]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 February 1998]: No medical materials were seized at Heathrow airport on 10 February from passengers bound for Baghdad via Amman. Certain items understood to be destined for Iraq were detained pending further inquiries.

Following the adoption of the UN Security Council Resolution 661 (1990) the export to Iraq of any goods, unless under the authority of an export licence, has been prohibited under the Export of Goods (Control) (Iraq and Kuwait Sanctions) Order 1990 [SI 1990/1640], which came into force on 9 August 1990. No seizures of medicines and medical equipment from passengers at airports travelling to Baghdad via Amman have been made as a consequence of these restrictions.

Beer Duty

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received urging him to introduce a progressive beer duty. [35516]

Dawn Primarolo: The Society of Independent Brewers (SIBA) is a trade association which represents the smaller breweries. SIBA sent a detailed representation about the introduction of a progressive rate of duty to me on 9 March 1998. I have also received a number of letters from SIBA members urging me to consider SIBA's proposals and I have agreed to do so.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of proposals for the introduction of a progressive beer duty; and if he will make a statement. [35515]

Dawn Primarolo: I received proposals for a sliding scale of beer duty from The Society of Independent Brewers on 9 March 1998. I have asked Customs and Excise to examine them and to provide me with advice in good time for the next Budget.

Industrial and Provident Societies

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current regime for co-operatives and other industrial and provident societies. [36181]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury and the Registry of Friendly Societies have issued a consultation document today inviting views on what changes to the existing legislation would be desirable if a suitable opportunity were to arise. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Valuation Office

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets will be set for the Valuation Office Executive Agency for the year 1998–99. [36182]

Dawn Primarolo: I have set the following key targets for the Valuation Office in 1998–99:

Operational

- to clear 275,000 appeals in aggregate against the 1995 and earlier rating lists
- to clear 83,500 appeals against the council tax valuation lists; with the aim, in co-operation with the valuation tribunals, of clearing all cases within 6 months of receipt
- to clear Inland Revenue cases equal to the number received up to a maximum of 57,000—with the aim of clearing 90 per cent. of cases within:
  - 42 days where a valuation only is requested
  - 6 months where negotiation with the parties is required

Quality of service

- to provide a substantive reply to:
  - 90 per cent. of correspondence within 15 working days of receipt
  - the remaining 10 per cent. within 20 working days of receipt
- to see all callers to our offices within 5 minutes
- to achieve a further improvement against our indicator for valuation accuracy—by 1 per cent. to 87 per cent.
- to maintain performance against our indicator for timeliness at 98 per cent.

Finance and cost efficiency

- to break even overall after charging for the full cost of chargeable services including notional interest of 6 per cent on the average working capital
- measurement will be within a tolerance of the greater of 2 per cent. of relevant turnover or £1 million
- to achieve financial efficiency gains of 4.6 per cent.

Further details are contained in the Valuation Office's Forward Plan, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House on publication.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Experience

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if it will be the responsibility of companies contributing to the Millennium Experience to finance and create exhibits in their section. [31524]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 59.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what estimate he has made of the additional tourist revenue which will be generated by the Millennium Experience. [31878]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 17 November 1997, Official Report, column 77.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will publish a full list of proposals for the content of the Millennium Experience (a) he and (b) the New Millennium Experience Company has rejected. [34789]

Mr. Mandelson: All proposals which come direct to me are passed to the New Millennium Experience Company for consideration. To date, the Company have received over 1,220 ideas from the public, interests groups, voluntary organisations and businesses, and they continue to receive a steady flow.

All unsolicited proposals received by the Company are subject to review and assessment. To date about 340 have been rejected following this review process.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what assessment he has made of public reaction to the Millennium Dome to date. [31965]

Mr. Mandelson: The presentation of content, launched by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, on 24 February has prompted a very positive response from the public.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister without Portfolio whom he has appointed as creative director of the Millennium Dome; and who has overall creative responsibility for the Dome. [31968]

Mr. Mandelson: This is a matter for the New Millennium Experience Company. They are currently considering whether a single creative director is required or whether the current arrangements whereby the creative team report to the Directors of the Company remains the best way forward.

DEFENCE

Brazilian Mahogany

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates his Department received certificates of conformity for the Brazilian mahogany purchased from Parker Kislingbury Ltd; and if he will place copies of the certificates in the Library. [34449]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 13 March 1998]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Ships Support Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from J. D. Coles to Mr. Alan Simpson, dated 23 March 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Certificates of Conformity we received for the Brazilian mahogany purchased from Parker Kislingbury as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as the Chief Executive of the Ships Support Agency.

Parker Kislingbury provided the initial Certificate of Conformity related to supplies of Brazilian mahogany from Madeireira Juary on 16 July 1997. Subsequent Certificates of Conformity which relate to later deliveries are also held. The Certificates are required in accordance with our long-standing policy that all material offered by contractors, and subsequently accepted under Contract, must be obtained from sustainably grown sources. The contract was placed with Parker Kislingbury on this basis on 30 July 1997.

I will be pleased to arrange for copies of the Certificates of Conformity relating to the MOD Contract with Parker Kislingbury to be placed in the Library in the House of Commons.

US Military Personnel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States personnel have been based at (a) RAF Menwith Hill and (b) RAF Croughton in each year since 1987; and what was the maximum number present at one time in each year. [35602]

Dr. Reid: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Freedom of Information

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to introduce legislation on freedom of information. [35088]

Dr. David Clark: I expect to publish a draft Bill later in the year, which will continue the consultation process started with the White Paper "Your Right to Know". In the light of comments on this, a Bill will be introduced into Parliament as soon as the legislative timetable permits.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Pakistan

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 25, if Pakistan falls within her category of countries diverting limited resources into excessive military expenditure. [35241]

Clare Short: Pakistan has traditionally spent a high proportion of its national budget on defence. We understand and welcome the fact that defence spending measured as a percentage of GDP has been declining steadily in recent years. The UK's bilateral development co-operation programme with Pakistan focuses particularly on working to improve basic social services which benefit the poor.

Children and Armed Conflict

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support her Department is giving to the work of the UN Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict. [35203]

Clare Short: We contributed £200,000 in November 1997 to support the work of the new UN Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict and intend to continue to work closely with him to ensure the protection, healing and rehabilitation of war affected children world-wide. We recognise that children who find themselves in the unique situation of caring for younger children, possibly because parents have died in conflict or from conditions such as AIDS, are particularly vulnerable. We are trying to address these issues in our development programmes and will highlight our concerns to Mr. Otunnu when his proposals for international action on children and armed conflict are discussed with our European partners at a ministerial meeting in London on 23 June 1998 which my Department will host.

Afghanistan

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many British-based aid agencies are currently undertaking work in Afghanistan; and if she will name them. [35712]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development (DFID) works with a number of British and international aid agencies in Afghanistan and funds projects in a variety of sectors including demining, health, community development and education. The British based Agencies which are funded by DFID are as listed. There may be other British NGOs working independently within Afghanistan supported by other donors.

Afghanaid
Agency Co-ordinating Body for Afghan Refugees (ACBAR)
British Agencies Afghan Group
British Red Cross Society
CAFOD CARE
Children in Crisis
Christian Aid
Halo Trust
Medair
Merlin
Ockenden Venture
OXFAM
Support for Afghan Further Education
Sandy Gall's Afghanistan Appeal
Save the Children
TEAR Fund.

Terrorism

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 25, if it is her policy that sponsoring terrorism in other countries is not a bar to countries receiving development assistance from the United Kingdom. [35240]

Clare Short: This Government like all responsible governments condemn state sponsorship of terrorism. Where the policies of other governments make a development partnership with them impossible, but where effective help can be given directly to poor people, it is my Department's policy to deliver development assistance through alternative channels, including community based and non-governmental organisations.

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish (a) the number of places on each of her Department's non-departmental public bodies, (b) the number of places that are currently unfilled on each non-departmental public body, (c) the total number of members that have resigned since 1 May 1997, (d) the total number that have retired since 1 May 1997, (e) the total number that have not had their contracts renewed since 1 May 1997, (f) the total number that have remained in place since 1 May 1997 and (g) the total number that have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [35284]

Clare Short [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The information is as follows:

Non-Departmental Public Body	(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)	(e)	(f)	(g)

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average time taken for the Metropolitan Police to amend and return firearms certificates. [35239]

Mr. Michael: The arrangement for processing firearm certificates in the Metropolitan Police area is an operational matter for the Commissioner. We understand that the average time for processing routine amendments to firearm and shotgun certificates is between two and three weeks.

Following the surrender of handguns under the Firearms (Amendment) Acts 1997, some former handgun owners have sought variations to their certificates in order to permit them to take up new shooting sports. No fee is payable by handgun owners in respect of amendments involving replacement, rather than additional, firearms. However, the proposed acquisition of new firearms may involve the police in inspecting the applicant's security arrangements and confirming the details of his proposed shooting activities. For these reasons, the time taken to deal with amendments and return certificates to their owners may take several months. While the Metropolitan Police have confirmed that they are seeking to deal with any backlogs as a matter of urgency, this will have to depend to some extent on the urgency of competing demands.

As well as dealing with variations to firearm certificates recently, police firearms licensing departments have dealt with the considerable volume of work relating to the surrender of handguns and the processing of compensation claims, as well as routine licensing and firearms matters.

British Citizenship

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship by (a) naturalisation on the grounds of residence, (b) naturalisation on the grounds of marriage, (c) registration as an adult and (d) registration as a child were made in (i) 1994, (ii) 1995, (iii) 1996, (iv) 1997 and (v) 1998 to the latest convenient date; and what was the average length of time taken to deal with each application in each of the years listed. [35130]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The number of applications received in each category in the years 1994 to 24 February 1998 are as follows. We do not record the average time taken to deal with each application within a calendar year. The figures in brackets show the average number of months taken to consider applications as at 31 December each year with the exception of 1998 when the position at the end of February is shown.

	Registrations		Naturalisation

Airline Offences

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many United Kingdom citizens have been prosecuted and convicted of committing an offence on board a commercial airliner in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [35195]

Mr. Michael: Under Part IV of the Civil Aviation Act 1982, as amended by the Civil Aviation (Amendment) Act 1996, and Part I of the Aviation Security Act 1986, criminal proceedings can be brought if an offence takes place on board a commercial British-controlled aircraft, or a foreign commercial aircraft while in flight to the United Kingdom. However, although the Home Office Court Proceedings database records all prosecutions in England and Wales, the data held centrally do not identify whether the offence took place on board an airliner, nor the defendant's nationality.

Court proceedings data for offences including the hijacking of an aircraft are given in the table.

Number of defendants prosecuted at magistrates' courts and convicted[1] at all courts for offences under Sections 1–3 and 6(2) of the Aviation Security Act 1982, 1990–1996

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35117]

Mr. Straw: Events planned so far for April and May for which expenditure on hospitality will be incurred are as follows:

Date	Location	Purpose	Estimated expenditure (£)
7 April	Yet to be decided	Dinner for Canadian Prisons Minister	150
16 April	Police Training Centre, Ashford	Dining-in guests	85
16 April	Police Training Centre, Ryton	Passout parade	127
21 April	Vienna	Dinner for United Nation Crime Commission	2,500
23 April	Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre	Seminar on prison health care	4,960
23 April	Goring Hotel, London	Dinner for Community Fire Safety Task Force	400
30 April	Police Staff College	International Commanders Programme course dinner	60
21 May	Police Training Centre, Ryton	Passout parade	145
21 May	Police Training Centre, Ashford	Dining-in guests	85
23 May	Police Training Support, Harrogate	Dining-in guests	60

It is not possible to provide a comprehensive estimate for total expenditure on hospitality as the majority of events and meetings will not be finalised until nearer the time.

Correspondence

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to reply to the letter dated 17 November 1997 concerning Mr. and Mrs. Utting from the hon. Member for North Wiltshire. [35771]

Mr. Michael: I replied to the hon. Member on 18 March 1998. The Home Office has received a lot of correspondence on the subject of law and order in recent months; this has meant that not all letters have been answered as quickly as we would have liked. We have also put measures in hand to improve the Home Office correspondence system in order to provide speedier, high quality responses in future.

Gambling

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what definition his Department applies to hard and soft gambling; and if his Department defines slot machines as a form of hard gambling. [35765]

Mr. George Howarth: We regard as hard gambling those forms likely to cause problem gambling among customers—for example, because of high frequency combined with high staking.

We regard as soft gambling low stake, long odds forms where it is very difficult to chase losses.

There are various types of gaming machines. How hard and how soft they are depends on their stake limits, prize levels and, to some extent, their locations and numbers.

Crime Figures

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends next to publish recorded crime figures; and if he will make a statement on the methodology used to compile them. [34686]

Mr. Michael: The next recorded crime figures for England and Wales, covering the calendar year 1997, will be published in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin on 7 April 1998.

The recorded crime figures are based on statistical returns provided by the 43 police force areas in England and Wales. The data are compiled using rules for classification and counting issued by the Home Office to maintain the consistency of recording some of the more complex and potentially difficult offences, such as multiple, continuous and repeated offences.

Periodically, the Home Office rules and police recording practices are reviewed to ensure consistency and to determine whether updates are necessary. Recently, both Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary and a joint Home Office/Association of Chief Police Officers working party have undertaken such reviews. Their recommendations are being adopted in a package of measures for implementation on 1 April 1998, which were announced initially by my right hon. Friend on 1 October 1997. More detail was given by the Home Office's Director of Research and Statistics on 14 October 1997.

The main measures comprise the logical extension of the coverage of recorded crimes (or notifiable offences) to include all indictable and triable either way offences; the revision of the counting rules for certain offences to move closer to the concept of one crime per victim; a move to financial year publication; and less emphasis in publications on the overall total of recorded crime in favour of individual offence groups.

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish (a) the number of places on each of his Department's non-departmental public bodies, (b) the number of places that are currently unfilled on each non-departmental public body, (c) the total number of members that have resigned since 1 May 1997, (d) the total number that have retired since 1 May 1997, (e) the total number that have not had their contracts renewed since 1 May 1997, (f) the total number that have remained in place since 1 May 1997 and (g) the total number that have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [35275]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The information requested is not held centrally within the Department. When it has been assembled and collated I will write to the hon. Member.

Young Offenders

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many psychologists and assistants are currently in post at each Young Offenders Institution in (a) London and (b) the Home Counties; what is the full complement for each unit; and what were the number in post for each of the last five years. [34794]

Ms Quin: The number of psychologists and psychological assistants in post in Young Offender Institutions and the current complement of these units are:

	Current	Complement
London
Feltham	5	6
Home Counties
Aylesbury	4	5

A visiting psychology service is provided to young offenders at Bullwood Hall, Dover and Reading, East Sutton Park can call upon the services of a psychologist when necessary.

Additionally, there are psychology units at Highpoint, Rochester and Woodhill. They provide a service to adult offenders but not to the young offender unit. The number of psychologists and pschological assistants in post and the complement of the psychology units in these three establishments are:

	Current	Complement
Home Counties
Highpoint	3	3
Rochester	1	1
Woodhill	5	5

The number of psychologists and psychological assistants in post in the psychology units listed above for each of the last five years are:

Establishment	31.03.97	31.03.96	31.03.95	31.03.94	31.03.93
Aylesbury	3	3	5	5	4
Feltham	5	6	7	7	8
Highpoint	3	3	4	3	4
Rochester	—	—	—	—	—
Woodhill	3	3	3	3	2

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders in young offenders units are assessed to be suffering from mental health problems; and how many are awaiting placement in a secure psychiatric hospital. [34804]

Ms Quin: A study conducted by the Institute of Psychiatry for the Prison Service in 1988–89 indicated that a psychiatric diagnosis, including substance dependency or abuse, could be given to 33 per cent. of sentenced male youths, wherever detained. Data on female young offenders were not collated separately from data on adult women.

On 18 March 1998 the Mental Health Unit of the Home Office, which authorises transfers to hospital exercising the warrant of the Secretary of State, had no cases outstanding on which medical reports had been submitted by Young Offender Institutions recommending transfer to hospital under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the training and qualification requirements for staff of young offenders units (a) prior to employment and (b) during their term of employment. [34803]

Ms Quin: Individuals who want to join the Prison Service as prison officers require five GCSEs or the equivalent. All newly recruited prison officers attend an eleven week course to equip them to work in a variety of prison establishments. Prison officers who will be working in Young Offender Institutions are also required to attend a specific module on the course which deals with issues related to working with young offenders.

The Prison Service, working with the Trust for the Study of Adolescence, has produced a specialist training pack "Working with Young People in Custody". This specialist training pack is delivered in the workplace and external accreditation is now being sought. The Senior Command Course, aimed at Governors who will be taking up their first 'in charge' post, deals with issues of governing a Young Offender Institution.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of young offenders on remand in Young Offenders Units were in the care of the local authority prior to remand in each of the last five years. [34793]

Ms Quin: It is not known what percentage of young offenders on remand in Young Offender Institutions were in the care of the local authority prior to remand in each of the last five years as this information is not held centrally. However, according to the 1991 National Prison Survey, 43 per cent. of young offenders on remand said that they had been in the care of the local authority at some time in their childhood.

Shotguns

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to alter legislation regarding the certification of shotguns. [35377]

Mr. Michael: There are no current proposals to alter legislation regarding the certification of shotguns.

Countryside March

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current estimate by the Metropolitan Police of the number of participants in the Countryside March in London on 1 March. [35360]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis estimates that 250,000 people participated in the Countryside March in London on 1 March.

Campsfield House Detention Centre

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish HM Chief Inspector of Prisons' report on the Campsfield Detention Centre. [35551]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The date for the publication of the report on Campsfield House Immigration Detention Centre has not yet been announced, but it is expected to be published shortly.

Immigration Officers

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what date seasonal staff employed as immigration officers were informed of his Department's new retirement policy for seasonal staff. [35391]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In October 1996, seasonal immigration officers at ports were advised that, with effect from 1 November 1997, the normal retirement age would be sixty to bring them into line with the rest of the Department.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seasonal staff in the Immigration Department will reach the age of 60 years during the next year and have their contracts terminated under the age retirement policy for seasonal staff. [35390]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In the year up until 31 March 1999, three seasonal immigration officers who are currently on the Home Office payroll will reach the age of sixty and are liable to have their contracts terminated under the age retirement policy for seasonal staff.

Asteroids

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will evaluate the reports concerning an asteroid on a near-collision course with the Earth; and if he will make a statement; [34873]

(2) what contingency plans have been made in the event of a threat arising from asteroids colliding with the Earth; and if he will make a statement; [34874]

(3) what provision exists for international consultation and co-operation over potential dangers arising from asteroids striking the Earth; and if he will make a statement. [34875]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

The asteroid 1997 XF11, which was discovered last year, has an orbit around the Sun which crosses the Earth's orbit. It will pass by the Earth in 2028. Computations made by American scientists earlier this month indicated that the asteroid could come within 30,000 miles of the Earth. However, I understand that scientists from the American space agency NASA have now been able to locate pre-1997 images of the asteroid. This has enabled them to calculate a more precise orbit for 1997 XF11 which indicates that it will miss the Earth by a much larger margin of 600,00 miles (or about 2.5 times the distance to the Moon).

The probability of a major impact from an asteroid is extremely low, but the emergency services and the emergency planning community in the UK prepare for a wide range of disasters and scenarios and they would respond if the need arose.

International co-operation and consultation on this issue are taken forward in Europe through the European Space Agency and globally through the United Nations Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNCOPUOS). The UK is involved in both.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Multi-party Talks

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what public money has been paid in respect of (a) political parties and (b) individuals from political parties involved in the multi-party talks for transport to London for meetings with the Government. [25331]

Mr. Paul Murphy: To date a total of £5,811.50 has been spent on transportation costs conveying representatives from parties participating in talks to London for meetings with the Government.

Paramilitary Organisations

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 251, what account she took of the involvement of the IRA in the murder of Kevin Conway in confirming the invitation to Sinn Fein to rejoin the peace talks on 6 March. [34863]

Marjorie Mowlam: The invitation to rejoin the talks issued to Sinn Fein on 6 March took into account all aspects of the state of the IRA ceasefire.

By confirming the invitation to Sinn Fein, the two Governments demonstrated that they were satisfied the IRA ceasefire was being observed.

Voting Methods

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of the way in which the future structures for government within Northern Ireland will be determined with particular reference to methods of voting. [32960]

Marjorie Mowlam: It is for the multi-party talks to reach agreement on new structures of government within Northern Ireland, and the method of voting by which they are elected. We shall do all in our power to facilitate such agreement in the coming weeks.

Sports Funding

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list, by individual governing body, the grant-in-aid made available by the Sports Council for Northern Ireland to governing bodies of sport for each of the financial years 1992 to 1998. [34246]

Mr. Worthington: The information is as follows:

[1]To 28 February 1998

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total grant-in-aid made available by the Sports Council of Northern Ireland to governing bodies of sport for each of the financial years 1992 to 1998; and what it is projected to be for the next three financial years. [34244]

Mr. Worthington: The information is as follows:

Year	£
1992–93	537,767.86
1993–94	613,212.24
1994–95	625,720.48
1995–96	656,606.06
1996–97	658,953.43
1997–98[1]	630,000
1998–99[1]	620,000

It will not be possible to project figures beyond 1998–99 until the results of the Comprehensive Spending Review are known.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list, by individual governing body, the grant-in-aid projected to be made available by the Sports Council for Northern Ireland to governing bodies of sport for the next three financial years. [34245]

Mr. Worthington: It is not possible for the Sports Council for Northern Ireland to project grant-in-aid allocations to individual governing bodies, as these will depend on the nature of individual grant applications submitted.

Shorts

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment she has made of the implications for Short's share of the Bombardier Aerospace Group's research, development and design work of the commitments made by Bombardier at the time of privatisation. [35534]

Mr. Ingram: Bombardier has fulfilled the undertakings provided in relation to Shorts when it acquired the business in October 1989. From the reports I have received from both Bombardier and Shorts on the future plans for the business I have no reason to doubt their assurances that Shorts will remain an integrated design and manufacturing operation within Bombardier Aerospace.

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will provide a breakdown of the amount of public funds given to Shorts since privatisation, including a breakdown of the privatisation package into (i) projected losses, (ii) launch aid, (iii) additional capital expenditure and (iv) training. [35537]

Mr. Ingram: The cost to Government of the financial terms of the sale of Shorts to Bombardier in October 1989 was £780 million less £30 million paid by Bombardier for the share capital of Shorts. The £780 million included £665 million for the restructuring of the company's balance sheet which included projected losses on existing contracts and £115 million for future Government support including £79 million grant towards capital expenditure, £18 million for training and other costs and £18 million towards the non-recurring costs of developing components for the Regional Jet. No launch aid was provided at this stage. The grant aid has been fully paid and the conditions applied to it have been met.

In addition to the privatisation package, Shorts has received the following grant assistance from the Department of Economic Development's agencies since October 1989:

Agencies	£ million

Training and Employment Agency	5.79

The company also received £17.72 million launch aid from the Department of Trade and Industry (£15 million) and Industrial Development Board (£2.72 million) towards the cost of the development of the Learjet 45 aircraft.

Long-term Unemployed

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her speech to the Royal Geographical Society, if she will list the legal obstacles to employers recruiting directly from the long-term unemployed. [35844]

Mr. Ingram: Restricting the field of recruitment to the long-term unemployed brings with it a greater risk of the pool of potential candidates being disproportionately of one religion, gender or, possibly, race. In such circumstances a person of another religion, gender or race may have grounds for making a complaint of indirect discrimination on the basis that persons of his/her religion, gender or race in Northern Ireland were less able to satisfy the criterion of being long-term unemployed.

Police (Conference)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the purpose of the recent one-day conference on policing held in the Galgorm Hotel; how many were involved; what was the respective appointment of each; who organised the seminar; and if two-tier policing was on the agenda. [35654]

Mr. Ingram: I have no knowledge of any conference on policing held in the Galgorm Hotel. However a two-day workshop organised by the Northern Ireland Office took place recently elsewhere. It involved 11 RUC Officers of ranks ranging from Assistant Chief Constable to Chief Inspector and 6 Senior Officials from the Northern Ireland Office. The aim of the workshop was to explore the implications of the evolving role of the RUC in terms of the police, the public and the broader criminal justice system. "Two tier policing" was not on the agenda.

Visit (New York)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the purpose of the visit to the Harlem or Bronx districts of New York of those involved in policing in Northern Ireland; how many were involved; what was the respective appointment of each; who sponsored the visit; and what was the total cost involved. [35653]

Mr. Ingram: In December 1997 fifteen RUC officers took part in a research visit to New York, which had been approved by the Chief Constable. The group of police officers, led by an Assistant Chief Constable and including Superintendents, Chief Inspectors, Inspectors and a Constable, observed a number of policing initiatives currently in practice within the New York Police Department. These included police management, performance measurement, community policing and community relations activities at both Headquarters and local precinct level. The total cost is not readily determinable.

Mediation Network

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent the organisation Mediation Network is a Government sponsored or assisted body; and what financial or other support it receives from the Northern Ireland Office. [35655]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Mediation Network for Northern Ireland is an independent voluntary organisation with charitable status. It has received the following grants in this financial year from the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office.

Community Relations Budget (through NI Community Relations Council): £117,680 towards salaries and running costs;

NIO: £42,000 towards a research project 'Policing Our Divided Society'.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Sales

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provisions exist within the proposed EU code of conduct on arms sales, to prevent an EU member state taking up an export order already turned down by another EU member state on human rights grounds. [34576]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Code is under negotiation. If our proposal is accepted, each partner would be obliged to consult a member state which had denied an export licence under any of the criteria elaborated in the Code, not just the provisions related to human rights, before coming to a decision on whether to authorise a licence itself for an essentially identical transaction. The decision on whether to authorise the licence would remain at national discretion.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress being made with the negotiations with other member states on the proposed EU code of conduct on arms sales. [34679]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have begun to negotiate the Code with our EU partners in the appropriate CFSP Working Group. We have held one meeting, and will shortly circulate a revised proposal. We hope to agree a Code during the UK Presidency.

Sana'a and Muscat

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on levels of staffing at the British Embassy in (a) Sana'a and (b) Muscat. [34555]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There are 9 UK-based staff and 46 locally engaged staff in Sana'a and 17 UK-based and 37 locally engaged staff in Muscat.

Staffing levels are regularly reviewed through inspections.

Foreign Policy Centre

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any persons working for the Foreign Policy Centre will have access to classified information held within his Department. [33936]

Mr. Fatchett: Access to official information, including protectively marked information, is governed by the Official Secrets Act 1989 which applies both to Crown Servants and to members of the public, including non-governmental organisations. In this respect, the Foreign Policy Centre is no different from any other non-governmental organisation. No-one employed by the Foreign Policy Centre will have access to classified information. One of the Directors of the Centre, Mr. Andrew Hood, has access to classified information in his capacity as Special Adviser in the Foreign Secretary's office.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the northern Cyprus administration on developing meetings within Cyprus of members of the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities to discuss matters of common interest. [35385]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Our High Commission in Nicosia remain in regular touch with the authorities in the north of Cyprus to encourage them to remain actively engaged in the search for a Cyprus settlement, to work with the Government of Cyprus to ensure that the benefits of EU membership are available to all Cypriots, and to develop further links between Cypriots on both sides of the island. We also co-operate closely with the UN and others to promote bi-communal contacts.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means he plans to obtain the views of Turkish Cypriots on the application of the Republic of Cyprus for membership of the European Union. [35372]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Mr. Denktash has expressed his views very clearly. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary offered to meet him in London this month to discuss this issue, and is sorry that he did not take up this offer. We maintain contact with Mr. Denktash through our High Commissioner in Nicosia.

We hope that the Turkish Cypriots will reconsider their refusal to take up the offer to participate in the delegation to the accession negotiations made by President Clerides.

This would allow them to make clear their views to the EU side and also to understand fully the implications of EU membership—including the very substantial benefits which would, we believe, flow to the Turkish Cypriot community.

Turkey

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the current human rights situation in Turkey; what representations he has made to the Government of Turkey on this issue; and what plans he has to include within his statement to the forthcoming UN Commission on Human Rights in Geneva concerns about human rights in Turkey. [35573]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The human rights situation in Turkey continues to give cause for concern. We regularly raise human rights issues with the Turkish authorities. We acknowledge the steps that the Turkish Government have taken to address such concerns, but we have made it clear that more needs to be done. We are committed to working closely with Turkey and to providing practical assistance to help Turkey fully meet its international obligations in this area. In our role as EU Presidency, we will make a series of interventions including on Turkey at the current session of the Commission on Human Rights. The detail of the interventions is still being discussed with partners.

Saudi Arabia and Kenya

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will support proposals to address the human rights situation in Saudi Arabia at the UN Commission on Human Rights under the public procedure. [35510]

Mr. Fatchett: We will support the continuing consideration of human rights issues in Saudi Arabia under the Commission's confidential 1503 procedure.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the Government intend to make in respect of human rights in Kenya at the UN Commission on Human Rights in Geneva. [35507]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will include Kenya in the statement we make in our EU Presidency capacity under Item 8 of the agenda for the UN Commission on Human Rights. It urges, amongst others, the Government of Kenya to co-operate fully with UN Special Rapporteur for Torture.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will urge the Saudi Arabian Government at the UN Commission on Human Rights to extend an invitation to the UN Special Rapporteur on independence of judges and lawyers. [35509]

Mr. Fatchett: We consistently urge Saudi Arabia to co-operate fully with the UN human rights mechanisms.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Kenyan Government requesting co-operation with the (a) Special Rapporteur on torture and (b) Special Rapporteur on extra-judicial executions. [35533]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We regularly raise human rights issues, including torture and extra-judicial killings, with the Kenyan Government. I will raise these issues personally when I visit Kenya on 23–24 March. We encourage all states to co-operate fully with Special Rapporteurs mandated by the UN Commission on Human Rights.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will propose at the UN Commission on Human Rights that the Kenyan Government extend an invitation to a UN Thematic Rapporteur. [35505]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We would urge the Kenyan Government to co-operate with any Thematic Rapporteur mandated by the UN. The EU statement, which we will make under Item 8 of the Commission on Human Rights agenda, urges the Kenyan Government to respond to the outstanding request by the UN Special Rapporteur for Torture to visit Kenya.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the current human rights situation in (a) Kenya and (b) Saudi Arabia. [35506]

Mr. Fatchett: (a) We receive reports from a variety of sources about human rights in Kenya. We are particularly concerned about persistent police brutality, torture and extra-judicial killings. The Kenyan Government are bound under international obligations to make progress in this respect. We will play a full part in ensuring that pressure for such progress is maintained.

(b) Among matters of concern to us in Saudi Arabia are practices in places of detention, shortcomings in the administrations of justice, and barriers to freedom of expression. We welcome Saudi Arabia's recent ratification of Conventions against Torture and Racial Discrimination, and would urge Saudi Arabia to ratify other principal human rights treaties.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations the Government have made to (a) the Saudi Arabian and (b) the Kenyan Government on human rights. [35511]

Mr. Fatchett: (a) We regularly raise human rights issues with the Saudi Arabian government. I discussed human rights with the Saudi Ambassador in May 1997. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary also discussed human rights issues with the Saudi Foreign Minister in New York in September 1997. Our Embassy in Riyadh did so with the Saudi Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 2 March.

(b) We maintain a vigourous dialogue with Kenya on human rights issues through our High Commission in Nairobi and at Ministerial level. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised human rights issues with the new Kenyan Foreign Minister on 3 March, as did my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister with President Moi on 4 January.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what statement the Government plan to make in respect of human rights in (a) Kenya and (b) Saudi Arabia, to the UN Commission on Human Rights in Geneva. [35508]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We will include Kenya and Saudi Arabia in the statement on country situations made by our Head of Delegation to the Commission on behalf of the European Union under Item 10 of the agenda.

Asia-Europe Meeting

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries invited to the second Asia-Europe Meeting in April, indicating which have (a) accepted and (b) refused. [35590]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The attendance at the second Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM 2) will be the same as at the first Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM 1) in Bangkok in 1996. The participants are: on the Asian side—Brunei, China, Indonesia, Japan, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore, South Korea, Thailand and Vietnam; on the European side—the 15 member States of the European Union plus the European Commission. All these countries will be sending their Head of State or Government or a representative.

Commonwealth Human Rights Initiative

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to promote the Commonwealth Human Rights Initiative. [35851]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We support the activities of the Commonwealth Human Rights Initiative (CHRI) and have helped to finance many of their projects, most recently a seminar on National Human Rights Institutions in the Commonwealth, in October 1997, which I addressed.

Harare Declaration

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) of 16 March 1998, Official Report, columns 551–52, if he will press for a commitment to freedom of expression to be added to the Harare Declaration. [35859]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: It remains our view that freedom of expression should be one of the Commonwealth's core values and we will work to ensure that it takes its place alongside other principles expressed in the Harare Declaration. We are also working to ensure that the high standards already agreed in the Harare Declaration are applied throughout the Commonwealth.

Israel

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the purpose of the Minister of State's meeting with the Ambassador of Israel on 18 March; and if he will make a statement. [35850]

Mr. Fatchett: I had no meeting with Ambassador Zeigerman on 18 March.

WALES

National Assembly

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names and addresses of each of the consultancy companies who have advised or are advising him on the National Assembly for Wales location project; if each consultancy contract was publicly tendered; what is the expected cost of each contract; and on what date each contract commenced and, where relevant, finished. [35591]

Mr. Win Griffiths [holding answer 20 March 1998]: Symonds Group of 22 Cathedral Road, Cardiff CF1 9LJ are the Welsh Office's Property Management Consultants. The Commission provides for the provision of all professional services by them and other professionals engaged by them with the Welsh Office's agreement at rates established in the contract. The contract was awarded following a procurement exercise fully compliant with EC rules on public procurement. It commenced on 1 April 1996, for a period of three years. The associated costs are included in the running cost expenditure of the Welsh Office which is published in the Welsh Office Departmental Report 1997. [Cm 3615]

Under the contract, Symonds Group have engaged Crown and Company to provide advice on all estates and property matters including valuation and to act as negotiating agents for the Welsh Office. In addition, the Welsh Office has an agreement with PACE (Property Advisors to the Civil Estate), who are a Cabinet Office agency, to provide advice on all property matters.

The Welsh Office is in the process of letting two contracts to property consultants to provide separate advice on land purchase and valuation matters and on building costs.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received as a result of the review of planning policy for opencast coal; and if he will make a statement. [35047]

Mr. Hain: A consultation paper seeking views on possible changes to planning policy for opencast coal issued in Wales in September 1997. Over 200 responses have been received and these are currently being considered in deciding how the review should proceed.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Privy Council

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Council what criteria will be used in considering the appointment of members of the Scottish Parliament to be members of the Privy Council. [35594]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: Appointment to the Privy Council is an exercise of the prerogative. Appointments are made by Her Majesty the Queen on the advice of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. A range of factors is taken into account. The Government's devolution proposals assume that some members of the Scottish Parliament will be appointed to the Privy Council.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Council what representations she has received on the need for a Scottish Privy Council; and if she will make a statement. [35595]

Mrs. Ann Taylor: I have received no such representations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Smoking

Mr. Barron: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if the Committee has concluded its review of smoking in the general areas; and if she will make a statement. [35923]

Mrs. Roe: At its meeting on 10 March, the Administration Committee reviewed the submissions it had received from hon. Members and staff in response to an invitation on the All-Party Notices concerning smoking in general areas; hon. Members will recall that the Committee had particularly sought views on whether the existing no-smoking zones should be extended to include telephone kiosks, lavatories, private meetings in Committee, Conference and Interview Rooms, the Families' Room and corridors.

By the time of the meeting the Committee had received 54 responses, of which only three favoured the status quo being maintained; the remaining 51 favoured some extension of non-smoking zones, of which 48 supported an extension to include all of the aforementioned areas. Since the Committee's meeting, a further eight submissions, all supporting some extension, have been received, of which five favoured an extension of the no-smoking zones to include those areas specifically mentioned.

Based on these responses, the Committee concluded that there does indeed seem to be a general mood that the non-smoking zones be extended to the above areas, and therefore, the Committee has agreed to such an extension for a trial period from when the House returns after the Easter Adjournment until the House returns after the summer; in the autumn the Committee will review the trial.

However, hon. Members will wish to note that smoking will still be permitted on the Committee Corridor. This is to allow those hon. Members serving on Committees of the House to have an area to smoke during those brief periods when they are able to leave the Committee Room.

I understand that the Information Committee has endorsed a proposal by the Librarian that the Members' Library become a non-smoking area, and that this policy will also take effect on the return of the House after Easter; and I am advised that the Catering Committee and the Director of Catering Services are currently reviewing smoking policy in Refreshment Department outlets.

Finally, I wish to advise the hon. Gentleman that, at the request of the House of Commons Commission, the Administration Committee will be co-ordinating the views of the other relevant Domestic Committees, in order to formulate recommendations on those workplaces shared by both hon. Members and staff.

SCOTLAND

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the pilot study into computer millennium compliance in respect of the Scottish Office has been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [32755]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Scottish Office is currently participating in the quarterly progress reporting of Year 2000 compliance activities described to the House on 3 March 1998, Official Report, columns 619–21, by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) officials and (b) others are currently working on computer millennium compliance in the Scottish Office; and how many have (i) given notice of their intention to leave or (ii) left the Department in the last six months. [32750]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Within the Scottish Office, the central compliance team consists of 1 part-time and 2 full-time officials supplemented by 3 full-time contract staff. In addition, around 10 full-time equivalent staff are currently employed across the Department. One member of staff employed on Year 2000 activities has left in the past six months.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met Treasury Ministers to discuss the costs of computer millennium compliance; and from which budgetary sub-head the costs will be met. [32753]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Education and Industry, Scottish Office is representing The Scottish Office on the two Ministerial Groups addressing these matters. The costs of computer millennium compliance will fall on the appropriate Votes for the various bodies concerned.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to discuss the progress of the Scottish Office towards achieving computer millennium compliance. [32752]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: My hon. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contingency plans he will establish in case of computer failure on 1 January 2000 in respect of the Scottish water authorities. [32748]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Scottish water authorities are being asked to participate in the quarterly progress reporting of Year 2000 compliance activities by Scottish Non-Departmental Public bodies. These reports will be published on The Scottish Office Internet Web site commencing June 1998, and will include information about contingency planning.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contingency plans he will establish in case of computer failure on 1 January 2000 in respect of (a) the police, (b) the Fire Service and (c) the Ambulance Service in Scotland. [32747]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Police and Fire Service computer systems in Scotland are a matter for individual authorities and joint boards. My officials are discussing with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities (COSLA) how best to ensure that councils can demonstrate that they are effectively addressing the Year 2000 problem. The Scottish Ambulance Service is being asked by my Department to participate in the quarterly progress reporting of Scottish Health Service Year 2000 compliance activities. This will include reports on contingency plans.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contingency plans he will establish in case of computer failure on 1 January 2000 in respect of the Scottish Office. [32746]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Scottish Office is currently participating in the quarterly progress reporting of Year 2000 compliance activities described to the House on 3 March 1998, Official Report, columns 619–21 by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The reports include information on contingency planning.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the pilot study of computer millennium compliance in respect of the East of Scotland Water Authority has been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [32743]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The East of Scotland Water Authority is being asked by my Department to participate in the quarterly progress reporting of Year 2000 compliance activities by Scottish Non-Departmental Public bodies. [32742]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: NHS Trusts are being asked by my Department to participate in the quarterly progress reporting of Scottish Health Service Year 2000 compliance activities.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the pilot study of computer millennium compliance in respect of West of Scotland Water Authority has been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [32745]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The West of Scotland Water Authority is being asked by my Department to participate in the quarterly progress reporting of Year 2000 compliance activities by Scottish Non-Departmental Public bodies. These reports will be published on The Scottish Office Internet Web site commencing June 1998.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the pilot study of computer millennium compliance in respect of North of Scotland Water Authority has been completed; what conclusions have been drawn; when millennium compliance will be achieved; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [32744]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The North of Scotland Water Authority is being asked by my Department to participate in the quarterly progress reporting of Year 2000 compliance activates by Scottish Non-Departmental Public bodies. These reports will be published on The Scottish Office Internet Web site commencing June 1998.

Computer Systems

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the main computer systems used by the Scottish Office and its agencies. [32749]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The main computer systems used by The Scottish Office and its agencies are listed in the quarterly progress reporting of Year 2000 compliance activities described to the House on 3 March 1998, Official Report, columns 619–21, by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with other ministers about the impact of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on the powers of the Scottish Parliament. [34561]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 20 March 1998]: I will continue to keep in close touch with my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on matters concerning the Multilateral Agreement on Investment.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in respect of the Scottish Block and central Government support to local authority current expenditure, what the difference is between the planned provision for 1998–99 made by the previous Government after adjustment to take account of updated estimates of the GDP deflator and the revised provision for 1998–99 made by the current Government. [34528]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The information requested is in the table.

	Cash terms			Real terms—1996–97 prices
	1998–99 Planned provision	1998–99 Revised provision	Difference	1998–99 Planned provision	1998–99 Revised provision	Difference

These figures take account of announcements in the 17 March Budget.

Rights of Entry

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many powers of entry or rights of entry he has created or is currently creating in legislation since 1 May 1997. [34585]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 16 March 1998]: Since 1 May 1997, new powers of entry have come into force in Scotland under section 76 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1997 (on 27 May 1997); the Cattle Identification (Enforcement) Regulations 1997 (on 22 August 1997); and section 53 of the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 (on 1 October 1997). Further powers of entry are proposed in the Crime and Disorder Bill to enable the police to seize noise-making equipment which is causing a nuisance.

Free School Meals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of children were on free school meals in each local education authority area and in Scotland as a whole in the last year for which figures are available. [35568]

Mr. Wilson: The information is given in the following table which reflects the local authority structure in Scotland in 1996–97, the latest year for which figures are available.

Residential Care

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the spending on care of the elderly per resident of pensionable age in each social work authority area and in Scotland as a whole in the last year for which figures are available. [35567]

Mr. Galbraith: Local authority spending on the elderly is not separately identified in full by all local authorities, some social work spending being under general headings. The actual social work spend on the elderly includes both the directly recorded spend on the elderly and a major, though unknown, part of the spend not allocated to client groups. Provisional Outturn data for 1996/97 are the most recent outturn data available. The table shows, to the nearest £100, the amount recorded as spent directly on older people, per person aged 65 or over.

Education Spending

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the spending per student in (a) primary and (b) secondary education in each education authority and in Scotland as a whole in the last year for which figures are available. [35571]

Mr. Wilson: The information is given in the following table, which reflects the local authority structure in Scotland in 1995–96, the latest financial year for which information is currently available. The figures, which are derived from local authority financial returns, do not include the cost of home to school transport, school meals, education authority central administration costs, and loan charges.

Gaelic Broadcasting

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 3 March 1998, Official Report, column 581, on Gaelic broadcasting, when he received the consultants' report on "Opportunities for Gaelic Broadcasting in the Digital Era"; if he will publish the report; and if he will make a statement. [35651]

Mr. Wilson: I expect to receive the report by the end of March, Additional time has been allowed to enable the consultant to take account of the consultation paper on the National Economic Research Associates (NERA) Report, "Television: The Digital Era", which the Government published on 12 February. Decisions on taking forward the matters covered by the report will be taken when the report is received.

Learning Disabilities

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made in the review of services for people with learning disabilities; what are the terms of reference of this review; and if the voluntary sector will be consulted in the course of the review. [35233]

Mr. Galbraith: Such a review and its remit are currently under active consideration within the Scottish Office; the voluntary sector would be consulted.

Disability Statement

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made by colleges of further education on the production of disability statements. [35234]

Mr. Wilson: There is no statutory requirement for further education colleges in Scotland to produce disability statements. The Secretary of State requires each college to produce an Annual Report and makes it a condition of a college's grant-in-aid that its Annual Report shall contain statements as to how students with learning difficulties are provided for.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings have been requested with his Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31296]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 2 March 1998]: Information is not held centrally on the number of meetings requested of Scottish Office Ministers by right hon. and hon. Members. It would be unusual for any such requests to be refused. Departmental records show that the following meetings have taken place since May 1 1997:

Minister	Labour	Conservative
Secretary of State	3	1
Mr. McLeish	12	1
Mr. Wilson	8	0
Mr. Galbraith	4	0
Mr. Chisholm/Mr. Macdonald	16	1

Scottish Office Ministers have also met SNP and Liberal Democrat MPs.

HEALTH

Health Services (Kent)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of the consultants at (a) the William Harvey Hospital, Ashford, (b) the Kent and Canterbury Hospital and (c) the Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother Hospital, Thanet, who are (i) performing out-posted sessions and (ii) providing services direct on behalf of fundholders or multifunds; and if he will indicate what services each consultant is providing to each fundholding practice or multifund. [33955]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally. I refer the hon. Member to the trusts, who will be able to provide the information.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of general practitioners providing clinical assistant services to (a) the William Harvey Hospital, Ashford, (b) the Kent and Canterbury Hospital and (c) the Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother Hospital, Thanet. [33956]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not held centrally. I refer the hon. Member to the trusts who will provide the information.

Zantac

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to public funds of purchases of Zantac in the last three complete financial years; and what savings are estimated to derive from the expiry of the patent. [35052]

Mr. Milburn: The available information is shown in the table. No estimate has been made of any savings derived from the expiry of the patent.

Number and the net ingredient cost of prescription items dispensed for Zantac (Ranitidine), 1994–95 to 1996–97
England

Year	Prescription items (millions)	Net ingredient cost (£ million)
1994–95	4.7	147.6
1996–97	4.4	137.2

Notes:
1. The figures are based on a full analysis of all prescriptions dispensed in England in the community, ie by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered.
2. The information on costs is available only in terms of net ingredient cost which refers to the cost of the drug before discounts and does not include any dispensing costs or fees. It does not include any adjustment for income obtained where a prescription charge is paid at the time the prescription is dispensed or where the patient has purchased a pre-payment certificate.

Community Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evaluation he has made of the scope for extending direct payments to include over 65 year olds. [35880]

Mr. Boateng: We will be reviewing the legislation covering direct payments after its first year of operation, and will consider its scope in the light of that review.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reinstate supplementary credit approval for the development of information systems for community care. [35881]

Mr. Boateng: We have no plans to reinstate the supplementary credit approval for information technology for community care which was a feature of the initial period of the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients aged 75 years and over, by region, were readmitted to hospital within 28 days of their discharge in each quarter since April 1996. [35597]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not collected in the format requested. Information on the number of patients aged 75 and over who are readmitted as an emergency within 28 days of discharge for each quarter since April 1996 is shown in the table. This includes all specialties except psychiatry.

GP Consortium Boundaries

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms he will use to implement the NHS White Paper's recommendation that GP consortia use boundaries coterminous with social services. [35879]

Mr. Milburn: Coterminosity with social services boundaries is an important consideration in establishing primary care groups but not the sole one. Others include the need to establish primary care groups around natural communities and ideally a population of 100,000. We shall be issuing guidance shortly on the configuration of primary care groups, including the criteria health authorities should take into account when proposing primary care groups.

Special Transitional Grant

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for continuing special transitional grant into 1999–2000. [35878]

Mr. Milburn: Decisions on the local government finance settlement for 1999/2000 will be announced by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister in the usual manner and at the appropriate time.

Health Spending

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the spending per head in each health authority area and in England as a whole in the last year for which figures are available. [35565]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Residential Care

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the spending on care of the elderly per resident of pensionable age in each social services authority and in England as a whole in the last year for which figures are available. [35566]

Mr. Boateng: Figures of gross current expenditure on care of elderly per head of population aged 65 and over in each social services department and in England in 1995–96, the latest year for which information is available, are given in the table.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instigate an inquiry into age discrimination in the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [35774]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment is currently consulting widely on a code of practice for employers on discrimination at work on the grounds of age. This will give the National Health Service, like other employers, a framework for action, and a separate inquiry is therefore not necessary.

Cholesterol (Treatment)

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for issuing guidelines to general practitioners in relation to prescribing lipid limiting drugs for those with above average cholesterol levels. [35773]

Mr. Milburn: Guidance was issued in August 1997 in relation to prescribing cholesterol lowering drugs. A statement produced by the Department's Standing Medical Advisory Committee and an accompanying table were sent to health authorities, National Health Service trusts and general practitioners under cover of an executive letter. Further copies are available on request from the NHS responseline.

An effective health care bulletin, entitled 'Cholesterol and Coronary Heart Disease: Screening and Treatment', was produced by the Centre for Reviews and Dissemination and issued in February. This gives further advice on prescribing lipid-lowering drugs.

Copies of each document will be placed in the Library.

Ambulances

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations govern the maximum age at which ambulances are considered to be suitable for general use; and if he will make a statement. [35772]

Mr. Boateng: Normal regulations for the road testing and maintenance of transport vehicles apply.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Work Permits (Professional Footballers)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many professional association football players in British teams have been issued with work permits by the Overseas Labour Service; and if he will list the countries from which they came. [33463]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Between 1 January 1997 and 31 December 1997 the Overseas Labour Service issued 51 work permits to football clubs in the United Kingdom in respect of overseas footballers from 31 different countries outside the European Economic Area:

Australia, Barbados, Belarus, Bosnia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Czech Republic, Estonia, Georgia, Ghana, Israel, Macedonia, Yugoslavia, Moldova, Namibia, Nigeria, Romania, Russia, South Africa, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, St. Vincent, Switzerland, Trinidad & Tobago and USA.

Further Education

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans his Department has to re-instate a demand-led element into the funding methodology for further education. [33580]

Dr. Howells: The Department has no such plans.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received seeking a review of the funding methodology for further education. [33581]

Dr. Howells: The Department receives representations from time to time about the funding methodology. The Further Education Funding Council is currently undertaking a fundamental review of the methodology.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of convergence in funding in the further education sector on the Government's plans to increase the number of students entering further education by 2002, with particular reference to those from disadvantaged backgrounds. [33582]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will keep under review the effects of convergence on the widening participation agenda.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of further education courses provided under franchised arrangements with partnership organisations in drawing people into learning opportunities from low-paid, unemployed and other disadvantaged backgrounds; [33584]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect further education courses provided under franchised arrangements with partnership organisations will have in drawing people into learning opportunities under the New Deal and Lifetime Learning programmes. [33585]

Dr. Howells: Franchised provision can be a means of widening participation by bringing disadvantaged learners into FE. There may be scope for such provision to play a part in the education and training opportunities available under the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds.

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if initial teacher training courses for further education teachers will be exempt from tuition fees. [34238]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 2 February 1998, Official Report, column 564.

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to change the (a) structure, (b) membership requirements and (c) responsibilities of further education college corporations. [34239]

Dr. Howells: The Department published a consultation paper, "Accountability in Further Education", on 5 March 1998. Responses to the consultation are invited by 24 July.

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to improve the professional development of (a) lecturers and (b) managers in further education colleges; and if he will make a statement on how they will benefit from the proposed general teaching council. [34323]

Dr. Howells: The Government attach great importance to improving the quality of teaching and management in further education. In our consultation document "The Learning Age", we propose that all new teachers in further education should hold, or within two years of appointment have begun, a recognised initial teacher training qualification. In the same document, we highlight the need for professional training of FE managers. We are working closely with the FE sector to develop national standards for professional development and we anticipate that a National Training Organisation for FE will be established by the end of the year to take forward these developments. FE staff, with qualified teacher status, will be eligible to register with the general teaching council on the same basis as school teachers.

Sixth Form Colleges

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many sixth form colleges have closed or amalgamated since 1994. [33995]

Dr. Howells: On 1 January 1994 there were 115 sixth form colleges. Following closures and mergers there are now 108.

Disability Rights Task Force

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the disability rights task force. [34060]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Disability Rights Task Force has made good progress since its membership was announced on 3 December 1997. It has met three times, on 16 December 1997, 21 January 1998 and 16 March 1998. In line with its Terms of Reference it has been considering in detail the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission. The Task Force is expected to make recommendations to the Government on this matter by the end of March. Task Force papers and minutes have been placed on the Internet at http:/www.disability.gov.uk for public access and comments may be returned to the Task Force Secretariat.

Music, Dance and Drama Students

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will allocate additional funds to Essex County Council to maintain student awards for music, dance and drama. [34337]

Dr. Howells: The education Standard Spending Assessment (SSA) provides Councils with funding for student awards. The 1998–99 education SSA for Essex County Council has been increased by £27.3 million or 5.8 per cent. There are no plans to allocate additional funds.

School Libraries

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many individual schools library services have been discontinued in the last five years; and what local education authorities have been involved. [34563]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department does not collect this information.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure minimum standards for school libraries in maintained schools in England and Wales. [34564]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has issued non-statutory guidance on the provision of teaching and non-teaching accommodation for schools. We believe that schools are themselves best placed to determine standards for their library services, taking into account their own priorities, needs and circumstances.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to meet the National Library Association and the School Library Association to discuss school libraries in maintained schools in England and Wales. [34565]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have no current plans to meet the Library Association and the School Library Association to discuss school libraries.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will introduce legislation to make statutory provision for school library services in England and Wales. [34566]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are currently no plans to make the provision of schools library services a statutory duty.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the implications for school libraries of financial delegation within the framework of LMS. [34567]

Mr. Byers: LMS delegation of funding for any service, including the school library service, is intended to allow schools to exercise a real choice in deciding upon their need for that service and the most appropriate supplier.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what mechanisms his Department uses to monitor the library needs of maintained (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in England and Wales. [34568]

Ms Estelle Morris: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools reports annually to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on standards and quality in education, including the quality and quantity of learning resources in schools.

Focus Groups

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much his Department (a) has spent since 1 May and (b) is planning to spend on focus groups. [34967]

Dr. Howells: The information requested on spend since 1 May 1997 was included in my answer to a question asked by the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 280.

Information on planned spend could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Portakabins

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if local education authority returns to his Department include the numbers of portakabins used for teaching purposes in each school; and if he proposes to require such information. [35055]

Mr. Byers: The Department does not collate information about the number of Portakabins used for teaching purposes in schools. Local education authorities are responsible for providing and maintaining temporary accommodation, where they deem it to be necessary. There are no plans for the Department to collate this information in the future.

School Students

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many students there were at each local education authority and local education authority maintained school in Newcastle upon Tyne for the most recent period and the three previous years; [35056]

(2) if he will list all sixth forms with a student size of over 250 in the local education authorities within the counties of Northumberland, Tyne and Wear, Durham and Cleveland. [35057]

Mr. Byers: I refer my hon. Friend to the Secondary School Performance Tables for the years 1994–1997 and the Primary School (Key Stage 2) Performance Tables for the years 1996 and 1997. The tables show the total number of pupils of all ages on each school's register, together with the number of pupils aged 16 and over in secondary schools (which gives an indication of the size of a school's sixth form) for schools in England. Copies of the tables are available in the Library.

Information for schools other than those in the performance tables is not published centrally.

There were 40,749; 41,145; 41,055; 40,936 pupils of all ages at local education authority maintained schools in Newcastle Upon Tyne in January 1994 to January 1997 respectively.

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35113]

Dr. Howells: To date, there are no major events planned for April and May. However, it is not possible at this stage to give a comprehensive answer as the majority of Ministerial events and meetings will not be finalised until nearer the time.

Physical Education

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received concerning the removal of core subject status from PE. [35526]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department has received a number of representations from organisations and individuals about our proposals to enable primary schools to give priority to literacy and numeracy. Physical Education is to remain a National Curriculum foundation subject and will continue to be taught in all schools.

Access Courses

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 13 March 1998, Official Report, column 412, on access courses, what is the maximum time period for a realistic action plan leading to sustained employment; and if he will make a statement. [35711]

Mr. Andrew Smith: A young person's action plan will specifically cover in detail the time to be spent in the New Deal, which for participants in the Full-Time Education and Training option can be up to 52 weeks, following their time on the Gateway. However, the action plan will also look forward to the period after the New Deal option. It should also include the steps that will be taken towards obtaining sustained employment in the longer term. In the case of young people who are undertaking Access to Higher Education courses in the New Deal, the action plan will include reference to their proposed employment goal following Higher Education.

Regional Development Agencies

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements he is making to ensure that training available through further and higher education colleges and TECs is integrated with the skills strategies of the regional development agencies. [35741]

Mr. Andrew Smith: A central function of RDAs will be to involve partners in developing and implementing Regional Skills Strategies. The Government will be giving guidance to RDAs and Government Offices to help ensure that the training available through TECs and Further and Higher Education Colleges meets regional needs and national objectives.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students expecting to begin Arts degree courses in autumn 1998 are currently studying for qualifying foundation courses; and what would be the total cost of exempting them from tuition fees during their higher education course. [35853]

Dr. Howells: Information is not yet available on either the number of students currently enrolled on relevant arts foundation courses in 1997–98, or on their intentions for entry in 1998–99. However, data collected by the Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA) for the 1996–97 academic year suggest that there were some 4,500 students entering full-time first degree, HND and Dip HE courses in creative art and design whose highest entry qualification was a foundation course.

New Deal (Costs)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the extent to which the costs of individual components of the New Deal in England and Wales will differ from the costs for Scotland set out in Scottish Office evidence to the Scottish Affairs Committee published on pages 138–9 of their report on the New Deal (HC 335-II Session 1997–98). [35867]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The average cost assumptions used for planning purposes for the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds were the same throughout Britain.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Contributory Benefits

21. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress is being made on the fundamental review of social security, with particular regard to the role of contributory benefits. [34063]

Mr. Field: Contributory benefits are currently being reviewed as part of the wider review of Social Security.

We will be publishing a Green Paper on 26 March that will set out the framework and guiding principles for welfare reform.

Pensioner Incomes

22. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment the Government have made of the range of inequality of income among pensioners. [34064]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore).

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the median income of (a) single pensioners, (b) married pensioners and (c) all pensioners who (i) had reached state pension age within the previous five years and (ii) were aged 80 years or above in each year for which the Pensioners Incomes Series has been constructed; and how many pensioners were in each category. [30735]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the tables.

5. A pensioner unit is defined as a single person over State Pension Age (SPA), or a couple where the man, defined as head, is over SPA.
6. Components may not sum to totals due to rounding.
7. All incomes are in £ per week at July 1995 prices and are rounded to the nearest 10 pence.
8. Estimates of median income levels are medians of the unequivalised income distribution.
9. Estimates indicate broad trends through time, rather than giving a clear picture of year on year changes.
10. The estimates in Table 1 differ slightly from those published in The Pensioners' Incomes Series 1995–96, owing to inaccuracies with rounding. Differences are small, up to 10 pence, except for 1979 where the difference is as large as 50 pence in some cases. A revised version of the publication will be issued as soon as possible.

Child Support Agency

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she will publish her proposals for changes in the CSA procedures. [34066]

Mr. Field: We are determined to ensure that the Child Support Agency provides an effective and efficient service to all its clients throughout the child support assessment process. We are looking closely at all aspects of the child support system and we expect to bring forward a consultation paper on our proposals by the Summer.

27. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she is taking to ensure that the Child Support Agency makes itself more accessible to the public. [34070]

Mr. Field: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide an effective and efficient service to all its clients. The Agency is currently reorganising its resources so that back room processing work which does not require face-to-face contact with the public is done in its larger centres. This will leave remaining local staff to focus their attentions more effectively on essential face-to-face contacts. From next month lone mothers claiming Income Support will be personally assisted in completing the maintenance application form by Benefits Agency staff.

For customers with general inquiries, more resources are to be allocated to the Agency's National Inquiry Line from next month. In the future the Agency will increasingly use the telephone to contact customers at the earliest stage at each point in the assessment process.

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Government's plans to make the operation of the Child Support Agency fairer and more effective. [34057]

Mr. Field: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide a consistent, fair and effective service to all its clients. We are looking in detail at all aspects of the child support scheme to see where improvements can be made. We aim to bring forward a consultation document with our proposals by the Summer.

Local Exchange Trading Schemes

24. Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to extend the disregard for local exchange trading schemes. [34067]

Mr. Field: We have no immediate plans to change the way credits from local exchange trading schemes are treated when calculating benefits, although we are keeping the individual benefit rules under review.

Winter Fuel Payments

25. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the action the Government have taken in respect of winter fuel payments for pensioners. [34068]

Mr. Denham: This is the first time any Government have been prepared to help pensioner households with their winter fuel bills. A total of £400 million have been committed to provide extra help for this winter and next to eligible pensioner households.

Around one and a half million pensioners on Income Support have already received a payment of £50. Virtually all of the payments of £20 or £10 to the other eight and a half million eligible pensioners have now been issued. The remaining few will be despatched in the next few days.

Overall, almost ten million payments will have been made to more than seven million pensioner households.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what statutory authority the Benefits Agency Office advertises winter fuel payments to pensioners. [35767]

Mr. Denham: The Department's Benefits Agency does not need statutory authority to advertise winter fuel payments to pensioners.

The Agency advertises these payments only to the extent of providing information to the public, in line with the normal Departmental advertising strategy.

Any advertising carried out by the Department is done in support of its policy to explain and inform the public of the government services available to them. Any advertising is carried out in accordance with Cabinet Office guidance issued in July 1997.

Advertising support for the Winter Fuel Payments campaign included national television advertising by the Department. It is in support of this campaign that the Benefits Agency is displaying posters and leaflets.

We wanted pensioners to know what payments are coming to them and how and when, in order to make informed decisions about how to heat their homes. The most cost effective method of reaching pensioners quickly with this important information has been through a multi-media campaign involving highly targeted television advertising.

Housing Benefit Fraud

26. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the level of housing benefit fraud. [34069]

Mr. Denham: We have made clear our commitment to work towards a permanent reduction in all benefit fraud, as part of our drive to modernise the Social Security system and rebuild public confidence in it. We are conducting a series of reviews to provide reliable estimates of the level and types of Housing Benefit fraud. We are determined that Social Security will not be an easy target for fraudsters.

Disability Benefit

28. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the review of the welfare state with particular reference to disability benefit. [34071]

Mr. Field: We are committed to reviewing and reforming Social Security to transform it from a system of dependency to a system of opportunity which promotes work incentives, reduces poverty and welfare dependency, and strengthens family life, and we continue to review sickness and disability as part of this commitment. No decisions have been made.

Pension Funds

29. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the average extra cost to the members of occupational contracted-out money purchase schemes as a result of the decrease in the state earnings-related pension scheme rebate if funds are to be maintained at the same level. [34072]

Mr. Denham: The reduction in the amount of rebate for individual Contracted Out Money Purchase (COMP) Scheme members is dependent on a number of factors and will vary according to age and earnings levels.

However, for the tax year 1999–2000 it is estimated that the reduction for an average COMP Scheme member will be £74.

Pensions Review

30. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on progress with the pensions review. [34073]

Mr. Denham: The pensions review that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced last year fulfils our manifesto commitment to look at the central areas of insecurity for elderly people.

We are carefully considering the more than 2,000 responses that we received to the first part of the review. We are also considering the more than 200 responses to the technical consultation document on our proposals for stakeholder pensions that we issued in November. We aim to publish an initial framework for change in the first half of this year. There will then be a period of further consultation before final proposals are developed.

31. Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she has taken to encourage the taking out of value-for-money pensions. [34074]

Mr. Denham: A key objective of the Pensions Review is to ensure that resources devoted to pensions are used to maximum effect. We are therefore looking at how to encourage more of those who have access to good quality occupational pension schemes to join them. We have set up the Pensions Education Working Group which will recommend ways to improve awareness of the need to make provision for retirement.

We are also developing a framework for Stakeholder Pension schemes which will offer secure, flexible and value for money second pensions for people who do not have the opportunity to join an occupational scheme and for whom many personal pensions can be unsuitable.

Pensions

33. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will estimate the value of the basic single pension per week had its value been increased by the level of earnings since 1980. [34076]

Mr. Denham: The estimated value of the basic State pension for a single person would be £86 per week if its value had been increased by the higher of earnings or prices since 1980. From April it would have increased to £89.60.

Disability Benefits

32. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to means-test benefits for people with disabilities. [34075]

Mr. Denham: We continue to review sickness and disability benefits as part of our commitment to modernise the Social Security system. No plans for change have been made at this stage.

United Nations Commission on the Status of Women

34. Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on the Commission of the Status of Women meeting attended by the Minister for Women. [34077]

Ms Ruddock: I refer the Member to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend for Reading, East (Jane Griffiths).

Benefit Fraud

35. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have had their benefit claims withdrawn due to fraud; and what has been the saving to the social security budget since 1 May 1997. [34078]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested.

The Department's fraud and security staff carry out a wide range of activities designed to improve the integrity of the system, to investigate and detect fraud, and to ensure that the correct amount of benefit is in payment. Records are kept of successful investigations which include cases subject to traditional investigative activity by fraud officers, as well as assurance activity on new and existing claims. There have been 813,255 successful preventive and detective activities in the period 1 May 1997 to 31 January. As a result of these activities, it is estimated that savings of £1.46 billion have been made.

Local authorities are responsible for the administration of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit. Data on the number of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit cases where fraud is established are collected annually. Figures for 1997/98 are therefore not yet available. The amounts of weekly benefit savings claimed by local authorities in cases where fraud is established are collected quarterly. The unaudited, cumulative total of such savings claimed up to the end of the third quarter of 1997/98 in Great Britain is £279 million.

Single Mothers

36. Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her policy of securing employment for single mothers. [34079]

Mr. Field: The Government are committed to helping lone parents into work. The New Deal for Lone Parents shows the priority we attach to helping lone parents secure employment. The New Deal for Lone Parents offers lone parents their own tailored service, provided by Personal Advisers, to help them with jobsearch, training, childcare and in-work benefit calculations.

We have introduced measures to ensure that there are no disincentives in the benefit system which will deter lone parents from taking jobs. Fast-track arrangements are in place to clear claims and to secure the speedy payments of Family Credit where a lone parent has started, or is about to start, work. The target to process 95 per cent. of these claims within five days is currently being achieved. The Child Support Agency has agreed to process applications for maintenance more quickly for lone parents participating in the New Deal for Lone Parents. We will also be introducing a 12 week linking rule for lone parents in receipt of Income Support and Jobseekers Allowance before April 1998. This will mean that there is no benefit disincentive to deter lone parents who want to work from doing so.

Last week the Chancellor announced changes aimed at making work pay. The Working Families Tax Credit will make work pay for all families on low incomes. We will also provide extra help with childcare costs through the Child Care Tax Credit. As the next step in our National Child Care Strategy to ensure affordable, accessible, quality child care for all, the Child Care Tax Credit provides a passport to high quality childcare to all parents regardless of income.

We are committed to helping all parents, particularly lone parents, to balance work and family life and we are taking every opportunity to champion family-friendly employment policies which will allow parents to combine successfully home and work responsibilities. Good family-friendly policies will assist us in delivering both our National Child Care Strategy and the New Deal for Lone Parents.

Fraud (Landlords)

37. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has for tackling organised fraud by landlords. [34080]

Mr. Field: We introduced new regulations in November 1997 to give local authorities additional powers to fight landlord fraud and tighten up the rules on paying benefit direct to landlords. We are developing a counter-fraud strategy which focuses on prevention—identifying where fraud is most likely to happen and focusing resources where they will be most effective. Those who commit fraud—including organised fraudsters and dishonest landlords—will be vigorously pursued.

Advertising

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her Department's policy on awarding contracts to advertising agencies. [34042]

Mr. Field: The Department awards all advertising contracts through the Central Office of Information, which ensure compliance with the EU tender regulations on our behalf.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the costs, including review and appeals, and savings in the current year and the projected costs and savings in future years of the Benefit Integrity Project; and if she will make a statement. [35089]

Mr. Denham: This information is not available at present. In the light of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's announcement on 9 February 1998 of additional safeguards and other factors, statisticians have been asked to re-examine the estimated savings from the Project and to produce validated figures for the end of the financial year of operation. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as this information becomes available.

Contracted-out Money Purchase Schemes

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much she estimates the average extra cost will be to the members of occupational contracted out money purchase schemes, as a result of the decrease in the SERPs rebate, if they are to maintain contributions to their funds at the same level. [32973]

Mr. Denham: New rebate levels for contracted-out money purchase schemes (COMPS) have been set out for the year 1999–2000, 2000–2001 and 2001–2002 in a draft Statutory Instrument and laid before Parliament. These rebates are lower than those set previously to take account of the higher prevalence of larger COMPS, which have lower administrative expenses. To set these rebates at a higher level would amount to an unwarranted reduction in the National Insurance fund, especially since it could lead to salary-related schemes changing their method of contracting-out without changing their benefit provision to increase the amount they get from the taxpayer.

The reduction in the amount of rebates for individual COMPS members will vary according to their age and earnings levels, but the for average COMPS member in 1999–2000 it is estimated to be £74.

Habitual Residence Test

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the costs of administering appeals against refusal of benefits by applicants failing the habitual residence test for each year for which figures are available (a) in total and (b) per appellant. [35086]

Mr. Denham: The administration of appeals is the responsibility of the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) who report that the information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

The average cost of an appeal to a Social Security Appeal Tribunal is £250, including the costs of work done by the Benefits Agency, the Employment Service Agency and work done by the ITS processing the appeal.

Overall operational costs of ITS for the last four financial years

Financial Year	Operational cost (£ million)
1994–95	37.320
1995–96	44.371
1996–97	59.763
1997–98	56.338 (estimated outturn)

Note:

The ITS does not hold statistical information enabling the cost of administering those appeals to be identified or separated from the costs of administering the various other types of appeal for which it is responsible.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make it her policy to abolish the habitual residence test. [35087]

Mr. Denham: We are currently reviewing the operation of the habitual residence test. A range of options is being considered as part of this work.

Tribunals

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the success rate for applicants taking their appeals to social security tribunals and presenting (a) oral and (b) written evidence only. [34943]

Mr. Field: The information is not available.

Widows' and Widowers' Benefits

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans she has to equalise benefits for widows and widowers; and if she will make a statement. [34254]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (Mr. Gorrie) on 23 June 1997, Official Report, column 413.

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of (a) single male pensioners aged 65 to 69 years, (b) single female pensioners aged 60 to 64 years and (c) married pensioners aged 65 to 69 years were in receipt of income support or supplementary benefit in each year since 1988 for which statistics are available. [34128]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Income support pensioner claimants by age, 1988 to 1997

Year	Single male aged 65–69	Per cent. of all males aged 65–69	Single female aged 60–64	Per cent. of all females aged 60–64	Couples: claimant aged 65–69	Per cent. of all males/females aged 65–69
1988	40,000	3.1	104,000	6.9	43,000	1.5
1989	33,000	2.5	100,000	6.7	36,000	1.2
1990	32,000	2.5	89,000	6.0	34,000	1.2
1991	34,000	2.7	85,000	5.8	28,000	1.0
1992	36,000	2.9	86,000	6.0	31,000	1.2
1993	42,000	3.4	101,000	7.0	42,000	1.6
1994	46,000	3.7	103,000	7.3	46,000	1.8
1995	49,000	4.0	106,000	7.6	52,000	2.0
1996	50,000	4.1	104,000	7.5	53,000	2.0
1997	51,000	4.2	104,000	7.5	51,000	2.0

Notes:
1. Numbers are given as at May of each year given and are rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Percentages are given to one decimal place.
3. Sample size 1 per cent. up to and including 1992, 5 per cent. thereafter.
4. Percentages for 1997 are based on mid-term population estimates for 1996.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the knowledge and experience of ME of doctors employed for the purpose of assessing potential claimants at appeal tribunals; and if she will make a statement. [33712]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Doctors sit as members of Medical Appeal Tribunals, as medical members of Disability Appeal Tribunals, and as medical assessors advising Social Security Appeal Tribunals concerning Incapacity Benefit. The appointment of all such members and medical assessors is a matter for the President of the Independent Tribunal Service, His Honour Judge Michael Harris.

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current assumed rate of interest in respect of capital for the calculation of council tax benefit. [33961]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The rules for the treatment of capital in Council Tax Benefit ensure that capital of £3,000 or less is ignored. There is no entitlement to Council Tax Benefit if a person's capital exceeds £16,000. For each £250 of capital above £3,000, but below the upper limit of £16,000, £1 per week is taken into account as income. This formula avoids the many practical difficulties that would arise if actual income were taken into account, and does not represent any assumed rate of interest.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the maximum level of capital for the calculation of council tax benefit was last uprated; what was the annual inflation rate in each year since the last uprating; and what would the current maximum level be if annual uprating to allow for inflation had taken place. [33962]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The maximum level of Council Tax Benefit, when it was introduced in April 1993, was £16,000. It has not been uprated since.

The table sets out the annual inflation rate that would apply to Council Tax Benefit since 1993. Council Tax Benefit is uprated by Rossi and not RPI. Rossi is RPI (all items) less rent, local taxes and mortgage interest payments.

Uprating date	Uprating percentages
April 1993	3.6
April 1994	3.5
April 1995	1.8
April 1996	3.0
April 1997	2.6

The current maximum level of Council Tax Benefit if annual uprating to allow for inflation had taken place would be £17,815.30[1], based on Rossi.

Notes:

1. The Retail Prices Index (all items) and the Retail Prices Index (all items) less rent, local taxes and mortgage interest payments, produced by the Office for National Statistics, were used in these calculations.

2. Figures rounded to nearest 5 pence at each uprating date.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made in the inter-departmental review on housing benefit for those in supported housing. [33853]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We sought stakeholders' views on the best means of translating our objectives for the long-term funding of supported accommodation into a modern, practical and sustainable funding system in November last year. Over 200 responses were received and are helping to inform the debate. Options for creating a more rational and effective system are presently under consideration. Whilst we are looking to implement a sustainable funding system as soon as possible, this is an extremely complex area with possible repercussions for all supported accommodation. We cannot, therefore, say when the review will be complete.

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will list the total number of claimants of housing benefit in supported housing in each year from 1992 to 1997; [33852]

(2) what estimate she has made of the average cost of the care and support element of staff costs claimed from housing benefit for those in supported housing in each of the last three years. [33851]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is not available in the form requested.

We hope to have more information about the numbers of Housing Benefit recipients and the amount met by Housing Benefit in respect of service charges for personal counselling and support in supported accommodation during 1995–96 from research which is currently underway.

Medical Testing

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors underlay the policy of privatisation of medical testing for sickness and disability benefits; what financial benefit to Her Majesty's Government has resulted; and if she will make a statement. [32948]

Mr. Keith Bradley [holding answer 9 March 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 31 July how we would proceed with a number of projects for the use of the private sector which were in the pipeline and which we had inherited from the previous administration. The projects were reviewed against the criteria announced in July:

- our objectives for modernising the Social Security system;
- our commitment to work within the announced spending totals for the first two years of Government;
- our aim of getting best value for public money and of reducing the burden on taxpayers;
- the scope to apply private sector expertise, discipline and economies of scale in procuring public services and the ability to secure increased investment from the private sector;
- the need for continuing flexibility for government to make future changes to services;
- the opportunities for improving the quality of service for customers;
- the implications for staff

When I announced on 19 February that all three contracts for BAMS were to be awarded to Sema I explained that we have established a minimum quality of service threshold against which we have assessed all bids from the private sector. There will be greater evaluation of performance against the new quality standards. We have also placed greater emphasis on the management of staff when evaluating the contracts.

The contract award is not part of the welfare reform programme. The responsibility for the overall service and for the determination of the entitlement to benefits remains with the Department. The award of the contract makes no change to the rules for entitlement to benefits and the rights of customers will not be changed in any way. Rigorous procedures will be put in place to ensure that we continue to receive independent, objective medical advice. We see the contract as providing an improved service to the customer and good value for money for the taxpayer.

The award of the contract will result in a saving of 10 per cent. over the cost of the present service.

Publications

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list those European Commission (a) newsletters, (b) magazines and (c) occasional publications to which her Department subscribes. [33665]

Mr. Field: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

Not all the Department's Agencies order publications centrally and it would be possible to provide details only at disproportionate cost. The Department also receives many European Commission publications on a complimentary basis and records of these are not held centrally.

Departmental Pay

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people employed by (a) her Department and (b) the agencies for which her Department is responsible earn (i) less than £3.20 per hour, (ii) between £3.20 and £3.60 per hour, (iii) between £3.60 and £4.00 per hour and (iv) between £4 and £4.62 per hour. [30756]

Mr. Field [holding answer 23 February 1998]: The information is set out in the table.

	Number of staff earning less than £3.20 per hour	Number of staff earning £3.20 to £3.59 per hour	Number of staff earning £3.60 to £3.99 per hour	Number of staff earning £4.00 to £4.62 per hour
Benefits Agency	0	5353	2416	5895
Contributions Agency	0	1123	102	543
Information Technology Services Agency	0	0	48	179
War Pensions Agency	0	29	40	97
Child Support Agency	0	689	187	2002
DSS Headquarters	0	24	1	26
Independent Statutory Bodies	0	153	7	238

Note:
Hourly rates include allowances and includes staff on payroll as at 31 January 1998.

Disability Benefits Taskforce

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will establish a disability benefits taskforce to include disabled groups in her departmental review of disability benefits and the Benefit Integrity Project. [35232]

Mr. Denham: Following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's most recent meeting with representatives of the Disability Benefits Consortium a joint statement was issued making clear the intention to open consultation on disability benefits on a formal basis. This process will begin very shortly in a seminar to discuss various research reports which were published on 12 March.

Mr. Collings

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she expects the case of Mr. Collings of 11 Barton Way, Paignton, to be heard by a new tribunal. [35436]

Mr. Denham: This is a matter for the President of Independent Tribunal Service (ITS), his honour, Judge Michael Harris. He will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Family Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single parents are in receipt of family credit; how many of those are claiming the child care disregard; and what is their average of expenditure on child care. [35863]

Mr. Field: The latest available figures are for August 1997 when there were 351,000 lone parents receiving Family Credit. 36,000 lone parents were entitled to receive a child care disregard and, of these, 31,000 were in receipt of an increased award for child care charges. The remaining 5,000 cases receive no extra award for child care charges as maximum Family Credit is in payment.

The average weekly cost for child care for lone parents with entitlement to a child care disregard was £39.07.

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Sample size is 5 per cent.

Source:

Family Credit Quarterly Statistical Inquiry, August 1997.

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the final fortnight for which family credit payments will be due. [35860]

Mr. Field: Family Credit is awarded for a 26 week period and paid on a weekly basis. It will continue to be awarded and paid, on this basis, until Working Families Tax Credit is introduced from October 1999.

National Insurance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the costs of raising the starting point for employee NICs from £64 per week to £81 per week. [35768]

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost of raising the lower earnings limit for employee national insurance contributions from £64 per week to £81 per week, within the new structure of National Insurance set out in the Budget. [35861]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has stated that future reforms will raise the starting point at which employees pay National Insurance contributions to the level of the single person's tax allowance while protecting benefit entitlement. If this change were to be introduced from April 1999, the estimated reduction in revenue from employee Class 1 National Insurance contributions, gross of contracted-out rebates, would be £1.35 billion for 1999–2000.

Government Actuary's Department.

Surveys

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list each information, promotional, marketing and opinion survey contract, with its value, concluded by her Department and its agencies for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 1999–2000, (d) 2000–2001 and (e) 2001–2002. [32016]

Mr. Field: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases mobility allowance related benefits have been withdrawn in the last 12 months for which general figures are conveniently available. [34319]

Mr. Denham: Mobility Allowance was superseded by the mobility component of Disability Living Allowance in 1992. It is estimated, on the basis of a 5 per cent.

sample, that awards of mobility component ceased in about 100,700 cases in the 12 months ending on 31 August 1997. Information is not available on the reasons for cessation, but these will include death, absence abroad, and non-renewal of a fixed period award, as well as withdrawal where the Benefits Agency found that the conditions of entitlement were no longer satisfied.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food from which budgetary sub-head his Department will meet the cost of millennium compliance. [35432]

Mr. Morley: The cost of the millennium compliance will be met from the administrative running cost and capital budgets of the Department and its Agencies. Cost will be incurred within sections G and H of the MAFF Vote, against the following programmes identified in our Departmental Report:

Programme	Title
IR1:05	Information Technology Services
IR2:03	Management of Accommodation and Property Resources
EA1:02	Central Science Laboratory
EA1:03	Veterinary Laboratories Agency
EA1:04	Pesticides Safety Directorate
EA1:05	Veterinary Medicines Directorate
EA1:06	Meat Hygiene Service
EA1:08	Farming and Rural Conservation Agency
EA1:09	Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many non-UK nationals are working on computer-related problems within his Department. [35429]

Mr. Morley: No non-UK nationals are working on millennium computer-related problems within the Department, and the Department is not employing any "off-shore" services.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance his Department is giving to agricultural businesses and farmers on the year 2000 computer compliance problem. [35426]

Mr. Morley: The Department is not providing any specific guidance to agricultural businesses and farmers on the Year 2000 compliance problem, except where the Department has been asked to clarify its position (and Year 2000 plans) in a "supplier" capacity. The Department of Trade and Industry funded 'Action 2000' initiative will be gathering data and providing information across all private sectors; this extends to general advice, good practice, guidance material, signposts to further relevant information and a support infrastructure.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met Treasury Ministers to discuss the costs of millennium compliance in his Department. [35427]

Mr. Morley: There has been no direct specific discussion with Treasury Ministers regarding the Department's millennium costs, which are being met from existing provision. Regular returns regarding millennium plans and costs are being provided to the Central IT Unit (Cabinet Office).

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he has had with the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to discuss his Department's progress towards millennium compliance. [35428]

Mr. Morley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary represents the Department's interests on a Ministerial sub-group that meets regularly and is chaired by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The Department's officials are in regular contact with the Cabinet Office (Central IT Unit) at an operational level.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost to his Department of (a) consultants and (b) contractors engaged by the Department to address millennium computer compliance problems; and if he will list them. [35425]

Mr. Morley: It is not possible to separate out the costs relating to consultants as opposed to contractors engaged by the Department to address millennium computer compliance problems, or to provide an exhaustive list of them, without incurring disproportionate cost. However, the estimated cost of total external support is between £7 million and £8 million, primary sources on the IT side being Sema Group UK Ltd., Sherwood International Group Ltd., and Oracle Corporation UK Ltd. With regard to 'embedded chip' systems, CBG Consultants is the main source of external support.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his European counterparts with regard to the millennium compliance problem. [35434]

Mr. Morley: The Department has taken steps to identify all interfaces with its European counterparts and is continuing to monitor progress via all appropriate channels including its involvement in the EU "Interchange of Data between Administrations" programme.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when all testing on year 2000 computer compliance will be completed within his Department; [35431]

(2) if testing has been done on his Department's archive computer files for millennium compliance. [35433]

Mr. Morley: All work (including testing) on business critical systems will be completed by April 1999; work on less critical systems will be completed later in 1999. Operational requirements for access to historical/archived data will be addressed within the above timescales.

Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many officials or individuals working within his Department on millennium compliance have (a) given notice of their intention to leave or (b) left his Department in the last six months. [35430]

Mr. Morley: No officials or individuals working on the Department's millennium programmes in the central IT Directorate (the main area of millennium activity) has given notice of intention to leave or left the Department in the last six months.

Cattle Movement Service

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when farmers will receive payment for the grant up and running costs of the British Cattle Movement Service. [35766]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are meeting the costs of setting up the British Cattle Movement Service, and of running it during its first full year of operation. Farmers have paid none of these costs, so the question of paying them back does not arise.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of the value which might be achieved, on disposal of the Central Science Laboratory sites at (a) Sand Hutton, York, and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich. [35408]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: A formal estimate of the disposal value of the Central Science Laboratory site and Sand Hutton, York has not been prepared because the Ministry is not intending to dispose of it. In any event, such an estimate would have to be regarded as commercially confidential.

The Central Science Laboratory site at Colney Lane, Norwich is leased to the Ministry although the buildings were erected at Government expense. Any disposal of the Ministry's interests at Colney Lane would be subject to the terms and conditions of the ground lease. The disposal value has not been assessed but, if it had, it too would have to be regarded as commercially confidential.

Pesticides

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pesticides approved for use prior to 1986 have been reviewed since that date; of those, how many have been rejected on review or had approvals restricted; and how many have not been reviewed. [35557]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: Approvals for agricultural and garden pesticides are issued by MAFF's Pesticides Safety Directorate. Approvals for other pesticides are issued by the Health and Safety Executive. Sixty-nine of the pesticide active ingredients approved by MAFF in 1986 have since been reviewed of which nine have had all their approvals revoked and 47 have had new restrictions imposed.

The remaining 323 ingredients have yet to be reviewed. However, 129 of these had been withdrawn from the market by the end of 1997. The number of active ingredients on the market in 1986, still on the market at the end of 1997 and not yet reviewed, was therefore 194.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what volume of agricultural pesticides was seized by inspectors during 1997; what volume was destroyed; and how many separate incidents this represented. [35561]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: MAFF inspectors are empowered to seize pesticides and destroy them under Regulation 7 of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 (as amended). No pesticides were seized or destroyed using these powers during 1997.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many requests were made to his Department during 1997 to obtain evaluation documents on pesticides; and how many requests were made to view the underlying data. [35563]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD) maintains a list of individuals and organisations to whom all evaluation documents are sent as they are issued. At the end of 1997, there were 47 names on this list. In addition, PSD dealt with 98 one-off requests for evaluation documents during 1997. There were 7 requests to see underlying data.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost to his Department of providing information to the public about agricultural pesticides; and what is the mechanism for recovering these costs from the public. [35558]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The cost of providing information to the public about agricultural pesticides is borne by the Department and, certain publication charges apart is not recovered from the public. An estimate of the cost of provision of this service cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate costs.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scientific information he uses to specify maximum pesticide levels in crops, food and feeding stuffs. [35560]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: Two key types of study are used to specify maximum residue levels (MRLs) in crops. First, metabolism studies in the relevant crop are used to identify the chemical nature and fate of the residue. Second, residue trials are conducted according to Good Agricultural Practice to establish the highest residue level occurring in the crop when the pesticide product is used as intended. Cross checks are made with toxicological studies to establish that the MRL proposed is safe for consumers. If it would not, then that proposed use of pesticide would not be approved.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each pesticide approved for use in agriculture, horticulture and food industries where the specified maximum residue level is (a) above, (b) the same as and (c) below that recommended by CODEX. [35562]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: There are some 10,500 MRLs established in the UK in the Pesticides (Maximum Residue levels in Crops, Food and Feedingstuffs) Regulations 1994 (as amended). There are about 1,000 Codex maximum residue levels (MRLs) in place. Where corresponding UK and Codex MRLs are both in place, generally the UK MRL is lower.

More detailed information would be available only at disproportionate cost.

A full list of Codex MRLs is published in the Codex Alimentarius Volume 2b. ISBN No. 92–5-003821–6.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the cost to the agrochemical industry of providing information to the public under the Food and Environmental Protection Act 1985. [35559]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The costs of providing information to the public under the Food and Environmental Protection Act 1985 is borne by the Department. No charge for this work is passed to the agrochemical industry.

Poultry

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the transposition by Italy of (a) the EU Poultry Meat Hygiene Directive, (b) other veterinary directives into national law and their enforcement of such directives; and if he will take steps to ensure that poultry meat imports into the United Kingdom from Italy are produced and processed according to the directive's requirements. [35221]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 19 March 1998]: In their fourteenth report on monitoring the application of Community law (published in the Official Journal of the European Communities ref. C332 1997) the European Commission noted that Italy had been censured by the European Court of Justice for failing to fulfil its obligation to transpose into national law various directives in the veterinary field. Failure to transpose Community law into national law does not necessarily mean that Italian producers are not complying with the veterinary requirements for intra-Community trade. Where failure to meet these requirements is identified in specific cases, they are thoroughly investigated and the necessary action is taken.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Foresight Programme

Mr. Breed: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by what criteria the comprehensive spending review will identify the resource requirements of the foresight programme. [33622]

Mr. Battle: The UK Foresight programme develops visions of the future to guide today's decision-makers. Foresight aims to generate outputs which identify significant market opportunities or threats; identify emerging capabilities of, and demand for, science, engineering and technology; highlight areas of policy, regulation, education and training where Government action would deliver widespread benefits; and set an agenda for action by the business, scientific, voluntary and public sectors to increase national wealth and quality of life.

The resource requirement of the Foresight programme will be decided in the light of the criteria set out by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary when he announced the Terms of Reference of the Comprehensive Spending Review on 24 July 1997: whether it meets the public interest; whether it contributes to the Government's objectives of promoting opportunity, employment, investment and fairness; whether it is the most effective way of achieving those objectives; and whether there is scope for improving efficiency and effectiveness.

Arms Sales

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will take further steps to ensure that the end use and end user statements are correct on export licence applications for military hardware. [34525]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 16 March 1998]: Inquiries are made if there is reason to question the accuracy or relevance of any of the information relating to the stated end-use that is supplied with export licence applications.

Work is in hand to identify ways to reduce further the risk that exported goods might be diverted to an undesirable end-user. As was said by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd) on 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 55, an announcement will be made in due course.

Riot Control Equipment (Kenya)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what requests for supplies of tear gas and riot control equipment have been made by the Kenyan government in the last three years; and what supplies have been authorised. [34232]

Mrs. Roche: There is no requirement to notify the Department of requests for goods received from potential customers overseas.

Regarding the numbers of individual export licences permitting the export to Kenya of tear gas, I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to the hon. Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey) of 12 March 1998, Official Report, columns 331–32. It is not possible to identify specific goods by the description "riot control equipment". Several of the entries in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List") describe goods that might be found capable of playing some role in riot control.

Mr. Laxton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the military, security and police transfers from the UK to Kenya with particular reference to (a) tear gas and (b) plastic bullets. [31743]

Mrs. Roche: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to the hon. Member for North Devon, (Mr. Harvey) of 12 March 1998, Official Report, columns 331–32.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what permits her Department has given for the export of (a) tear gas and (b) other items used in riot control to Kenya. [32030]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 2 March 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for North Devon, (Mr. Harvey) of 12 March 1998, Official Report, columns 331–32.

It is not possible to identify specific goods by the description "other items used in riot control". Several of the entries in the Military List describe goods that might be found to be capable of playing some role in riot control.

Engineering

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list by name and date the engineering institutions and engineering manufacturing industries she and her Ministers have visited since 1 May 1997. [35038]

Mrs. Beckett: I and my Ministers have had considerable contact with the engineering sector since 1 May 1997. This includes many visits to companies and sectoral bodies as well as meetings at the Department. I also gave the key-note address at the Engineering Employers Federation biennial dinner on 17 February 1998.

Export Licences

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 9 February 1998, Official Report, column 90, on export licences, what percentage of applications for export licences were processed by the Export Control Organisation according to their stated aims in the four week period beginning 9 January. [33218]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's management data on the processing of licence applications are compiled on the basis of four week periods. The record nearest to that specified is 10 January to 6 February 1998 and the figures to the nearest percentage point are as follows:

Applications circulated to other Government departments according to their policy requirements and completed in 20 working days	52
Applications not circulated to other Government departments and completed in 10 working days	61

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of applications for export licences were processed by the Export Control Organisation according to their stated aims in the four week periods beginning (i) 31 May 1997, (ii) 28 June 1997, (iii) 26 July 1997, (iv) 23 August 1997 and (v) 20 September 1997. [33375]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's management data on the processing of licence applications are compiled on the basis of four weekly periods, which include those specified. The figures to the nearest percentage point of these periods are as follows:

Percentage

	Applications circulated to other Government departments according to their policy requirements and completed in 20 working days	Applications not circulated to other Government departments and completed in 10 working days
31.5.1997–27.6.1997	63	82
28.6.1997–25.7.1997	45	67
26.7.1997–22.8.1997	46	53
23.8.1997–19.9.1997	45	64
20.9.1997–17.10.1997	48	71

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the effects on United Kingdom local government of signing the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [35105]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 18 March 1998]: Since discrimination against investors on grounds of nationality is not a factor in local government decision-making, the Agreement will have little or no effect on UK local government. Nevertheless, we have been consulting UK local government who have so far not identified any problems or any need for exceptions. If they raise new points, we shall certainly consider them.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the future costs to the Exchequer of signing the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [35107]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 18 March 1998]: It is proposed that the MAI will have a small Parties Group and Secretariat, the costs of which will be shared among all parties to the Agreement. Therefore the costs to the Exchequer are likely to be modest.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the effect on British sovereignty of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment; and if she will make a statement. [35108]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 18 March 1998]: Like all treaties, the MAI will impinge on sovereignty to some extent. It will prevent governments discriminating on the ground of the nationality of an investor, unless an exception has been listed by that government for a particular measure. The MAI will not prevent general regulation in economic, social, labour, environmental and other fields.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will place in the Library a copy of the Local Government Association's response to the consultation in respect of the MAI. [35103]

Mrs. Roche: Consultations with the Local Government Association are on-going; to date we have not received a formal response.

Director General of Telecommunications

Mr. Hill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the successor to Mr. Cruickshank as Director General of Telecommunications. [36151]

Mrs. Beckett: I have today appointed Mr. David Edmonds as Director General of Telecommunications from 1 April 1998.

In recent years there has been significant change in the telecommunications market. There are now more than 350 individually licensed telecommunications operators in the UK and competition is developing rapidly in all areas of the market. The rate of change is set to increase in this already fast-moving, international arena with the convergence of telecommunications, broadcasting and information technology. The Government wish to promote the further development of competition and continue to encourage innovation in services and technology. I wished therefore to appoint someone to this important post who had direct experience of managing significant change and of working in a competitive business environment. I believe that Mr. Edmonds is that person and I feel sure he will do an excellent job.

Mr. Edmonds has combined a successful career in both business and the public sector. He began his career in 1966 as a civil servant and, having risen to Under Secretary, left the Department of the Environment in 1984 to become the Chief Executive of The Housing Corporation. In 1991, Mr. Edmonds joined the Natwest Group and was appointed Managing Director of Group Central Services in 1995. From July 1996, he also had personal responsibility for co-ordinating the Group's preparations for European Monetary Union. Mr. Edmonds is also the chairman of CRISIS, the national charity for the single homeless.

I would like also to take this opportunity to reiterate my appreciation of the major contribution Mr. Don Cruickshank has made over the past five years as Director General. He has developed the regulatory regime in the demanding context of a period of enormous change in telecommunications, and in so doing has played a key part in ensuring that the UK is very well-placed to benefit from the opportunities of the Information Age.

Focus Groups

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much her Department (a) has spent since 1 May and (b) is planning to spend on focus groups. [34968]

Mrs. Beckett: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 17 February 1998, Official Report, columns 567–69.

Telecommunications (China)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to help UK companies enter the telecommunications market in China. [34743]

Mrs. Roche: UK exports of telecommunications equipment to China in 1996 exceeded £40 million (Overseas Trade Statistics collected and compiled by HM Customs and Excise). Last year the Department was a sponsor of the Britain On-Line travelling exhibition which promoted UK telecommunications technology, products and services in China. In addition, a visit was organised under the Inward Missions Scheme which enabled Chinese industrialists and senior officials to meet UK communications companies. The Department, which has recently appointed an Export Promoter to promote opportunities in the Chinese telecommunications market, is supporting a mission to China later this year by UK companies. The mission is being organised by the China-Britain Trade Group. In the context of the negotiations over the terms of China's accession to the World Trade Organisation, the UK supports fully the strong line taken by the EU that there must be meaningful access granted to Chinese telecommunication services markets comparable to that granted by its economic peers among existing WTO Members.

Pit Closures

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many pits she estimates will close in the next year under the Government's current policy towards the coal industry. [35227]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 March 1998]: It is for the private sector coal companies to take decisions on the future commercial operation of individual coal mines.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Redwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reasons underlay the selection of publications to be recommended by her Department's Millennium Hotline, with particular reference to "Year 2000 Solutions for Dummies"; and if her Department requested royalties in respect of the publications recommended. [26785]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 2 February 1998]: Action 2000 is responsible for the operation of the Millennium Bug hotline, but I understand that the process of deciding what information to provide callers is steered by a group of independent experts, drawn from a range of user industries, professional bodies and independent business support organisations. Action 2000 aims to provide a list of best in breed publications, training modules and signposts to other sources of help/information.

Action 2000 did not seek royalties. Its primary concern is that businesses should have access to information as rapidly as possible.

Yemen and Oman

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what meetings have taken place since 1 May involving representatives from her Department at which trade and investment in (a) Oman and (b) Yemen were discussed; and how many meetings she and her ministers have had with representatives of the (i) Oman and (ii) Yemeni Governments. [34554]

Mrs. Roche: Since 1 May 1997 the following significant occasions, involving representatives of the DTI, have included discussions on trade and investment in Oman:

- Omani Minister for Commerce's meeting with Lord Clinton-Davis and discussion at the Middle East Association—October 1997.
- Omani Minister for National Economy's meeting with Lord Clinton-Davis and discussion at the Middle East Association—February 1998.
- Lord Mayor of London's visit to Oman—September 1997.
- Chairman of the British Overseas Trade Board's visit to Oman—February 1998.
- Oman British Friendship Association's meeting in London—July 1997.

Since 1 May 1997 the following significant occasions, involving representatives of the DTI, have included discussions on trade and investment in Yemen:

- Committee for Middle East Trade Round Table with Yemeni businessmen—September 1997.
- Invest in Yemen Seminar in London—September 1997.
- President of Yemen's visit to UK as Guest of Government—November 1997.
- Minister for Trade visit to Yemen—November 1997.

DTI officials and Export Promoters have such frequent meetings on trade and investment on Oman and Yemen that it is not possible to list them.

Since 1 May 1997 DTI Ministers have had four meetings with Omani government representatives and eight meetings with Yemeni government representatives.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current level of British investment in Oman. [34548]

Mrs. Roche: At the end of 1996, the latest year for which figures are available, the net book value of direct investment by UK firms in Oman was £40 million. The value is negative because UK groups' liabilities to their subsidiaries and branches in Oman are greater than the share capital and reserves of the subsidiaries using the balance of payments methodology. During 1996, the flow of direct investment by UK firms into Oman was £7 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the current level of trade between Britain and Oman. [34549]

Mrs. Roche: In 1997, total trade in goods between the United Kingdom and Oman was worth £476 million. The value of UK exports of goods was £370 million, while the value of UK imports was £105 million. Information on trade in services with Oman is not available.

Information on UK trade in goods with Oman over the last 5 years is given in the following table:

£ million

Year	UK exports	UK imports	Total trade
1993	306	82	388
1994	364	78	442
1995	448	74	522
1996	416	87	503
1997	370	105	476

Note:
Because of rounding, there may be slight discrepancies between the totals shown and the sums of constituent parts.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to visit (a) Yemen and (b) Oman. [34553]

Mrs. Roche: I have no plans to visit (a) Yemen or (b) Oman in the immediate future. However, since 1 May 1997 DTI Ministers have had four meetings with Omani government representatives and eight meetings with Yemeni government representatives.

ECGD (Indonesia)

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will state the current level of ECGD exposure in Indonesia. [34523]

Mrs. Roche: ECGD's exposure on Indonesia currently stands at £1,815 million.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Driving Hours

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in how many fatal road accidents in the last three years over-tiredness has been assessed to be a contributory factor. [34336]

Dr. Strang: Information is not at present collected on the causation of injury road accidents on a national basis. However, research commissioned by the Department estimated that tiredness is a principal contributory factor in around 10 per cent. of road accidents. Details of this research were published in TRL Report 169 (1995), Driver sleepiness as a factor in car and HGV accidents.

Housing (Condition)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the findings of the English House Condition Survey 1996; and if he will publish a summary of its main findings. [35710]

Mr. Raynsford: The findings of the 1996 English House Condition Survey will be published through a detailed and priced report. There will also be a separate summary document of key findings available free of charge. Publication is expected within the next two months.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for local authorities in each of the years 1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97 (a) the total number of statutory notices served under section 189 of the Housing Act 1985, (b) the total expenditure on grants made to owners of properties on whom section 189 notices were served, (c) the total number of statutory notices served under section 352 of the Housing Act 1985 and (d) the total expenditure on grants made to owners of properties on whom section 352 notices were served. [35707]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department does not hold information in the form requested. Such information as we do hold is set out in Housing and Construction Statistics 1985–1995, Table 7.9 (Unfit dwellings, England), a copy of which has been placed in the House Library.

Regional Planning Guidance

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the housing figures to be used by strategic planning authorities in the West Midlands for the period up to 2011 will be those contained in the answer to the hon. Member for Dudley, South (Mr. Pearson) of 4 December 1997, Official Report, column 288. [35857]

Mr. Caborn: Yes. We will issue amended housing policy guidance for the West Midlands shortly setting out clear policies that authorities should pursue in their development plans to increase the amount of housing on previously developed land to make provision for affordable housing and to ensure sustainable locations for development within transport corridors.

Highway Signs

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the current regulations controlling the nature, size and location of highway signs in areas of outstanding natural beauty and National Parks; and if he will make a statement. [35948]

Dr. Strang: The Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions 1994 were framed, and are currently being updated, to balance the interests of road safety, efficient traffic management and the environment in the design and use of signs so that traffic authorities can, as far as practicable, provide signs appropriate to local conditions. My Department has published guidance on designing signs effectively so that they are not larger than they need to be for the information they contain. We are also actively supporting the Countryside Traffic Measures Group's initiative to investigate the extent to which local traffic management and traffic calming schemes—and associated signs—can be effective in meeting their traffic objectives, whilst being designed with sensitivity to the countryside environment in which they are set. This includes projects in two National Parks.

Rail Services

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1998, Official Report, column 438, if he will request the Rail Regulator to discuss with (a) Railtrack and (b) TOCs the public provision of national time tables for future years. [36081]

Dr. Strang: Railtrack meets the train operating companies to discuss bids for train services which are subsequently incorporated into the national timetable. The Rail Regulator is also involved in the process and he can be approached by either party if they were dissatisfied with the outcome of the discussions. Demand for future services is subject to fluctuation and discussions therefore tend to focus on services that are to be included in the next edition of the timetable rather than for many years ahead.

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision he is making for the cost of rail services secured by English Passenger Transport Executives in 1998–99. [36330]

Ms Glenda Jackson: A special grant Report has been laid before the House today for the payment of Metropolitan Railways Passenger Services Grant in 1998–99 to English Passenger Transport Authorities (PTAs). The main purpose of the grant is to provide support to those PTAs for the local rail services secured by the PTAs' Passenger Transport Executives under the terms of franchise agreements with franchise operators and the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising.

Regional Airports

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what means and according to what timetable his Department is proposing to consult regional authorities regarding their views on international air service access to regional airports. [35437]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department is already aware of the support of a broad spectrum of regional interests for a greater degree of liberalisation of international air services to regional airports.

Planning Inspectorate and Building Research Establishment

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (i) location of, (ii) running costs of, (iii) salary costs of and (iv) number of staff based at the Head Office of the (a) Planning Inspectorate and (b) Building Research Establishment; and for these bodies if he will list the percentage of (1) staff, (2) salary costs and (3) running costs which are based in (A) London and (B) Scotland. [36108]

Mr. Raynsford: The Planning Inspectorate is an Executive Agency of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and of the Welsh Office. As of 2 March 1998, the Planning Inspectorate had 440 staff based at its Headquarters offices in Bristol and Cardiff. The Inspectorate's gross running cost allocation for the current year is £29.254 million. Forecast outturn for the paybill is £18.895 million. None of the staff are based in offices in London or Scotland. The Planning Inspectorate has no jurisdiction for planning appeals and other statutory functions under the Planning Acts in Scotland, for which there is a separate Inquiry Reporters Unit, which is part of the Scottish Office Development Department in Edinburgh.

The Building Research Establishment was privatised in March 1997; the Department therefore no longer has responsibility for its operations.

Transport Council

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the result of the Transport Council held in Brussels on 17 March. [36417]

Dr. Strang: The first Transport Council of the current UK Presidency of the EU Council of Ministers met under my Chairmanship in Brussels on 17 March. My hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London represented the United Kingdom.

I particularly welcome the progress the Council was able to make on proposals for establishing a new European Aviation Safety Authority. There is strong support among Member States for these proposals, and it was agreed that work should continue with the aim of adopting a Council decision in June. The Council also took note of progress on a draft negotiating mandate for Community membership of the EUROCONTROL air traffic management organisation, again with a view to adoption in June.

The Council discussed the Community's role in EC/US air transport negotiations, in the light of the Commission's existing mandate and a recommendation by the Commission for supplementary negotiating directives. It was agreed that officials should undertake further technical work with a view to more extensive discussion at the June Council. Several Ministers expressed regret that the Commission has recently sent Reasoned Opinions to a number of Member States.

The Council reached a common position on a Regulation on vehicle national identification signs, under which Member States would not require a separate national sign where on is already included (in specified form) in the vehicle number plate, and (with Germany abstaining) adopted a Regulation on the harmonisation of statistics on the movement of freight by road. The council agreed Conclusions welcoming the Commission's recent Communication on satellite navigation systems.

The Council made significant progress in its consideration of the proposed directive on heavy goods vehicle taxation and charging. The Presidency put forward a compromise proposal, with further modifications in response to concern expressed by delegations, but agreement proved beyond reach.

The Commission reported on its negotiations with the Swiss Government on proposals for a land transport agreement between the Community and Switzerland. Following clarification of some outstanding points, a substantial number of delegations were broadly supportive. Presidency Conclusions reflecting the Council discussion were drawn. The General Affairs Council will take the final decision for the Community on a series of proposed agreements with Switzerland.

Several delegations requested a study into the employment effects of the abolition in 1999 of duty-free sales for intra-Community travel. I agreed to forward the comments raised to the Chairman of ECOFIN.

I made a short statement on the Presidency's plans to present a paper to the June Council on the subject of transport safety across the modes. This will set out proposals for exchanges of information and regular reporting by the Commission on safety in all modes and in all EU Member States.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the impact on litigants involved in expensive, lengthy or complex cases of the introduction of contracting between the Legal Aid Board and legal service providers. [35237]

Mr. Hoon: Contracting is a flexible tool, which will allow the Legal Aid Board to test different arrangements to determine which are most suitable for different types of case. We believe that individual negotiated contracts are likely to prove most appropriate in expensive cases.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps his Department is planning to concentrate the legal aid budget on promoting access to the judicial system for the poorest and on cases which raise issues of wider public interest. [35236]

Mr. Hoon: We are consulting on our proposals to begin:

to focus on the priority needs of the poor by concentrating legal aid more tightly on cases that cannot be funded in the private sector and which are of high priority; to support cases which have a significant public interest and might otherwise not be brought.

These are the first two steps in the Government's plans to modernise legal aid which are set out in the consultation paper, "Access to Justice with Conditional Fees", which was published on 4 March.

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35120]

Mr. Hoon: There is no expenditure currently planned for Ministerial hospitality for April or May 1998. It is not, however, possible to provide a comprehensive estimate for total expenditure on Ministerial hospitality as the majority of events and meetings will not be finalised until nearer the time.

DEFENCE

Bosnia

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by (a) craft or speciality and (b) unit the numbers of territorial army personnel serving in Bosnia. [35381]

Dr. Reid: There are currently 380 members of the Reserve Forces (including the Territorial Army and Individual Reservists), serving in Bosnia. They are drawn from the following specialisations:

Unit	Number
Royal Armoured Corps	9
Royal Artillery	18
Royal Engineers	46
Royal Signals	26
Infantry	100

5 Allied Tactical Air Force, (Vicenza, Italy)	1	Varies
Royal Navy and Royal Air Force Support Helicopter Force	1	Varies

Shooting Ranges

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to alter access to military ranges for civilian shooters for target shooting purposes. [35378]

Mr. Spellar: There are no proposals to alter the current arrangements for civilian use of military firing ranges for marksmanship practice, which are designed to ensure appropriate access to these ranges and proper safety.

Nuclear Accident Exercises

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear weapon accident exercises entitled Senator have taken place since 1985; and where and when each exercise took place. [35366]

Dr. Reid: Two exercises entitled Exercise SENATOR have taken place since 1985. The details are as follows:

	Date	Exercise
SENATOR 96	20 May 1996 to 24 May 1996	Army Training Area Otterburn
SENATOR 97	22 September 1997 to 25 September 1997	Prince William of Gloucester Barracks Grantham, with the Strategic Co-ordination Group meeting at Lincolnshire Fire Bridgade HQ, Lincoln.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer on 5 March 1998, Official Report, columns 761–62; what will be the scenario of the Diagonal Glance exercise; on which of his Department's properties the exercise will take place; how many of his Department's personnel will take part in the exercise; and if the media will be invited to the exercise. [35365]

Dr. Reid: Exercise DIAGONAL GLANCE will test the procedures in place for responding to the crash of a US transport aircraft carrying nuclear weapons. RAF Locking will be used as a convenient location to base elements of the MoD response forces. There will also be exercise activity in Main Building, Whitehall and at AWE Aldermaston. Approximately 300 personnel from my Department will participate. A press statement about the exercise will be issued, but it is not intended to invite members of the media to the exercise.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1998, Official Report, columns 761–62, what are the definitions of Grade B and Grade C nuclear weapon accident exercises; and if his Department has other categories of nuclear weapon accident exercises. [35363]

Dr. Reid: Prior to March 1997, nuclear accident response exercises were categorised as major, medium and minor; descriptions of the scales of these exercises were given in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1995. They were then recategorised as Grade A, B, C and D. This was done to give external agencies a better understanding of the levels of our exercises by reference to the co-ordination levels detailed in the Home Office publication "Dealing with Disaster". The definitions of these exercises are:

Grade A—A demonstration exercise of all phases of the response in which live play and the participation of all MoD and external agencies is maximised at the national strategic, local strategic, tactical and operational levels.

Grade B—A demonstration exercise focusing on medium and long term phases of the response in which live play and the participation of MoD and external agencies is maximised at the local strategic and tactical levels.

Grade C—A demonstration exercise focusing on immediate and medium term phases of the response in which live play and the participation of MoD and external agencies is maximised at the tactical and operational levels.

Grade D—An exercise of the MoD response only, involving live play at levels appropriate to the exercise and its duration.

Admiralty Intelligence Papers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will open for public inspection files concerning Admiralty Intelligence papers with the classmarks ADM 223/719 to ADM 223/734 at the Public Record Office. [35499]

Mr. Spellar: In line with our commitment to greater openness, arrangements are being made to review the papers listed at the Public Record Office under references ADM 223/719 to ADM 223/734 to see whether release into the public domain is now possible. I will write to the hon. Member on completion of the review process.

Heavy Lift Cargo Aircraft

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost has been to his Department in each of the last 10 years of the charter of heavy lift cargo aircraft from civilian operators. [34890]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The costs of the charter of heavy lift cargo aircraft from civil operators for 1996, 1997 and 1998 (to date) are set out below. It is not possible to provide figures for years before 1996 without disproportionate cost.

	£ million
1996	1.60
1997	3.30
1998 (to date)	1.32

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the types of civilian heavy lift cargo aircraft chartered by his Department over the last 10 years; their country of registration and the names of the air carriers by which they were operated. [34891]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The details of the types of heavy lift cargo aircraft chartered by the Ministry of Defence from civil operators for 1996, 1997 and 1998 (to date) are set out in the table. It is not possible to provide the information required for the years before 1996 without disproportionate cost.

	Aircraft type	Country of registration	Operators
1996:	AN-124	Russia	Heavylift
	IL-76	Russia	Heavylift
	Belfast	UK	Heavylift
1997:	AN-124	Russia	Heavylift
	AN-124	Ukraine	Air Foyle
	IL-76	Russia	Heavylift
	DC8	Zimbabwe	Heavylift
	Belfast	UK	Heavylift
1998 (to date):	AN-124	Russia	Heavylift
	AN-124	Ukraine	Air Foyle
	IL-76	Russia	Heavylift
	IL-76	Ukraine/Latvia	Air Foyle
	Belfast	UK	Heavylift

Exercise Tartan Strike

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the recent Tartan Strike exercise; which countries took part; how many (a) UK personnel and (b) US personnel were involved; who was the identified enemy; and if he will make a statement. [35603]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The purpose of the recent Tartan Strike exercise was for the Armed Forces personnel involved to practise basic counter-insurgency skills. The participating countries were the United Kingdom and United States, with some 105 UK personnel (a number of whom acted as unidentified enemy) and some 55 US personnel involved.

Gulf War

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 December 1997, Official Report, column 6, if he will publish the results of his inquiries into dead animals found and analysed during the Gulf War; and if he will make a statement. [35423]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 23 March 1998]: I expect to publish the outcome of MOD's research into this matter by Easter.

RAF Croughton and West Ruislip Station

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the functions undertaken at (a) RAF Croughton and (b) West Ruislip station. [35604]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 23 March 1998]: RAF Croughton is home to the US 422nd Air Base Squadron whose mission is to manage, operate and maintain communications computer facilities and systems for theatre-wide support of the Defense Information Infrastructure, US Department of Defense airborne missions and the Air Weather Network. The squadron also provides all base facilities, support and services for over 700 military and civilian personnel. West Ruislip is a US storage and support facility for the US Navy in Europe and covers 81 US housing units, a commissary (food store), US shopping facilities, a medical and dental clinic, welfare services and a US community school for children of serving US personnel.

Meteorological Office

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 June 1997, Official Report, column 265, if he will make a statement about the key targets for the Meteorological Office for 1997–98. [36301]

Mr. Spellar: The targets I gave on 19 June have not changed but two of them require clarification as follows:

Performance Target (b)—Numerical Weather Prediction Index for the UK (UKNWP). This performance target is intended to be a three year target, which will be set annually for the following three years. However, an adequate baseline is not available on which to set targets for intermediate years. The first target is therefore to improve the UKNWP index by four index points by March 2000 from a baseline of 100.00 in March 1997.

Performance Target (c)—Service Quality Index (SQI). It has now been agreed that the target for each year should be directly related to the agreed customer requirements for the component services represented in the index. This means that from a baseline of 100.00 in 1996–97 the target for 1997–98 is to increase the SQI by 3.2 index points (not 1 as stated previously).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Documentary Series

Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if the Committee has considered any requests to make a documentary series about the House; and if she will make a statement. [35606]

Mrs. Roe: Since November the Committee has been considering two proposals, one from the BBC and one from Channel 4, to make a documentary series about the work of the House. I wish to advise the hon. Gentleman that the Committee has agreed that such a series might be useful in helping to give a clearer idea of Parliamentary practice and procedure, explain the legislative process and to give an insight into the work of hon. Members.

Of the two options, the Committee considered that the Channel 4 proposal was the more appropriate, as the way the series would be structured offered less disruption to the work of the House.

The House authorities are therefore beginning detailed negotiations with Channel 4 and Partners in Production, who will make the series. Subject to a successful outcome to these negotiations, it is envisaged that filming will commence at the time of the Queen's Speech this year, and continue throughout 1999.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agencies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) location and (b) costs of each refurbishment programme undertaken in each year since 1994 by (i) the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency, (ii) the Centre for Environmental, Fisheries and Agriculture Science, (iii) the Central Science Laboratory, (iv) the Veterinary Laboratory Agency and (v) the Pesticides Safety Directorate. [34776]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 March 1998]: In financial year 1997–98, the first since its formation in 1997, a total of £1,351,000 was spent on a refurbishment programme for the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency. In the main this covered refurbishment of buildings at Aberystwyth, Bristol, Cambridge, Cardiff, Crewe, Leeds, Northallerton, Nottingham, Preston and Wye.

The figures for the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS) are: 1995–96 £50,000; 1996–97 £401,000; and 1997–98 £14,000 for work on the CEFAS laboratories at Lowestoft and Burnham-on-Crouch, and for the CEFAS Lowestoft lecture theatre.

The figures for the Veterinary Laboratories Agency are: 1995–96 £5,084,000; 1996–97 £1,473,000; and 1997–98 £574,000 for the work at the Central Veterinary Laboratory at Weybridge and the Veterinary Investigation Centres at Itchen Abbas (near Winchester), Penrith, Sutton Bonington (near Loughborough) and Thirsk.

No refurbishment programmes have been carried out for the Central Science Laboratory of the Pesticides Safety Directorate since 1994.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) location of and (b) costs of each refurbishment programme undertaken by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in each year from 1994 until privatisation. [34781]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 March 1998]: From 1994 until its privatisation on 1 April 1997, expenditure on a refurbishment programme for the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service involved a total of £170,000 in financial year 1994–95 on work at Boxworth and Oxford Spires and a total of £138,000 in 1996–97 for work at Bridgets Experimental Husbandry Farm, Oxford Spires and Penrith. There was no refurbishment work for ADAS in 1995–96.

Wasted Food

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will commission research on the impact of EU regulations on the quantity of edible food thrown away by British supermarkets; what estimate he has made of the quantity they disposed of in the last twelve months; and if he will make a statement. [34757]

Mr. Morley: No estimates are available to the department, and I do not at this stage regard this as a priority research topic in the light of other pressures on our scarce resources. The firms concerned can be expected to keep wastage to a minimum for economic reasons, and a number of them participate in a voluntary scheme for the distribution of surplus food to charitable bodies caring for the disadvantaged.

Public-private Partnerships

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to extend the use of public and private partnerships to conduct his Department's business and deliver services to the public; and if he will make a statement. [35137]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 19 March 1998]: Competitive tenders have been sought for the redevelopment of the Department's Cambridge Regional Service Centre site.

In addition, the Environment Agency, in liaison with the Department, are in discussion with selected consortia, in advance of a formal notice of Intention to Negotiate, on pilot projects for Flood and Coastal Defence works at Pevensey and Broadland.

Plans to extend the use of public and private partnerships to conduct the Department's business and deliver services to the public are also being considered as part of the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review. As part of its procurement policy, the Department has already entered into key supplier relationships with a number of private sector suppliers. It intends to develop these further and with others as appropriate, subject to the value for money and transparency requirements of the public procurement rules.

Canthaxanthin

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the safety of canthaxanthin for use in animal feed insofar as it affects eggs and farmed fish consumed by the public; and if he will make a statement. [36345]

Mr. Rooker: I am grateful for the Food Advisory Committee's advice that there are no consumer safety concerns associated with the use of this pigment in animal feed. I conclude that it may therefore continue to be used in accordance with its long-standing authorisation in Directive 70/524/EEC concerning additives in feedingstuffs.

We nevertheless propose to seek a reduction under the Directive to the maximum permitted level (MPL) for use of the substance in feed for laying hens. The levels used are, for technological reasons, far below the current MPL.

I also intend to ask the new Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs, when it is established, to consider whether, despite the lack of current safety concerns, it would be prudent to monitor the degree to which this colourant is used in the future.

Finally, I note that the FAC wishes to review the need for labelling of animal products coloured in this way. I believe this is an important matter for consumer information and I look forward to receiving its advice in due course.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Caribbean Banana Producers

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she will be making during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Union to safeguard the interests of Caribbean banana producers; and if she will make a statement. [35760]

Clare Short: Proposals to revise the EU banana regime to bring it into conformity with the World Trade Organisation (WTO) ruling and at the same time to provide assistance to traditional African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) banana producers have been prepared by the European Commission and are currently under discussion by Member States.

As a leading advocate of the legitimate interests of those developing countries in the Caribbean who have traditionally supplied the UK market, the Government intend to play a major role in developing a solution to the problem that meets our obligations to both our traditional suppliers of bananas and the WTO. The UK is well placed to do this as it currently holds the Presidency of the EU.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her policy towards the European Commission proposals for a new agreement on development partnerships with the ACP. [35727]

Clare Short: The Lomé Convention has been an important basis for trade, development and political relations between the EU and the African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) countries of the alliance for over 22 years. The current Lomé Convention expires in 2000, and the Government hope that, during the UK Presidency, the EU's negotiating mandate for the successor arrangements will be agreed. The Commission's proposals provide a very good basis for discussion. They contain much the Government agree with, including a commitment to the international poverty eradication emphasis on partnerships and a simplification of the range of aid instruments.

Trade is the most difficult and complex area. The challenge is to design arrangements which will support the integration of the ACP economies into the world economy. The Commission has proposed a 5 year roll-year of current preferences from 2000–05, followed by either Free Trade Agreements (FTAs) or integration into the Generalised System of Preferences, with a special window for the least developed. The Government welcome the roll-over period, but wish to see greater emphasis on enhancing the Generalised System of Preferences, in order to promote a genuine alternative to FTAs for the non-least developed ACP countries.

European Development Fund

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what funds her Department has committed to the eighth European Development Fund; and if she will make a statement. [35724]

Clare Short: My Department committed 1.63 billion ecu (£1.08 billion at the current exchange rate) to the eighth European Development Fund. The resources will be used to promote development and poverty eradication in the 71 African, Caribbean and Pacific States with which the EU has aid, trade an political relations under the Lomé Convention.

Lomé IV Convention

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made to those European Union Member states who have not ratified the current Lomé IV bis Convention. [35726]

Clare Short: I am very concerned by the delay in the ratification of the Mid-Term Review of the Lomé IV Convention. The issue has been raised by the UK, as Presidency, at working level meetings in Brussels and my officials and I will continue to press those Member States who have yet to ratify the Review to do so as soon as possible.

China

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is giving the People's Republic of China; and if she will make a statement on the amount of funding provided. [35729]

Clare Short: In 1996/97 (the latest year for which complete statistics are available), total British assistance to China came to some £32 million. China has about a third of the world's poorest people and a good record of pro-poor growth since the start of the economic reforms in 1979. We have a substantial co-operation programme. Priority sectors are education, health, the environment and economic and administrative reform.

Belarus

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is giving to Belarus. [35730]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development's programme of bilateral assistance to Belarus is channelled via the Know How Fund. We expect expenditure in this financial year to be approximately £800,000. The Department is also contributing to the EU's 5 mecu programme for the development of civil society.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Foreign Policy Centre

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when and by whom he was invited to be the President of the Foreign Policy Centre, 29 Tufton Street, London SW1P 3QL. [32857]

Mr. Robin Cook: I was invited to be President of the Foreign Policy Centre in June 1997 by the Directors of the Centre.

Indonesia

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 276, on Indonesia, what assessment he has made of the Indonesian Government's implementation of the IMF programme. [35357]

Mr. Fatchett: Indonesia has not yet fulfilled all elements of the IMF package. We hope the ongoing negotiations between the IMF and Indonesia reach a satisfactory outcome.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 277, on Indonesia, what assessment he has made of the standard of governance in Indonesia. [35370]

Mr. Fatchett: I have nothing further to add to my earlier reply to the hon. Member of 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 277.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 276, on Indonesia, what assessment he has made of the Indonesian Government's response to the British Government's requests that they exercise restraint during periods of civil unrest. [35358]

Mr. Fatchett: We continue to follow closely reports of incidents of social unrest in Indonesia.

Asia-Europe Meeting

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise human rights issues at the forthcoming Asia–Europe meeting in London; and if he will make a statement. [35746]

Mr. Fatchett: The agenda of the Second Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM 2) will be finalised by the Leaders themselves. We look forward to a wide-ranging, informal and productive discussion. We expect it to touch on human rights. Leaders at the first ASEM in Bangkok made it clear that political dialogue, including consideration of fundamental rights, was one of the key dimensions of ASEM. The successful seminar on Human Rights and the Rule of Law held in Lund, Sweden in December 1997 is an encouraging example of the ASEM dialogue in this area.

Iraq

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek UNSCOM's permission to publish the names received from UNSCOM of British companies who supplied components of Iraq's (a) chemical and (b) biological warfare programmes. [35849]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Blaeneau Gwent (Mr. Smith), on 16 February 1998, Official Report, column 489.

Turkey

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation the Government plans to make during the UN Commission on Human Rights meeting in Geneva concerning the current human rights situation in Turkey. [35764]

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of the current human rights situation in Turkey; and what plans he has to express concern about human rights in Turkey in his statement to the forthcoming UN Commission on Human Rights in Geneva; [35762]

(2) what recent representations the Government have made to the Turkish Government on human rights. [35763]

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if the Government will urge the UN Commission on Human Rights to press the Turkish Government to facilitate the visits of, and cooperate with, the Working Group on Involuntary and Enforced Disappearances and the Special Rapporteur on Torture in 1998; [35883]

(2) if the Government will, in their statement to the UN Commission on Human Rights, urge the Turkish Government to prosecute all those responsible for human rights violations; [35885]

(3) what proposals the Government intend to make at the UN Commission on Human Rights meeting in Geneva to deal with human rights problems in Turkey; [35886]

(4) what recent representations the Government have made to the Turkish Government on human rights; [35887]

(5) what assessment he has made of the current human rights situation in Turkey. [35888]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 29.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to encourage Turkey to improve its record on human rights abuses. [35293]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In addition to raising the issue of human rights on a regular basis with the Turkish authorities, we are offering significant practical assistance to help Turkey fully meet its international obligations. This includes the package of human rights projects I announced on my visit to Ankara last October. These projects, involving UK experts, will cover areas such as police training, establishment of a police complaints authority and a network of citizens' advice bureaux, and inter-agency training on women's rights. We remain committed to working closely with the Turkish authorities on such matters.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the linkage between Turkey's application for membership of the EU and its policies towards Cyprus. [35294]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The European Council has agreed that Turkey's application to join the European Union will be judged on the basis of the same criteria as those used for all other applicants. The Council has noted that the strengthening of Turkey's relations with the EU also depends upon other factors, including Turkey's support for negotiations under the aegis of the UN on a political settlement in Cyprus on the basis of the relevant UN Security Council resolutions.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the risk that (a) light weapons and (b) armoured vehicles exported to Turkey could be used for internal repression. [35884]

Mr. Doug Henderson: All licence applications for the export of conventional arms to all countries, including Turkey, are considered against the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29. A licence will not be issued if there is a clearly identifiable risk that the proposed export might be used for internal repression or international aggression.

Armenia

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Armenia. [35756]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We enjoy excellent relations with Armenia. A British Embassy opened in Yerevan in July 1995 and we hope to increase the number of staff later this year. Although UK exports to Armenia increased 86% from 1996 to 1997, we are not satisfied with the relatively low level of trade and the DTI continues to encourage more British companies to export goods and services. In January this year, the Embassy held a very successful British Week, which coincided with a small trade mission. As well as providing substantial humanitarian aid, a programme of technical assistance through the Know How Fund has operated for a number of years.

Algeria

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts his Department has had with organisations within Algeria which campaign for human rights. [35705]

Mr. Fatchett: During the EU mission to Algeria in January, my Troika colleagues and I met with the Human Rights Observatory's Director, with whom the British Embassy in Algiers has regular contact. In the course of its operation in Algeria, the Embassy has contact with a number of organisations which work across the spectrum of human rights, including women's issues and counselling for victims of terrorism.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent progress has been made towards a peaceful settlement in Algeria. [35709]

Mr. Fatchett: There have been no large-scale terrorist attacks in Algeria since the end of Ramadan, although sporadic killing continues. Hope for progress towards a peaceful settlement rests with furthering of the democratic process. The Algerian Government have already made some progress in this area, but we believe that the further strengthening of democratic institutions, supported by increased transparency and openness, offers the greatest chance of bringing peace.

Venezuela

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what negotiations are in progress with the Venezuelan authorities concerning an extradition treaty between Britain and Venezuela. [35868]

Mr. Fatchett: It is not our practice to comment on whether extradition treaties with other countries are under discussion.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to visit Venezuela. [35870]

Mr. Doug Henderson: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he is considering for an exchange of prisoners between Britain and Venezuela. [35869]

Mr. Fatchett: We have no plans for an exchange of prisoners. We are, however, seeking to negotiate a Prisoner Transfer Agreement with Venezuela. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to his question on 5 February 1998, Official Report, column 752.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British Ambassador in Caracas last visited Mr. Loseby and Mr. Miles. [35873]

Mr. Fatchett: Our Ambassador in Caracas has not visited Mr. Miles and Mr. Loseby. They were last visited, by the Deputy Head of our Embassy, on 19 January.

Israel

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the number of UN Security Council Resolutions of which Israel is in breach; and what issues they cover. [35970]

Mr. Fatchett: There are over 200 UN Security Council resolutions concerning aspects of Israel's dispute with its neighbours. These are publicly available. We continue to support them. We believe that the framework for negotiations laid down at Madrid and Oslo, based on these resolutions and the principle of "land for peace", offers the best prospect of a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Private Prisons

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are made for trades union representation in each of the private sector prisons; what arrangements are planned for future private prison projects; and if he will make a statement. [32576]

Ms Quin: Trade union representation at privately managed prisons for both custodial and non-custodial staff is a matter for their employer, subject to the law governing trade union recognition, and to section 127 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

Premier Prison Services, which manages Doncaster and Lowdham Grange prisons, have works councils elected by staff.

At Altcourse, Buckley Hall and the Wolds prisons, staff may join the APEX Partnership, which is recognised by Group 4, the contractor. The APEX Partnership is a sister union of the General Municipal Boilermakers and Allied Trade Union.

At Parc prison, managed by Securicor, there is a staff association.

Prison Population

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners per 1,000 population there are in England; and what assessment he has made of the factors underlying the differences in the number of prisoners per 1,000 population in (a) England and (b) Scotland. [35193]

Ms Quin: The latest available provisional information is for 1 September 1996 and shows that in England and Wales there were 1.07 prisoners per 1,000 population compared with 1.15 in Scotland. Within the sentencing framework set by Parliament, who is sent to prison and for how long is a matter for the courts. Different legal systems operate in England and Wales and in Scotland. The respective sentencing framework of each legal system may be a contributory factor in the difference between the countries in the number of prisoners per 1,000 population.

Young Offenders

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether (a) local probation officers and

(b) social workers will be involved in the supervision of young offenders sentenced to a period at a secure training centre; and if he will make a statement. [35342]

Mr. Michael: Until such time as the proposed Youth Offending Teams are in place, supervision of those juvenile offenders subject to the secure training order will be the responsibility of Directors of Social Services. In practice, this will mean that supervising officers are mainly social workers but it need not preclude the involvement of probation officers in appropriate cases where inter agency youth justice teams are already in place.

Supervision will be carried out in accordance with procedures set out in a National Standard which sets out the objectives of supervision and the requirements for the involvement of the supervising officer throughout the sentence.

Firearms

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases of compensation for handguns under (i) Option A, (ii) Option B and (iii) Option C are currently outstanding in the Northumbria Police Area; [35373]

(2) when he expects all claims for compensation for handguns under options (i) A, (ii) B and (iii) C to have been completed in the Northumbria Police Area. [35374]

Mr. Michael: At 20 March, over £480,000 had been paid in compensation to 704 claimants in Northumbria, mainly under Options A and B of the compensation scheme. 132 claimants from Northumbria registered on the Firearms Compensation Section (FCS) computer system have not yet received payment and a proportion of around 3,500 claims not yet registered will also be from Northumbria. In addition, 412 Northumbria claimants have outstanding claims under Option C of the compensation scheme, the great majority of which will have already received a payment under Options A and B.

The FCS expects to complete all payments under Options A and B of the large calibre handgun compensation scheme by about the end of May, and the aim is to complete most, if not all, payments under Option C by the end of the year.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received from (a) the police and (b) other organisations on black powder guns; [35375]

(2) what proposals he has to alter legislation regarding black powder guns. [35376]

Mr. Michael: The Government have received representations on black-powder guns, that is to say muzzle-loading guns using black powder as a propellant, from the Association of Chief Police Officers and from the Muzzle-Loaders Association of Great Britain. The Home Office has met representatives of both these bodies to discuss the proper regulation of shooting clubs at which muzzle-loading guns are used.

At present, the Government have no plans to introduce any further legislation on firearms controls but will keep under close scrutiny the way in which muzzle-loading weapons are used.

Prisoners (Mental Health)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people with psychiatric health problems are currently being held in prison cells. [35538]

Ms Quin: Studies conducted for the Prison Service by the Institute of Psychiatry have indicated that a psychiatric diagnosis, including substance dependency or abuse, could be given to nearly 40 per cent. of the sentenced prison population of England and Wales and some 66 per cent. of remand prisoners. This would suggest that around 20,000 sentenced and 8,300 remand prisoners have some kind of mental disorder.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision is made for mental health care for people in prison. [35539]

Ms Quin: Procedures are in place to identify prisoners who need in-patient treatment for mental disorder and to effect their transfer to a psychiatric hospital. The care and treatment of mentally disordered prisoners who do not require in-patient treatment in hospital is generally undertaken by prison healthcare staff or by visiting National Health Service specialists, either on a sessional basis or in some cases as part of a contracted-in comprehensive psychiatric service.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what strategies his Department is following to tackle the problem of alcohol misuse amongst young people. [35292]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 7 July 1997, Official Report, column 362, and 9 December 1997, Official Report, column 503. The Ministerial Group will be meeting in the autumn to review progress.

Wormwood Scrubs Prison

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the recent reports he received from the Board of Visitors of Wormwood Scrubs Prison. [36042]

Ms Quin: It is a matter for Boards of Visitors at each prison establishment to decide whether they wish to publish their Annual Report to the Home Secretary. The Board at Her Majesty's Prison Wormwood Scrubs published their 1997 report on 19 March 1998. I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what external legal advice he has taken on the National Lottery's television Dreams Game in which one draw qualifies participants for participation in a further draw; and if he will make a statement. [34426]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 13 March 1998]: None. Under section 6 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, the Director-General of the National Lottery is responsible for licensing new National Lottery games. The BBC Governors are responsible for ensuring that all programmes broadcast on the BBC are in line with their Royal Charter and Agreement and Producers' Guidelines. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has written to the BBC chairman asking him to confirm that the new National Lottery programme does indeed comply with these obligations.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of the sums allocated by the Sports Lottery Fund has been allocated to Wales. [35579]

Mr. Banks: Under the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, 20 per cent. of the proceeds for good causes goes to sport. 5 per cent. of this is distributed by the Sports Council for Wales. So far, this has made available over £51 million pounds for sports projects in Wales. In addition, the Millennium Commission has awarded £46 million to support the new national stadium in Cardiff.

Subject to approval by Parliament, the National Lottery Bill will reduce the percentage allocation to sport to 16 per cent., but there will be no reduction in the £1.8 billion originally forecast to be raised for sport by 2001. The percentage of this for Wales will be unchanged.

Ministerial Offices

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what were the total costs incurred between 1992 and May 1997 in establishing ministerial offices for the Department of National Heritage at 2 Cockspur Street. [34481]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 13 March 1998]: The total costs incurred by my Department from 1992 to date are set out in the following table.

Refurbishment of Ministerial offices

Year	Redecoration and furniture	Provision of new facilities	Total
1993–94	—	—	0
1994–95	19,574	28,150	47,724
1995–96	—	—	0
1996–97	—	—	0
1 April 1997 to date	27,180	17,002	44,182

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35114]

Mr. Tom Clarke: No major events are planned for April and May. It is not, however, possible to provide a comprehensive estimate for total expenditure on Ministerial hospitality as the majority of events and meetings will not be finalised until nearer the time.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to extend the scheme of concessionary television licences to housing association properties housing both qualifying and non-qualifying residents. [35837]

Mr. Fisher: The Government have no plans at present for any changes to the concessionary television licence scheme. However, the Government's Agreement with the BBC provides for a review of future funding arrangements prior to March 2002. We shall conduct that review in good time to allow decisions to be taken before then. It will include a detailed consideration of licence fee concessions.

British Tourist Authority

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the (i) location of, (ii) running costs of, (iii) salary costs of and (iv) number of staff based at the head office of the British Tourist Authority, the percentage of staff based in (a) head office, (b) London and (c) Scotland and the percentage of salary and running costs incurred in (1) London and (2) Scotland. [36105]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The head office of the British Tourist Authority is located in Hammersmith, London. Its head office running costs in 1996–97 were £10.2 million, including salary costs of £4.7 million. There are 194 posts at the BTA's head office, which equates to 44% of the Authority's total staff. BTA staff based in London (at its head office and the British Travel Centre in Regent Street) represent 47% of total BTA staff—the remaining 53% being based in BTA offices in 37 countries around the world. London based staff account for 39% of the Authority's salary budget. The BTA has no offices, and no staff, in Scotland.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the British Tourist Authority in Scotland. [36106]

Mr. Tom Clarke: Under the Development of Tourism Act 1969, the British Tourist Authority (BTA) is responsible for marketing Britain overseas. This responsibility covers Scotland, and the Chairman of the Scottish Tourist Board (STB) is a member of the Board of the BTA. The Tourism (Overseas Promotion) (Scotland) Act 1984 gave overseas marketing powers to the STB.

The BTA has offices in 37 countries around the world, and in all of these it promotes and provides information about Scotland to potential visitors. The STB works directly with the BTA in a more limited number of markets and the two Boards work closely together in planning campaigns each year in these markets. A new protocol is now being drawn up between the BTA and the other national tourist boards to strengthen and formalise inter-Board co-operation.

Bolling Road School (Playing Field)

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make representations to Bradford Metropolitan District Council not to sell off a section of the Bolling Road School playing field in Ilkley for housing development. [25639]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 12 February 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State currently has no powers to intervene in the disposal of school playing fields owned by local education authorities (LEAs), unless pupils would no longer have access to the minimum areas prescribed in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1996. During the Commons Report stage of the School Standards and Framework Bill, an amendment was accepted which will, when enacted, prevent local authorities from disposing of school playing fields without the prior consent of the Secretary of State. In the meantime, the Government expect local education authorities to take fully into account the sporting and recreational needs of local schools and communities before disposing of any playing field.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Activity

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have died in Northern Ireland as a result of alleged paramilitary activity since the 1994 ceasefire; and which organisation is thought to be responsible for which deaths [33323]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 10 March 1998]: The table lists the murders as a result of paramilitary activity since 1 September 1994 until 1 March 1998:

Organisation	Number
Loyalist	33
Republican	26

Note:
Attribution figures may be subject to change in the event of further information becoming available.

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish a list of non-departmental public bodies (a) she has abolished since 1 May 1997 and (b) she has established since 1 May 1997; and what are the planned annual running costs of those that have been established since 1 May 1997. [34825]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 17 March 1998]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

(a) The Northern Ireland Citizen's Charter Advisory Panel was disbanded in May 1997.

(b) The Commission for Racial Equality for Northern Ireland (CRENI) was established in June 1997 and came into operation in August 1997. Estimated running costs in its first full year will be some £277,000.

Flagged Herds

Mr. Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the prospects for farmers with flagged herds. [33759]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The Government are aware of the difficulties being experienced by farmers with flagged herds. The Export Certified Herd Scheme [which has now been approved in Brussels] will help to some extent as the reference to "holding" will be changed to "herd". The Date Based Export Scheme, which is also under discussion in Brussels, should be of some further help. The Department of Agriculture will also be reviewing the flagging system, in consultation with the industry, when the ECHS is up and running. My officials are keeping in close contact with representatives of the flagged procedures to explore what other means may be available to help them.

Peace Process

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will ask the Chairman of the Northern Ireland Talks Process to prepare and present a statement for the 23 March session of the talks outlining the extent to which he is satisfied that the International Commission's criteria for a parallel track approach has been met by all parties at the negotiating table. [35658]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 23 March 1998]: I do not intend to make any such request. The procedural motion agreed in the talks on 24 September 1997 makes provision for regular plenary meetings to enable the participants collectively to review progress across the entire spectrum of the negotiations and to consider whether the necessary confidence and momentum towards agreement is being maintained.

Privy Council

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what functions the Northern Irish Privy Council currently performs. [35596]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 23 March 1998]: None. The Northern Ireland Privy Council no longer has any functions and, under the NI Constitution Act 1973, no further appointments may be made to it.

PRIME MINISTER

Political Honours Scrutiny Committee

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Prime Minister what changes he has made in the composition of the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee. [36244]

The Prime Minister: Members are traditionally Privy Counsellors who are not members of the Government. I have appointed the right hon. Baroness Dean of Thornton-le-Fylde to be a member of the Committee in place of Lord Cledwyn of Penrhos who has resigned. She joins Lord Pym (Chairman) and Lord Thomson of Monifieth.

SCOTLAND

Employee Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of employee travel on office business, broken down into (a) fuel allowances, (b) unproductive time during travel, (c) other costs related to car transport and (d) costs related to public transport, for (i) 1994–95, (ii) 1995–96, (iii) 1996–97 and (iv) 1997–98. [32447]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The information sought is not all available. The information given relates only to travel on official business by staff of The Scottish Office:

(a) No fuel allowances are paid.

(b) No central record is kept of time spent travelling, whether productive or unproductive.

(c) Car hire and fleet car running costs for 1996–97 and 1997–98 (11 months) are £537,855 and £434,826 respectively.

(d) Official travel costs incurred in using public transport for 1996–97 and 1997–98 (11 months) are £1,952,125 and £1,904,759 respectively.

Comparable figures for 1994–95 and 1995–96 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will have introduced resource accounting in time for its use in the Scottish Parliament's first budget. [34939]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The Scottish Office will produce "dry-run" resource accounts for the year 1998–99 and fully audited and published resource accounts for the year 1999–2000.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to tighten the rules governing waste disposal in Scotland. [35191]

Mr. Macdonald: Activities involving the disposal of waste are subject to control under the amended EC Framework Directive on waste. The waste management licensing system established under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994, as amended, are the main means by which the requirements of the Framework Directive have been transposed into national law. The Scottish Environment Protection Agency, as regulator, enforces the Regulations.

The Government will review the current exemptions from licensing for waste recovery by landspreading in the light of research currently under way. The research is expected to be completed by the end of April.

Dounreay

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 16 March 1998, Official Report, columns 451–52 on Dounreay, by what means the Health and Safety Executive undertakes its regulatory role in respect of possible hazards to workers and members of the public from work carried out on the site of Dounreay, with particular reference to the accumulation and storage of radioactive waste. [36142]

Mr. Macdonald: Before anyone, other than the Crown, can use a site for the purpose of installing or operating a nuclear installation as defined in the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 (as amended) they must be in possession of a licence granted by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). Dounreay is such a site and a licence has been issued to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

The Nuclear Installations Act provides HSE with the power to attach conditions to a licence which are in the interests of safety. The Act also gives HSE the power to attach conditions which it sees fit with respect to the handling, treatment and disposal of nuclear matter. Through such conditions, HSE regulates the management of radioactive waste on licensed nuclear sites. This includes the generation of wastes, on-site storage of raw and treated wastes, on-site transport, waste processing and long term storage of waste and spent fuels, which are all integral parts of nuclear site operations licensed by HSE.

Student Fees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to assist students over the age of fifty years by means of (a) grants and (b) the waiving of fees; and if he will make a statement. [36110]

Mr. Wilson: Students currently in full-time higher education who were aged over 50 at the start of their course are eligible for free tuition and a means-tested grant towards their living costs; that will continue for the duration of their continuous programme of study.

Those aged 50 and over who begin courses in the academic year 1998–99 will be eligible for a maintenance grant at a reduced rate for that year only. Under the arrangements which will apply to new entrants to higher education from 1998–99 onwards, all eligible students, irrespective of age, will also be entitled to receive means-related help towards the contribution to their tuition costs.

We have no plans to extend the eligibility for loans to those aged 50 and over for 1998–99, but we intend to review the position for 1999–2000 and subsequent years when maintenance grants will no longer be available.

Student Awards Agency

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings of the committee set up to review the work of the Student Awards Agency for Scotland have taken place; whether the committee has recommended an increase in (a) staff and (b) funding; on what date the findings of the committee will be published; and if he will make a statement. [36111]

Mr. Wilson: The Steering Committee which has been established to oversee the Review of the Student Awards Agency for Scotland has met on three occasions. The Committee will be meeting again to consider the report of the Review and what conclusions and recommendations it wishes to make. I expect to receive the report during April and will arrange for its conclusions to be made public as soon as possible thereafter. I cannot at this stage anticipate the Committee's conclusions although I am aware that it has taken a close interest in resource issues.

Higher Education

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 16 December 1997, Official Report, column 131, if he has made a decision on whether to implement the Garrick recommendation to establish a Scottish forum for higher education. [36112]

Mr. Wilson: The decision is set out in the Government's response to the Garrick Report, which was published on 25 February 1998. My answer of 25 February 1998, Official Report, column 273, indicated that copies have been placed in the libraries of both Houses.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Leghold Traps

Mr. Hancock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the GATT on the EU ban on the import of furs from countries using leghold traps. [34798]

Mrs. Roche: The EU ban on the import of furs from countries using leghold traps has not been challenged under GATT rules.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to commission independent research into the consequences for business and public services of the need for computer systems to be millennium compliant. [27878]

Mrs. Roche: The Ministerial Group chaired by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade is gathering information and consultants may have a part to play in advising the Government.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when she last met a Treasury Minister to discuss the costs of millennium compliance in her Department; [32355]

(2) when she last met the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to discuss her Department's progress towards millennium compliance. [32354]

Mrs. Roche: [holding answer 3 March 1998]: A Ministerial Group on the Millennium Date Change, chaired by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, has been set up. A Ministerial sub-Group, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, has also been set up to discuss aspects of millennium compliance relating, inter alia, to Government Departments. Ministers from this Department and the Treasury attend meetings of both these groups.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to wind up Action 2000; and if she will make a statement. [35102]

Mrs. Roche: Don Cruickshank has been appointed as Chairman of Action 2000 until 31 March 2000. I expect that there will continue to be a need beyond 1 January 2000 to provide advice to businesses which have failed to act in time, or whose actions have not proved to be completely successful, but it is too early to predict how long this requirement might last. I urge all businesses to decide now what steps they need to take and act without further delay.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on the costs of the use of mobile telephones. [30191]

Mrs. Roche: Ministers take advice from the Director General of Telecommunications on questions relating to the provision of telecommunication services, including pricing. The Director has recently referred the prices of calls to mobile phones to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hancock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on the impact of the GATT on EU animal welfare directives. [34797]

Mrs. Roche: The Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have received representations from several animal welfare organisations, including, most recently, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the International Fund for Animal Welfare and Compassion in World Farming.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will raise the issue of the effect of the GATT on EU animal welfare directives during the World Trade Organisation Ministerial Conference in Geneva in May; and if she will make a statement. [34796]

Mrs. Roche: The European Communities' final position for the World Trade Organisation Ministerial Conference in May is still under internal EU discussion.

Ethical Investment

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advice on ethical issues is available from her Department to individuals, organisations and companies considering trade or investment projects in (a) Algeria, (b) North Korea, (c) Burma, (d) Indonesia, (e) Libya, (f) Colombia, (g) Syria, (h) Iraq, (i) Saudi Arabia and (j) China. [35045]

Mrs. Roche: The Department, with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, provides advice on all aspects of doing business overseas, including relevant export controls and any commitments made by HMG regarding the application of the controls to the particular country concerned. Detailed advice on the political situation in a country is provided by the FCO. The Department works with the FCO and the Department for International Development to encourage all British companies to set the highest ethical standards when trading overseas.

Waste Reduction

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent initiatives have been taken under the auspices of the Environmental Technology Best Practice Programme to provide educational and technology support materials to assist companies to reduce costs through waste reduction. [35757]

Mr. Battle: The Environmental Technology Best Practice programme is continuing to encourage companies to reduce their costs and improve their competitiveness through waste reduction and improved environmental performance. The programme provides case studies of firms already engaged in waste reduction or other cost saving environmental good practice, benchmarking studies using environmental performance guides to enable companies to compare their performance, and guides to help companies adopt better environmental practices which reduce their costs.

In addition to numerous articles in trade and other media, since 1 May 1997, the programme has published 51 case studies, environmental performance or benchmarking studies, and guides to good practice; held 40 workshops, seminars and site visits for industry participants; responded to almost 25,000 calls to the Environmental Helpline (a freephone inquiry service); given counselling visits to more than 250 small enterprises; and added the engineering and ceramics sectors to its main themes on waste minimisation and cleaner technology and its focus on volatile organic compounds and the foundries, metal finishing, textiles, printing, paper and board, chemicals, glass, food and drink industry sectors.

This year, the programme will expand further its specific areas of interest to include the plastics sector and packaging.

The programme is also working with trade, local business support organisations and other intermediaries to disseminate waste minimisation and clean technology information to companies. In Wales, for example, the programme is working closely with the Welsh Business and Environment Campaign.

Environmental Technologies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives her Department has taken to promote markets for British environmental technologies (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) abroad. [35754]

Mr. Battle: The Government fully recognise the enormous potential of the UK environmental industry to create jobs, win exports and protect the environment. Support for the industry is provided through the Joint Environmental Markets Unit (JEMU). On 18 March, at a launch event I attended with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, we published JEMU's business plan for the next three years, setting out how JEMU will be working with the industry to pursue its mission

"to nurture the development of a strong, competitive and world-class UK environmental industry capable of competing successfully in the world market place".

The Business Plan details planned activities under eight main objectives—activities designed to raise the profile of the industry both at home and overseas. It indicates that JEMU will be focusing attention on a number of key areas including export promotion in selected overseas markets, and also sets out the range of support services available to the industry across government.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will ask the Council for Science and Technology to investigate the technical, economic, environmental and security status of plutonium used as a nuclear fuel. [35759]

Mr. Battle: There are currently no plans for the Council for Science and Technology to investigate the technical, economic, environmental and security status of plutonium. However, as the re-launched CST deliberates upon its future work programme, it will be open to the Council to consider this issue. It is for the owners of spent nuclear fuel, including plutonium, to choose their preferred management options subject to meeting the necessary environmental and regulatory requirements. It remains the responsibility of the Government to ensure that all civil plutonium continues to be subject to rigorous physical protection measures and safeguards in accordance with international non-proliferation obligations.

Environmental Appraisals

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental appraisal will be undertaken to assess the environmental implications of her reviews of (a) renewable energy and (b) utility regulation. [35636]

Mr. Battle: Environmental considerations are an integral part of the continuing reviews of renewables and utility regulation. One of the stated aims of the Renewables Review is to consider the potential contribution which new and renewable energy technologies can make to meeting future greenhouse gas reduction commitments and the terms of reference of the Review of Utility Regulation include consideration of changes to the system of utilities regulation to ensure regulation which promotes the Government's objectives for sustainable development and the environment. The need for, and nature of, specific environmental appraisals will depend on the final outcomes of the reviews.

Plastics (Recycling)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the recent report of Valuplast on the extent of recovery and recycling of plastics. [35758]

Mr. Battle: I am aware of a number of reports and presentations by Valuplast in recent months concerning the UK's recovery and recycling of plastics. I believe that these show steady growth, but that industry investment will be needed to achieve the targets in the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997.

Supermarket Mergers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce additional controls on the mergers of supermarket companies; and if she will make a statement. [35947]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Where a merger falls to be considered under the Fair Trading Act 1973, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will decide, in the light of the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading, whether or not to refer it to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. My right hon. Friend has said that she will refer mergers primarily on competition grounds. Each case is considered on its merits.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research her Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the sensitivity of manufacturing output to exchange rate changes. [35659]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The Department keeps up to date with published research on factors affecting the performance of manufacturing industry. Its evaluation of this work is reflected in advice to Ministers.

Ultra-low Sulphur Diesel

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the availability of ultra-low sulphur diesel; if she will estimate the number of retail outlets where the product is currently available; and what is the difference in retail price between ultra-low sulphur diesel and standard diesel road fuel following the Budget Statement. [35713]

Mr. Battle: I expect the availability of ultra-low sulphur diesel fuel to increase following the changes in the levels of excise duty announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Budget of 17 March. My Department does not collect specific data on the number of outlets retailing this fuel; however, most current retail suppliers of ultra-low sulphur diesel are supermarkets and it is estimated that there are about 270 retail sites where this fuel is available. The setting of retail prices for fuels is a matter for the fuel suppliers.

Enemy Property (Second World War)

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to publish the report on British policy towards enemy property during and after the Second World War. [36382]

Mrs. Beckett: I am pleased to announce that the Government will publish the joint DTI/FCO report on the history of enemy property on 3 April.

Directors' Details

Mr. Oiner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about her Department's consultation exercise on the requirement for companies to file their directors' and company secretaries' home addresses and other particulars at Companies House. [36381]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have considered the responses to my Department's consultative document very carefully. I have decided that the requirement for companies to file their directors' and company secretaries' home addresses, as well as their directors' nationalities and business occupations, at Companies House should remain.

I am conscious of the concerns of those companies that wanted to be able to keep home addresses off the public register on grounds of either security or privacy. However, such concerns would be impossible to allay completely. The particulars of existing directors registered at Companies House are now in the public arena and it would not be possible to prevent access to that information from company information providers other than Companies House. I have also had to consider the views of those organisations that expressed concern over the need for directors to be accountable to their shareholders and creditors. Keeping home addresses off the public record would make it more difficult to locate directors and easier for directors to avoid creditors and to perpetrate fraud. It would also be more difficult to find out whether directors had been associated with companies that had failed or had been made bankrupt in the past.

I have also decided that the requirement for companies to file directors' other directorships at Companies House should be revoked. A computerised register of directors which provides full details of other directorships was set up by Companies House in 1991. Repealing this requirement will relieve companies of an administrative burden but will not result in any reduction of information on the public record.

I will bring forward regulations revoking the requirement for directors' other directorships to be included in companies' annual returns later this year. Revocation of the requirement for companies to record directors' other directorships in their own registers and to send details to Companies House both on incorporation and when there are any changes will require primary legislation which will be introduced when parliamentary time allows.

Debt Conversion

Mr. Rooney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the Export Credits Guarantee Department expects to complete its review of its debt conversion scheme. [36380]

Mrs. Beckett: The review is now complete. The Government have concluded that the Scheme as operated between 1992 and 1997 did provide significant benefits both to the debtor country and to the UK taxpayer and that these benefits could be further enhanced by some small improvements. A revised Scheme is therefore being relaunched and ECGD is, from today, able to consider offers to purchase rescheduled debts owed by up to 32 countries.

Under the revised Scheme ECGD will, as before, be able to receive an immediate cash benefit for debts rescheduled through the Paris Club arrangements. The purchaser of the debt will be repaid by the debtor country in local currency subject to the funds being invested in a suitable project in that country. As a result, the debtor country benefits both from being able to convert a hard currency obligation into a local currency debt and from securing additional investment.

During the period when the earlier Scheme operated, ECGD sold some US$133 million of debts to a number of organisations investing in a range of projects, including in the fields of education, agricultural rehabilitation and healthcare.

The improvements to the Scheme involve certain administrative changes, notably the requirement that the potential purchaser should pay a commitment fee to secure the purchase price and exclusive negotiating rights for specific debt for a given period.

WALES

Asbestos-related Deaths

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many asbestos-related deaths there were in Wales in 1997; and what was the corresponding figure for the previous year. [34876]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The latest available information from the Office for National Statistics for the number of registered deaths from asbestos-related illnesses of residents in Wales is 66 in 1997 (provisional) and 54 in 1996.

Health Promotion

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of NHS expenditure was spent on health promotion in Wales in each of the last three years; and what is the estimate for the current year. [35519]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The percentage of NHS expenditure on health promotion in the last three years is shown in the table. Figures for 1997–98 are not yet available.

Year	Percentage
1994–95	0.54
1995–96	0.53
1996–97	0.50

Scheme	Voluntary organisation	Amount of funding in 1997–98 (£)	Amount of funding in 1998–99 (£)
Building to provide facilities for rough sleepers, Swansea	Cymdeithas Caer Las	28,500	—
Resettlement worker for rough sleepers, Swansea	Cymdeithas Caer Las	4,634	—
Support to allow a cafe for rough sleepers to open longer hours, Swansea	Elim Church	1,350	—
Pilot youth drop-in scheme and single person housing project, Wrexham	Caia Park Partnership	19,800	—

The programme is currently targeted at schemes to help prevent or alleviate Rough Sleeping

The following organisations also receive funding towards their running costs:

Organisation	Amount of funding in 1997–99 (£)	Amount of funding in 1998–99 (£)
Cymdeitas Caer Las	129,670	133,300
Shelter Cymru	95,792	98,475
Welsh Women's Aid	80,279	82,525

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is (a) taking and (b) planning to take to ensure that the National Assembly has sufficient translators and translating equipment available from its establishment. [35585]

Mr. Ron Davies: I have asked the Welsh Language Board to give consideration to the provision of resources for translation in the Assembly. I am also seeking the advice of my Advisory Group in relation to the Assembly's bilingual operation, and arrangements for translation will be considered in that context.

Government of Wales Bill (Environmental Appraisal)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what environmental appraisal of the Government of Wales Bill has been produced; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [35643]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

The Bill does, however, require the National Assembly for Wales to have regard to the principle of sustainable development in exercising its functions.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he is proposing to make to the voted and non-voted cash limits for his Department and the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales for the current financial year. [36303]

Mr. Ron Davies: The cash limit on class XIV, vote 1 will be reduced by £2,000,000 from £52,712,000 to £50,712,000 as a result of lower than expected claims for farm and conservation grant schemes.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 3 will be increased by £2,400,000 from £441,438,000 to £443,838,000. This increase will cover the higher than expected expenditure on the Central Government Roads maintenance budget.

The cash limit on class XIV, vote 6 will be reduced by £400,000 from £9,405,000 to £9,005,000 mainly as a result of fewer than expected nursery inspections.

The local authority capital cash limit (WO/LACAP) will be reduced by £5,540,817 from £433,362,000 to £427,821,183; the Housing for Wales cash limit (WO/HFW) will be increased respectively by £5,540,817 from £70,335,000 to £75,875,817. This transfer of resources from the local authority capital cash limit to the Housing for Wales cash limit is in respect of work undertaken by Housing Associations on behalf of local authorities.

None of these changes adds to the overall level of Public Expenditure.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Experience

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what provision will be made in respect of Britain's role in Europe in the Millennium Experience. [31648]

Mr. Mandelson: The Millennium Experience will enhance Britain's image and standing internationally and within Europe, and will attract millions of visitors from Europe and beyond.

CABINET OFFICE

HRH Prince of Wales

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the occasions on which he has met His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, indicating the purpose of each meeting. [35933]

Mr. Mandelson: I have had no official meetings with His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Blood Sports

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what representations he has received on Government policy towards blood sports. [35934]

Mr. Mandelson: Government policy on blood sports is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and any representations that I receive on this subject are passed to his Department.

Broadcasters

Mr. Maude: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what meetings he has had with BBC executives since 1 January. [36183]

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when he has met (a) Mr. Rupert Murdoch and (b) representatives of News International; what was the purpose of such meetings; and if he will make a statement. [35957]

Mr. Mandelson: I meet representatives of the BBC and other broadcasters on a regular basis in the course of my duties.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been issued in relation to Benefits Agency involvement in police road blocks; and if she will make a statement. [33599]

Mr. Keith Bradley: Tackling fraud is central to rebuilding integrity in, and commanding public support for, a modern security system. The Government welcome properly conducted multi-agency initiatives which have a valuable role to play in countering abuse. Questions on Benefit Agency operational matters are the responsibility of the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Alan Beith, dated 23 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about guidance issued in relation to Benefits Agency (BA) involvement in police road blocks. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

Comprehensive guidance was issued to staff on 4 September 1995 and provided precise instructions concerning the procedures and conduct for fraud staff taking part in multi-agency road stops initiatives.

The main issues covered within the guidance, refer to the criteria which should exist if BA staff are to participate in police road blocks. The instructions advised staff of the types and format of questions which can be used, the procedures to be followed where suspicion exists, any powers which staff can employ, types of clothing and identification, as well as the procedures for informing the driver of their rights.

These instructions were updated during February 1997 and will be incorporated into the Fraud Investigators Guide, which will be issued to staff at the start of the next financial year.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of people with ME applying for disability living allowance have been successful as (a) first time claimants and (b) reassessed claimants in the last (i) year and (ii) two years. [33710]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with further details.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Stephen Hesford, dated 23 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding what proportion of people with Myalgic Encephalitis (ME) have been successful in applying for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) as (a) first time claimants and (b) reassessed claimants in the last (i) year and (ii) two years. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

Comprehensive information is not available in the format requested. However it is estimated on a 5% sample basis, that the number of people with ME, or other chronic fatigue syndrome, who have been successful is as follows:

	Number of first time customers	Number of reassessed customers
1.12.95 - 30.11.96	1,480	850
1.12.96 - 30.11.97	1,320	500

Due to the small numbers involved in this assessment, the figures are subject to relatively large margins of error.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were his reasons for withdrawing and subsequently reinstating disability living allowance for Mrs. G. Archer of 7 Queen's Road, Brixham; and for what reasons the core component of the allowance has not been reinstated. [35435]

Mr. Denham: The Benefit Integrity Project aims to ensure that those in receipt of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) are entitled to it. While it is right to check that people are receiving the correct amount of benefit, we are determined that those checks should be undertaken as sensitively as possible. Also, that we should ensure all decisions taken as a result of the Project are right. We have, therefore, acted to introduce an extra safeguard to improve the quality of, and confidence in, benefit decisions made by the Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 23 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the reasons for withdrawing and subsequently reinstating Disability Living Allowance (DLA) for Mrs. Archer of Brixham; and for what reasons the care component of the allowance has not been reinstated.

On receipt of, the completed Benefit Integrity Project questionnaire, further medical evidence from Mrs. Archer's General Practitioner (GP) and a Benefits Agency Medical Officer, the Adjudication Officer's (AO's) opinion was that the customer's condition had improved and Mrs. Archer was subsequently notified of this decision.

Following the application made by Mrs. Archer to review her entitlement to benefit, a different AO requested an Examining Medical Practitioner (EMP) report. This, together with a further letter from the customer's GP and previous evidence, showed that Mrs. Archer did satisfy the conditions for the higher rate mobility component. It would appear that the original AO had misinterpreted the evidence given by the GP in connection with the customer's mobility, and the higher rate mobility component of DLA was reinstated. However, the AO reviewing the case decided there were insufficient care needs to qualify for any rate of the care component. Therefore this was not reinstated.

All claims to benefit are decided by AOs who are statutory office holders. They are required to make impartial decisions based on the application of the law to the facts of the individual case. It is the AO's responsibility to consider whether a decision can be made on the available evidence, or whether further information should be obtained from the customer, the customer's doctor, or whether a doctor from the Benefits Agency Medical Services should be asked to examine the customer.

Benefit Integrity Project

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Luton, South constituency have been (a) disallowed benefit and (b) received increased benefit as a result of the Benefit Integrity Project. [33957]

Mr. Denham: The Benefit Integrity Project aims to ensure that those in receipt of DLA are entitled to it. While it is right to check that people are receiving the correct amount of benefit, we are determined that those checks should be undertaken as sensitively as possible. Also, that we should ensure all decisions taken as a result of the project are right. We have, therefore, acted to introduce an extra safeguard to improve the quality of, and confidence in, benefit decisions made by the Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Ms Margaret Moran, dated 23 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning how many people in the Luton South constituency have been (a) disallowed benefit and (b) received increased benefit as a result of the Benefit Integrity Project. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

The information is not available in the format requested. The database of casework has not been designed to extract information geographically during the project. To do so would necessitate high cost and disruption to the processing of ongoing casework. However, once the casework has been completed a full evaluation of the data is planned to provide a geographical analysis.

As at 31 January 1998, 54,839 cases nationally have been examined as part of the BIP. Of the total cases dealt with 1,299 have had their benefit increased, 42,730 have been unchanged, 6,884 have had their benefit reduced and 3,926 have had their benefit stopped. The total includes 10,811 renewal cases; of which 334 had their benefit increased, 5,601 remain unchanged, 2,907 have had their benefit reduced and 1,969 have had their benefit decreased.

A monthly statistical report can be found in the House of Commons library.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the amount of state benefits paid out to injured claimants, which was recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit from successful defendants during each of the last three years. [34133]

Mr. Denham: The administration of the Compensation Recovery Unit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Phil Willis, dated 23 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what was the amount of state benefits paid out to injured claimants which was recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit from successful defendants during each of the last three years. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

Financial year	Amount recovered
1995–96	135.1
1996–97	145.5
1997–98 (to 28.2.98)	153.0

TREASURY

Vitamin B6

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have died from overdoses of vitamin B6 since July 1997. [33516]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Tredinnick, dated 24 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on how many people have died from overdoses of vitamin B6 since July 1997.

Based on provisional 1997 data, there have been no deaths certified as due in part or whole to vitamin B6 overdose in the period July to December 1997.

Data for 1998 are not yet available.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will include on his website the numbers of all premium bonds where prizes are unclaimed. [34742]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls with the responsibility of the Chief Executive of National Savings. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Peter Bareau to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 24 March 1998:

Thank you for your question about publishing on the Internet the numbers of all Premium Bonds where prizes are unclaimed.

Premium Bond holders do not have to claim their prizes - National Savings automatically writes to all winners. However, there are cases where Premium Bond holders move house and forget to notify National Savings of their new address. In these cases National Savings endeavours to find their new address. If not found after 18 months, the winning Bond numbers are put on to National Savings' "unclaimed prize" list and published in the Supplement to the London Gazette, which is updated quarterly. Copies of this publication are held at main post offices in the UK.

There is no limit for recovering these prizes - National Savings will always honour payment when the Premium Bond holder's new address is established.

To offer better customer service and convenience, National Savings is now planning to include a searchable database of these unclaimed prizes on its new Web site. The new site is currently being developed, and it is hoped that it will go live in May 1998.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of unclaimed premium bond prizes (a) by English county and Welsh and Scottish unitary authority and (b) in total; and how much of this total accrued in the last 12 months. [34746]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls with the responsibility of the Chief Executive of National Savings. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Peter Bareau to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 24 March 1998:

Thank you for your question about the value of unclaimed Premium Bond prizes. The information you requested is set out below.

National Savings current computer systems can not provide a breakdown of unclaimed Premium Bond Prizes by individual English counties, or Welsh and Scottish Unitary authorities. However, the information is available by region and is set out in the following table:

Region	Total Value (£)
Avon Dorset Glos Somerset Wilts	720,000
Bedfordshire Cambridgeshire	270,000
Berkshire Bucks Oxfordshire	550,000
Channel Isles Cornwall Devon	360,000
Cheshire	300,000
Cleveland Cumbria Durham North Tyne and Wear	530,000
Derbyshire Staffordshire	290,000
Essex	440,000
Foreign Addresses	960,000
Hampshire Isle of Wight	440,000
Herefordshire Shropshire Worcs	190,000
Hertfordshire	310,000
Kent	410,000
Isle of Man Lancs Merseyside	1,100,000
Sth Humberside Leics Lincs Notts	480,000
Greater London	3,800,000
Norfolk Suffolk	260,000
Northamptonshire	98,000
Nth Humberside Yorks (Nth Sth West)	830,000
Scotland	1,100,000
Surrey	430,000
Sussex (East and West)	430,000
Northern Ireland	210,000
Wales	600,000
West Midlands Warwickshire	690,000
Total value of unclaimed prizes	15,800,000

Premium Bond holders do not have to claim their prizes—National Savings automatically writes to all winners. However, there are times when Premium Bond holders move house and forget to notify National Savings of their new address. In these cases National Savings endeavours to find their new address. If not found after 18 months, the winning Bond numbers are put on to National Savings' "unclaimed prize" list and published in the Supplement to the London Gazette, which is updated quarterly and is held at main post offices in the UK.

The total unclaimed prizes accrued in the last 12 months is £1.2 million. Because of the 18 months before a prize is deemed "unclaimed", this relates to prizes drawn during the period August 1995 to August 1996.

Over the 40 year life of the Premium Bond Scheme, the total value of prizes paid out has been £3.9 billion. The current amount unclaimed represents less than half of one per cent. of that total.

Taxation

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of his proposal to alter the basis on which members of professions are taxed on their incomes on (a) members of the Faculty of Advocates and (b) solicitors' firms in Scotland. [34607]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 March 1998]: The Inland Revenue Press Release issued on 22 December invited comments on the proposals to withdraw the cash basis practices available to professional businesses. The purpose of consultation was to enable those affected to voice their concerns and to help the Revenue to make a better informed assessment of the impact of the proposed change on different sectors. The Inland Revenue has received a large number of responses and I myself have received many. The Inland Revenue and I have also had meetings with representative bodies, including the Law Society, the Law Society of Scotland, the Bar Council, and the Faculty of Advocates.

Following the consultation, the proposal was refined and developed, and a number of modifications to the original scheme were announced in the Budget. An Inland Revenue press release on Budget Day set out the revised proposal.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received since 22 December 1997 concerning the alteration of the basis on which members of professions are taxed on their income; and which of these expressed opposition to the proposed changes. [34608]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 March 1998]: We have received a large number of comments and representations on the proposal to withdraw the cash basis practices. Many of these expressed concerns about the effect of the proposal on professions.

Following the consultation, the proposal was refined and developed, and a number of modifications to the original scheme were announced in the Budget. An Inland Revenue press release on Budget Day set out the revised proposal.

Historic and Religious Buildings

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of VAT income from repairs to historic and religious buildings in each of the last three years. [35569]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 1998]: No such estimate has been made.

Third World Debt

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many responses he has received to date from the Christian Aid Campaign on Third World Debt; and how much money has been received by his Department in furtherance of the campaign. [35652]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 March 1998]: Since January 1997, the Treasury has received some 7,000 letters and postcards on Third World Debt. This includes over 1,600 postcards that have been received in response to the Christian Aid Campaign on Third World debt.

The total amount of money that has been received from the public towards reducing the debts of poor countries is over £6,300. We have arranged that this money be used to help write off the debts owed to the UK by Tanzania.

Finance Bill

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Finance Bill will be published; and if he will make notes on the Bill's clauses available to hon. Members as usual. [36194]

Dawn Primarolo: The Finance Bill will be published on Wednesday 8 April. Explanatory Notes on the Bill's clauses will be placed in the Vote Office and the Libraries of both Houses that day. Members of the public will be able to obtain copies of the Explanatory Notes from the Treasury; these will also be available on the Treasury's Internet site (http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk).

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the final outturn for 1996–97 for (a) each running costs limit and (b) the Ministry of Defence's operating costs limit. [36302]

Mr. Darling: The final outturn for 1996–97 for each running costs limit and the Ministry of Defence's operating costs limit is shown in the table.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what role the CBI and trade unions have played in the New Deal. [33950]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Effective local partnerships are essential to the success of the New Deal. Employers and trades unions clearly have an important part to play. The CBI and the TUC have encouraged their members to be involved fully in local New Deal arrangements.

In addition, my officials and I have held regular meetings with the CBI and trades unions. The New Deal Task Force itself contains two members of the Executive Council of the TUC and Sir Peter Davis, the Chairman of the Task Force, has also recently met John Monks. Sir Peter Davis and other members of the Task Force are members of the CBI President's Council.

The CBI, TUC and individual trades unions have expressed support for the New Deal and have made a valuable contribution to its development.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the number of people in the Beckenham constituency who will be eligible for the New Deal. [34718]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have placed in the Library a list of the client planning assumptions for each New Deal unit of delivery which the Employment Service is using to plan provision for young unemployed people aged 18–24. The table shows that the planning assumption for the Croydon and Bromley unit of delivery, which includes the Beckenham constituency, is that 2,619 young people could be eligible to join the New Deal in 1998–99.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the KPMG study of partnerships on Pathfinder areas for the New Deal. [36089]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have placed in the Library a copy of the KPMG Report.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will publish his response to the New Deal Task Force's, proposals on objectives for the New Deal. [36090]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Within the next two weeks, I will place a copy of my response in the Library.

Sixth Form Colleges

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received concerning the equity of funding between continuing sixth forms in secondary schools and sixth form colleges. [33994]

Dr. Howells: We have received representations from individual college principals and on behalf of the Hampshire Principals Group.

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will set out the formula for funding sixth-form pupils (a) continuing in the sixth forms of secondary schools and (b) transferring to sixth form colleges at age sixteen. [33996]

Dr. Howells: Maintained schools receive funding for sixth form pupils on the basis of a formula devised by the LEA as part of its Local Management of Schools (LMS) scheme. Under LMS arrangements, the bulk of funding is allocated on the basis of pupil numbers. In most cases this funding is weighted for age, with other factors to provide additional funding for schools in particular circumstances. In a small number of cases, LEAs also allocate different levels of funding to reflect the costs of particular courses undertaken by sixth form pupils. Funding for sixth form colleges is allocated through the funding methodology employed by the Further Education Funding Council. Each student attracts a number of units for the college, reflecting in particular the course being followed by the student. The college also receives units for providing the student with appropriate pre-enrolment guidance and for the student's eventual achievement.

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will review the funding of sixth forms and sixth form colleges. [34026]

Dr. Howells: Funding for post-16 education is being considered as part of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review. It is expected that announcements will be made in the summer or the autumn.

School Closures

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools which closed in Shropshire in each year since 1979. [34260]

Mr. Byers: Since 1983, the earliest year for which we have information available, the schools which have closed in Shropshire (excluding special schools) are listed in the table. Some schools have closed to reopen as an amalgamated school: some have closed to facilitate a change in age range. In such cases the successor schools are shown.

Mature Students

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will introduce measures to help students over the age of 50 years by (a) the provision of grants, (b) the waiving of tuition fees and (c) extending the upper age limit of eligibility for student loans; and if he will make a statement. [36077]

Dr. Howells: Full-time students currently in higher education who were aged over 50 at the start of their course are eligible for free tuition and for a means tested grant towards their living costs and will continue to be so for the duration of their courses. Those aged 50 and over who begin courses in the academic year 1998–99 will also be eligible for a grant at a reduced rate for that year only.

Under the new arrangements applying to entrants from 1998–99 onwards, all students, irrespective of their age, will be eligible to receive means-related help towards their contribution to tuition costs. We have no plans to extend the eligibility for loans to those aged 50 and over for 1998–99, but intend to review the eligibility requirements for 1999–2000 and subsequent years when grants will no longer be available. The recent consultation paper on lifelong learning, "The Learning Age", invited views on extending loans to those in their early 50s who wish to enter higher education, for example, to retrain following redundancy. Final decisions will be taken in the light of the responses to that consultation.

HEALTH

Acute Hospitals

16. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role he proposes for GPs and other primary carers in determining the local operation of acute hospitals. [34384]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper The New NHS sets out our approach for modernising the National Health Service and for providing integrated primary and community health care services which will influence local acute NHS Trusts.

Burns and Plastic Surgery Facilities

17. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of existing burns and plastic surgery hospital facilities within the Hillingdon, South West-Hertfordshire and Brent and Harrow health authority areas. [34385]

Mr. Boeteng: The Mount Vernon and Watford Hospitals NHS Trust provides plastic and burns services for these areas. A review of these services is being undertaken through joint working with the NHS Executive's regional offices and affected health authorities. Further discussions will shortly confirm a model of care, and criteria against which options for the future provision of services would be assessed. Full public consultation will take place on any significant service reconfiguration.

Learning Disability Services

18. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to raise standards in learning disability services. [34386]

Mr. Boateng: There is a substantial programme of work in progress including: a report drawing out the lessons from a Social Services Inspectorate inspection of learning disability services last year and a follow up to good practice guidance on health services for people with learning disabilities called 'Signposts for Success' issued in January 1998.

Nurses and Midwives

20. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he intends to take to improve the recruitment and retention of nurses and midwives. [34388]

Mr. Milburn: The Government are employing a twin strategy to deal with the growing workforce demand by increasing training levels and investing in initiatives to improve the recruitment, retention and return to practice of trained staff, including flexible and family-friendly ways of working.

36. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what strategies are in place to improve the recruitment and retention of nursing staff at NHS trusts. [34405]

Mr. Milburn: We are employing a twin strategy by increasing training levels and investing in initiatives to improve the recruitment, retention and return to practice of trained staff, including flexible and family-friendly ways of working. A resource pack has been sent to all trusts to help local managers develop and expand their recruitment and retention programmes, using the momentum built up by the current £1.2 million nursing publicity campaign.

Health Service (London)

21. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the review of London's health service. [34389]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the findings of the independent review panel, led by Sir Leslie Turnberg, and the Government's response, on 3 February 1998, Official Report, columns 843–58. We have accepted all the review panel's recommendations. This marks the beginning of a ten-year programme of modernisation for health services in London, which will deliver tangible benefits to patients, year by year.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to raise standards in primary care in London. [34391]

Mr. Milburn: We have accepted the recommendation of the independent review panel, led by Sir Leslie Turnberg, that there should be systematic progress in developing primary care in London. This will form part of a ten-year programme of modernisation for London's health services which will deliver tangible benefits for patients, year by year.

The starting point for making improvements is the White Paper, "The New NHS" and the vision it sets out for primary care development, organisation and management.

Distinction Awards Scheme

22. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to eliminate racism in consultants' merit awards. [34390]

Mr. Milburn: Action being taken this year includes better data, better monitoring of outcomes, and better representation of ethnic minority consultants on awards committees. I will be meeting the Chairman and Medical Director of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards shortly to discuss what more might be done.

Mental Health

24. Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to support day centres provided by the voluntary sector for mentally ill patients. [34392]

Mr. Boateng: We support the provision of day centres and have provided the Mental Illness Specific Grant which enables local authorities to fund a wide range of social services for mentally ill people. Many day centres are provided in partnership with the voluntary sector.

27. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to improve the mental health of young people. [34395]

Mr. Boateng: The key to improving the mental health of young people is preventing problems from developing in the first place. Good mental health is one of the targets in our public health green paper "Our Healthier Nation". We intend to ensure the development of parenting skills and parent support, foster high quality pre-school education and, within our "healthy schools" initiative, seek to promote emotional and physical well being among young people.

Berkshire Health Authority

25. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which financial year he estimates Berkshire health authority will reach its proposed funding target under the weighted capitation formula. [34393]

Mr. Milburn: We aim to make progress each year. The pace of change depends on the overall level of resources for the National Health Service and the circumstances of all health authorities.

Ethnic Minorities

26. Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to improve the health of people from ethnic minority backgrounds. [34394]

Ms Jowell: The Department is seeking to ensure that the needs of black and minority ethnic groups are fully integrated into the mainstream of service provision. This is an important part of the Government's programme to tackle inequalities and covers public health and health services, employment and social care issues. Ministers have asked for targets to be set and achieved within given time frames to embed ethnic minority health in the policy and service delivery areas.

Local Health Service Planning

28. Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's strategy for involving the public in planning local health services. [34396]

Mr. Milburn: Rebuilding confidence in the National Health Service as a public service that is accountable, open and shaped by public views is one of our essential tasks. "The New NHS" White Paper sets clear requirements for public accountability and involvement to be met locally in a variety of ways as implementation of the White Paper proceeds.

Prescription Fraud

29. Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to reduce prescription fraud. [34397]

Mr. Milburn: On 7 January, we announced a comprehensive programme of action, which includes plans to create a specific criminal offence of prescription charge evasion, improvements to prescription form security, the establishment of a hotline and internet websites for reporting suspected fraud, and the forthcoming appointment of a Fraud Supremo to spearhead this initiative.

Waiting Lists

30. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists. [34398]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave earlier today.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money will be given to the North Essex Health Authority in 1998–99 to reduce hospital waiting lists. [35932]

Mr. Milburn: On 18 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1290–304, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that £417 million of the extra £500 million for the National Health Service announced in the Budget will be for the NHS in England. Of this amount, £320 million will be targeted specifically at cutting waiting lists in England. Health authorities will be notified about their allocations shortly.

Private Finance Initiative

31. Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much new investment in health has been secured since 1 May 1997 through the private finance initiative. [34399]

37. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much new investment has been secured since 1 May 1997 through the private finance initiative in health. [34406]

Mr. Milburn: £360 million of new capital investment has been secured through the private finance initiative since the 1 May 1997—£340 million as a result of 4 major schemes achieving financial close at the following National Health Service trusts: Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust; Norfolk and Norwich Health Care NHS Trust; Carlisle Hospitals NHS Trust and South Buckinghamshire NHS Trust; and approximately £20 million through small schemes reaching financial close.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has made of the long-term costs of private finance compared with Government borrowing on hospital expansion programmes. [34387]

Mr. Milburn: To be approved, a Private Finance Initiative contract must offer better or comparable value for money to the publicly funded alternative.

Cosmetic Surgery

32. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the regulation of private cosmetic surgery. [34401]

Mr. Boateng: Since the beginning of the year, we have received seven letters and hon. Members have asked six Parliamentary Questions relating to the regulation of private cosmetic surgery.

Health Service Reforms (NHS)

33. Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Government are taking to involve frontline NHS staff in health service reforms. [34402]

Mr. Milburn: The National Health Service White Paper The New NHS: Modern, Dependable (Cmd 3807), published on 9 December 1997, makes clear our commitment to work closely with all those involved in implementing the changes needed to ensure a health service fit for the next century: NHS staff, users and carers, and partner organisations.

Further emphasis is given to this commitment by the establishment of a taskforce to explore new approaches to staff involvement and identify how frontline health service staff can work with local managers to shape new patterns of healthcare. The 13-strong panel which includes a porter, nurses, doctors, managers, a national union officer and representatives from outside industry will report to Ministers in the autumn.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

34. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the role of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence in the NHS. [34403]

Ms Jowell: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence will give a new coherence and prominence to information about clinical and cost-effectiveness. It will develop and disseminate clinical guidelines based on relevant evidence of clinical and cost-effectiveness so as to inform decision making and support evidence-based practice in the National Health Service. We will be consulting on the Institute's role and responsibilities over the coming months.

Haemophiliacs

35. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of haemophilia sufferers to discuss their concerns. [34404]

Mr. Boateng: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health met the Haemophilia Society on 10 September last year.

Health Authority Boards

38. Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of appointments to health authority boards which remain outstanding for the most recent period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [34407]

Mr. Milburn: As at 12 March 1998, there were vacancies for 1 chairman and 38 non-executive members on health authority boards. We will shortly be considering recommendations from National Health Service regional chairmen for filling these vacancies and the 302 vacancies which will fall due on 1 July 1998 when the terms of office of the present incumbents come to an end.

Suicides

39. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he intends to take to reduce the number of suicides among young people. [34408]

Mr. Boateng: Action is already being taken on a number of fronts including the pilot of a telephone helpline for young men who may be experiencing distress; restrictions on paracetamol and aspirin pack sizes and improvements in warnings about the effect of overdose; increasing public awareness and understanding about mental illness; educating health and social care professionals about depression; audit of serious incidents and the dissemination of findings; and improving primary and secondary mental health services.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review whether ambulance services should be permitted to prioritise calls within the 999 service; and if he will make a statement. [34117]

Mr. Boateng: The widely supported prioritisation of 999 calls is intended to improve response times to life-threatening calls, while maintaining the present standard for other less immediately urgent cases. A research evaluation is under way to test whether this initiative is successful in improving outcomes for patients. We have no present plans for a review.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the infant mortality rate in (a) London and (b) the rest of the United Kingdom. [35411]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 20 March 1998]: In 1996, there were 6.4 deaths of children aged under age 1 per 1,000 live births in Greater London as compared to 6.1 in the United Kingdom. The Green Paper, Our Healthier Nation, sets out our proposals for tackling these inequalities in health which will be informed by the independent inquiry into inequalities in health, led by Sir Donald Acheson.

Health Service Bureaucracy

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what targets he has for redirecting funds from NHS bureaucracy into patient care. [34400]

Mr. Milburn: The White Paper The New NHS sets out a programme of action to sweep away the bureaucracy of the internal market. Over the lifetime of this parliament, £1 billion that would otherwise have been spent on bureaucracy will be released for patient care.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has conducted to discover whether a link exists between under-age alcohol consumption and the (a) incidence of teenage pregnancies and (b) spread of HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases. [35291]

Mr. Boateng: None.

Prescription Charge Exemptions

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer of introducing exemptions from prescription charges for people with chronic heart conditions requiring treatment by drugs. [35972]

Mr. Milburn: No such estimate has been made.

National Health Service Centre for Coding and Classification

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to regularise the extra-statutory payments position in relation to the NHS Centre for Coding and Classification following the recent National Audit Office report. [35855]

Mr. Milburn: The Department has already regularised the position using delegated authority.

Health Authority Auditors

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the names and addresses of the (a) internal and (b) external auditors to (i) the Trent Regional Health Authority between 1990–91 and 1995–96 and (ii) Leicestershire Health Authority from 1995–96 to date. [35856]

Mr. Milburn: The names and addresses of the external and internal auditors for the Trent Regional Health Authority and Leicestershire Health Authority were:

Written Answers to Questions

NORTHERN IRELAND

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will arrange for remand prisoners charged with (a) murder and (b) other serious offences to be held in custody other than at HMP Maze. [35194]

Mr. Ingram: Only those prisoners who are connected with paramilitary organisations and who request to be held at HMP Maze are held there. Other remand prisoners—including those charged with non-terrorists murders and other serious offences—are held in HMP Maghaberry. Young Offenders are held on remand at HM Young Offenders Centre. Remand prisoners requiring to be held in segregated conditions will continue to be held in HMP Maze.

DEFENCE

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Electronic Systems Division at the Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston was set up; what is the purpose of this division; how many series of technical papers or reports are currently being produced by this division; and what are the names of each series. [35368]

Mr. Spellar: The Electronic Systems Division existed from the 1950s until 1972. Work on electronic systems currently forms part of the activities of AWE's Systems Engineering Department, which designs and develops electrical and electronic systems for warhead and communications projects. The Department does not produce papers or reports in named series.

Ex Gratia Payments

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what criteria are used by the Ministry to determine whether ex gratia payments should be made to ex-service personnel who have sustained serious injuries during their service in the armed forces; [35731]

(2) what is the number and total value of ex gratia payments made to ex-service personnel in respect of injuries they sustained during their service in the armed forces in each of the last 10 years. [35720]

Dr. Reid: An ex gratia payment is one made where no legal liability to pay exists. Except for two special categories of claim, relating to injuries sustained by criminal activity overseas and accidental injuries sustained by Service personnel voluntarily involved in research trials, it is my Department's policy to consider claims for compensation from ex-Service personnel only on the basis of its legal liability. With the exception of the two schemes mentioned above, no criteria exist for assessing whether ex gratia payments should be made. No ex gratia payments have been made by my Department to ex-Service personnel in respect of injuries sustained during their service in the ten year period ending 31 December 1997.

Low Flying

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what percentage of low-flying sorties over Powys were crewed by flight staff from other countries in 1997; and if he will make a statement; [35918]

(2) what percentage of low-flying sorties over Powys were the result of overseas trade deals in 1997; and if he will make a statement. [35919]

Mr. Spellar: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It remains our policy to distribute military low-flying activity as widely and equitably as practicable. In 1997, sorties flown by non-UK based foreign aircraft and UK-based USAF aircraft made up 5 per cent. of the overall number of low-flying sorties flown in the UK.

Service Personnel (Medical Discharges)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel were medically discharged from the armed forces (a) between 1980 to 1989 and (b) since 1990. [35897]

Dr. Reid: The following number of medical discharges for the armed forces have been reported by the services from 1 January 1980 to 31 December 1997 as at 23 March 1998.

(a) Number of medical discharges between 1 January 1980 and 31 December 1989: 11,157

(b) Number of medical discharges between 1 January 1990 and 31 December 1997: 11,456.

Veterans' Unit

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 48, on a veterans' unit, if he will make a statement on the discussions he had with the Secretary General of the Royal British Legion. [36083]

Dr. Reid: I had a very useful meeting with the Secretary General of the Royal British Legion on 11 March to discuss his organisation's current views on how best to improve the handling of ex-Service affairs. My Department will be looking closely at options for approaching the wider question of matters relating to the ex-Service community in the light of these discussions.

Nuclear Accident Exercises

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the scenario of a nuclear weapon accident exercise entitled Pantograph which took place in 1988; on what dates and where the exercise took place; and if he will place a copy of the results of this exercise in the Library. [35367]

Dr. Reid: Exercise PANTOGRAPH took place at RAF Hullavington in May 1988. The exercise tested the procedures in place for responding to the crash of a transport aircraft carrying nuclear weapons. A classified report on the exercise does exist, but for the reasons given by my hon. Friend in answer to the hon. Member on 31 July 1997, Official Report, column 470, and under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, I am not prepared to release the report.

Precision-guided Weapons

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 February 1998, Official Report, column 71, on precision guided weapons, which countries have been supplied with multi-spectral smoke by UK companies. [30244]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Trade and Industry does not compile records of actual exports to any destination.

The export of military smoke projectors and generators is controlled under entry ML2 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order (this is known as the "rating" of these goods). The export of munitions containing smoke is controlled under entries ML3, ML4 and possibly PL5030. The export of vehicles, vessels or aircraft incorporating smoke projectors or generators is controlled under entries ML6, ML9, and ML10 respectively. The export of specialised devices or generators for military training is controlled under entry ML14.

Many licences have been issued covering goods with these ratings. It would entail disproportionate cost to determine which, if any, covered equipment containing or capable of generating or projecting multispectral smoke.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish (a) the number of places on each of his Department's non-departmental public bodies, (b) the number of places that are currently unfilled on each non-departmental public body, (c) the total number of members that have resigned since 1 May 1997, (d) the total number that have retired since 1 May 1997, (e) the total number that have not had their contracts renewed since 1 May 1997, (f) the total number that have remained in place since 1 May 1997 and (g) the total number that have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [35281]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The number of seats, and current vacancies, for each of my non-departmental bodies, are set out in the table.

The information requested in parts (c)-(g) of the question is as follows:

(c) there have been 14 resignations since 1 May 1997;

(d & e) 43 appointments have expired;

(f) 398 members have remained in place; and,

(g) 105 members have been appointed.

These figures include all appointments which are my responsibility or where my role is to advise my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and, through him, Her Majesty The Queen.

The actual number of appointees to each board will be determined according to operational requirements. It should be noted that not all of these appointments are in the gift of the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, or on his advice, the Prime Minister or Her Majesty the Queen. The totals also include appointments made by other organisations such as the Royal Society of Arts, the Society of Antiquaries and the City of London Corporation.

[2] This column lists those appointments which are for the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport or where his role is to advise the Prime Minister or Her Majesty the Queen and where the Department is actively seeking candidates to fill vacant posts. Information on appointments which fall to others is not included. For example, information on the Museum of London does not include appointments made by the City of London Corporation.

Film Policy Review Group

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to receive the report of the Film Policy Review Group. [36456]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Film Policy Review Group Report "A Bigger Picture" was published this afternoon. I have placed copies of the Report in the Libraries of both Houses.

National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the amount of money to be allocated to the National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts during the lifetime of the current National Lottery operating licence. [36067]

Mr. Chris Smith: The National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts will receive an initial endowment of £200 million from the National Lottery Distribution Fund. I have no current plans to make any further endowment to NESTA during the lifetime of the current operating licence.

National Lottery

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the organisations that responded to the consultation exercise following the publication of the White Paper "The People's Lottery". [36384]

Mr. Chris Smith: Nearly 500 organisations and over 90 individuals responded to the White Paper, "The People's Lottery". On 18 December last year, I sent the right hon. Member a copy of the comprehensive analysis of all the responses, including a list of the organisations that responded, and placed a copy in the Libraries of both Houses.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Court Judgments

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set out his plans for a review of the enforcement of civil court judgments. [35692]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has directed that a comprehensive Review of Enforcement of civil court judgments be carried out. Its primary purpose will be to address public concern about the effectiveness of the present arrangements in enabling plaintiffs to enforce civil court judgments. The Review will also continue the task, within the Civil Justice Reform programme, of unifying the Rules of Court as between the High Court and the county court.

The Terms of Reference of the Review are as follows:

To examine the present methods available for enforcement of county court and High Court Judgment to assess their effectiveness; identify the reasons for any ineffectiveness; identify what changes would be necessary to enhance the effectiveness of the current methods of enforcement; and to make costed recommendations;

To examine the information, advice and assistance currently available to creditors and debtors; to identify what changes would be necessary to enhance the effectiveness of the current methods of enforcement; and to make costed recommendations;

To review the powers of bailiffs (county court and private sector) to determine what changes to their powers would be needed to enhance the effective enforcement of civil court judgments and to increase uniformity; and to make costed recommendations;

To consider what amendment is needed for the successful implementation of section 13 of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990; and to make costed recommendations;

To consider whether, and if so how, the present power to distrain for rent should be abolished (as recommended by the Law Commission); and to make costed recommendations;

To identify, in the light of the amended procedures and revised powers of bailiffs, the type of agent(s) or form of agency which should be responsible for carrying out those enforcement procedures; and to make costed recommendations;

To implement those recommendations accepted by the Lord Chancellor (including the production of a unified set of Rules of Court for enforcement); and

To gather the necessary data to make comparisons between the current and revised methods of enforcement and to evaluate the effectiveness of the project.

The Review will commence in April 1998. The first changes resulting from the Review should come into effect in the courts in November 2001.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Defence Export Licences

Mr. Blunt: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many defence export licence applications have been outstanding since September 1997. [33135]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 March 1998]: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows. At 6 February 1998, decisions had not been taken on 1,469 applications for standard individual licences and 117 applications for open individual licences received since 1 September 1997 to export goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List").

This information should be considered in light of the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives are planned to ensure cross departmental co-operation and the sharing of information relating to applications for licences to export arms. [34526]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 16 March 1998]: The Department of Trade and Industry already works closely with other Departments and Agencies of the Government in export licensing. There are well-tested arrangements for sharing information.

Looking to the future, the Department is developing a system which will allow export licence applications to be made electronically, and hopes to show it to a number of companies to seek their opinions very soon. This work, which is proceeding in consultation with the other Departments most closely concerned with export licensing, will create the potential further to improve interdepartmental communication.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications for arms export licences to Turkey (a) are currently pending with her Department and (b) have been (i) approved and (ii) refused since 5 November 1997, listing the amount of equipment and the companies involved. [34357]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows for the period between 5 November 1997 and 6 February 1998 in respect of applications for individual licences to export to endusers or consignees in Turkey goods controlled under Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List").

This information should be considered in light of my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint), on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

These figures exclude Media OIELs, which are Open Individual Export Licences authorising the export to any destination of protective clothing, mainly for the protection of aid agency workers and journalists when working in areas of conflict.

As regards the additional information requested, it would entail disproportionate cost to make the inquiries necessary under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the arms for which licences for export to the Philippines have been granted in the past five years. [29120]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the results are as follows. Between 1 January 1993 and 12 January 1998, 142 standard individual licences and 32 Open Individual Licences were issued for the export to endusers or consignees in the Philippines of goods subject to export control by being listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order (the so-called "Military List").

The entry in the legislation under which the export of goods is controlled is known as their rating. Individual export licences often cover a range of goods, controlled under several entries in the legislation. Where this is so the licence is included in the Table in the total shown against each of the relevant ratings.

This information should be considered in light of my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

Mr. Quinn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71, if statistics on export licences issued and refused for the second half of 1996 have been placed in the Library. [36624]

Mrs. Roche: The statistics on export licences issued and refused for the second half of 1996 have been placed in the Library of the House today.

Iraq

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the pathogen strains exported from the United Kingdom to Iraq between 1985 and 1989 indicating the date of export. [34846]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The Department of Trade & Industry does not compile records of exports to any destination. A list of applications for licences to export to Iraq from the period 1984–90 formed Part A of Appendix A to Sir Richard Scott's Report of the Inquiry into the Export of Defence Equipment and Dual-Use Goods to Iraq and Related Prosecutions.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licence applications were approved between the end of the Gulf War in 1991 and 1997 for shipment to Iraq of growth mediums that could have dual use. [34527]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 16 March 1998]: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) on 16 March 1998, Official Report, columns 487–90.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what analysis the Government have undertaken on the relationship between the Multilateral Agreement on Investment and Multilateral Environmental Agreements; and if she will publish the results. [35498]

Mrs. Roche: As part of the OECD's review of the relationship between the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) and environmental regulation, which was requested by the UK, the OECD Secretariat has prepared a draft paper on the relationship between the MAI and MEAs. This part of the OECD's review is currently under discussion, and we hope it will be placed on the Internet soon.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what analysis the Government have carried out on the effect of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on regulations relating to (a) labour standards and (b) the environment; and if she will publish it. [35496]

Mrs. Roche: All negotiators agree that the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) must not undermine normal government regulation, including in the fields of labour standards and the environment. The UK and several other countries are pressing for a requirement that labour and environmental regulations should not be waived to attract particular investments.

A copy of the UK's review of the compatibility of our national laws on the environment with the MAI was placed in the Library of the House on 19 March.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish the evidence evaluated by the Government on the treatment of the trading of pollution quotas under the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [35497]

Mrs. Roche: The MAI concerns investment rather than trade. Nevertheless, the issue of trading pollution quotas is under consideration in the OECD's review of the relationship between the MAI and MEAs.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will seek to amend the current draft text of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment in respect of compensation for expropriation of an investment. [35619]

Mrs. Roche: New draft text on compensation and expropriation was tabled in negotiations on 17 March in response to fears that an earlier draft was too widely drawn. This makes clear that Parties will not be required to pay compensation for losses arising from normal government activity such as regulation and revenue-raising.

The Government welcome the objective of the new draft, which we will consider carefully.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to provide financial assistance to small businesses to help them deal with millennium computer compliance problems. [35601]

Dr. Kumar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial support she intends to provide to small and medium enterprises to overcome the difficulties of Millennium computer compliance. [34124]

Mrs. Roche: Action 2000 has been set up to raise awareness and understanding of the Millennium bug problem and of the action which can be taken to deal with it. As with any business problem, it will be for individual businesses to finance the steps required to deal with it, although Business Links will be able to offer advice and easy access to the necessary support.

Delft Flight Simulator

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the Minister for Science, Energy and Industry's letter of 18 February 1998 to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what is the result of the contact with Caledonian University on helping British companies exploit Delft Flight simulator technology; and if she will make a statement. [34122]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 23 March 1998]: My hon. Friend has written to me on this subject, and further to my reply of 18 February, in which I stated that my officials were pursuing this matter, I can confirm they have been making inquiries to obtain details of the project from the university.

My officials will continue to investigate and will consider carefully the information we receive. I will write to my hon. Friend with more details as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Kenya

Mr. Laxton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the military, security and police supplies sent to Kenya in the last two years went to the military or to police units. [32832]

Mrs. Roche: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to the hon. Member for North Devon (Mr. Harvey), on 12 March 1998, Official Report, columns 331–32.

Export Licences (Iraq)

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how long on average it takes to obtain an export licence to export humanitarian products to Iraq; what proportion of that time is taken waiting for a decision from the UN; what was (a) the longest and (b) the shortest time taken to grant an application for such a licence in the last 12 months; what was (i) the longest and (ii) the shortest time taken by the UN in processing an application referred to them by her Department over the same 12 months; and if there is any difference between the time taken to process applications made by recognised charities and commercial concerns. [35083]

Mrs. Roche: The Export Control Organisation of the Department does not record the average length of time it takes to process an export licence application, and it would entail disproportionate cost to find the longest and shortest times taken in the last 12 months to process applications to export humanitarian products to Iraq.

Typically, the Department has been notified of the United Nations Sanctions Committee's decisions three to four weeks after submission, but this can vary a great deal from case to case. The Department does not compile records of the time taken between submission to the Committee of an application by the UK Mission to the United Nations and notification of its decision. The Sanctions Committee has recently completed a review designed to streamline its consideration of applications.

In processing applications, the Department makes no distinction between recognised charities and other applicants. However, where a UN aid agency, such as UNICEF or the World Health Organisation, is acting as the consignee, the agency can seek approval from the Sanctions Committee before the exporter applies for an export licence, which is likely to reduce the processing time within the Department of Trade and Industry.

Village Post Offices

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many village post offices closed (a) nationally and (b) in Shropshire in each year since 1979 for which figures are available. [34258]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that the number of rural post offices nationally which have closed since March 1987 are as set out in the table. Due to reorganisation and changes in administrative boundaries at Post Office Counters Ltd, data before this date nationally and before 1993 in Shropshire are not available.

Dismissal Procedure Agreements

Mr. McAllion: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the dismissal procedure agreements made by employers and trade unions and substituted for industrial tribunals under the terms of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978. [35697]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 has been superseded by the Employment Rights Act 1996. Only one agreement has been made under the dismissal procedures provisions in section 110 of that Act. It relates to the Joint Industry Board for the Electrical Contracting Industry.

Trade Union Ballots

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will ensure that an independent agency has the responsibility for defining the constituency boundaries of trade union ballots. [35780]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government will set out their proposals on union recognition for consultation in the forthcoming White Paper on fairness at work.

Workers' Rights

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to ensure that workers dismissed for taking part in a legal strike have a right to (a) reinstatement and (b) compensation. [35778]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are reviewing the law on the dismissal of strikers and will announce the outcome in the forthcoming White Paper on fairness at work.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reviews she has undertaken to assess the advantages and disadvantages of a minimum length of employment in respect of protection against unfair dismissal. [35779]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My Department monitors carefully the correspondence and representations which we receive from all sides on this issue. Questions about the length of the employment period discriminating indirectly against women are currently before the European Court of Justice and we shall consider the Court's judgment in due course.

Utility Regulation

Mr. Healey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about progress with the review of utility regulation. [36623]

Mrs. Beckett: Water, energy and telecommunications are among the essentials of everyday life. The public expect and have a right to an efficient supply of these services, on fair terms. The Government are determined to ensure that the regulatory framework delivers this.

That is why I announced a review of regulation of the gas, water, electricity and telecommunications utilities on 30 June 1997. I am today publishing the results of this review in a Green Paper, "A Fair Deal for Consumers: Modernising the Framework for Utility Regulation".

Effective regulation should ensure that the consumer comes first. It should do this by providing incentives to innovate and improve efficiency; by driving competition to push service standards up and prices down; by protecting consumers where the discipline of competition is insufficient; and by providing a framework which will ensure that these industries contribute to a better environment and quality of life, capable of being shared by all sectors of society, and by future generations.

The privatised utilities were sold too cheaply, and price controls set by the previous Government on privatisation were too lax. The result was a bad deal for consumers and for taxpayers. The Windfall Tax put right the mistakes of the past. It is time now to learn lessons from the existing regulatory regime—both its strengths and its weaknesses—to ensure that consumers are better served in future. We need to anticipate changes in market structures such as the development of multi-utility companies, the rapid emergence of competition in energy supply, and the impact of liberalisation in telecommunications. We also need to build confidence in the regulatory system by improving the transparency, consistency and accountability of the process.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Motorway Closures

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which stretches of motorway are subject to cyclical closures for maintenance; how frequent these closures are; at what time of day they occur; and what estimate he has made of the average extra journey time of diverted vehicles. [35129]

Dr. Strang: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Jon Seddon to Fiona Mactaggart, dated 25 March 1998:

The Minister of Transport, Gavin Strang has asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the cyclical closure of motorways for maintenance. I am writing on his behalf.

In principle motorways are not closed for routine maintenance on a cyclical programme nor in response to ad hoc needs. There are, however, some exceptions where closure is the only way that safety can be assured.

Tunnels are usually closed for routine cleaning, light replacement etc. to maintain Health & Safety standards. These closures are restricted to one weekend night at appropriate intervals and, wherever possible, to one bore at a time to allow contraflow working.

Some slip roads also have to be closed for safety reasons when routine maintenance is undertaken.

On the M50 there is a stretch where the hard shoulder provision is inadequate and occasional closures have had to be made though on and ad hoc basis rather than to a pre-determined cycle.

The special circumstances of metropolitan London give rise to three cases on the western side of the capital where routine maintenance does require cyclical closure. The details are;

M4 from Junction 1 to Junction 3—each carriageway is closed at intervals of six weeks for four nights between 9pm and 6am.

M41 West Cross Route—each carriageway is closed at intervals of six weeks for one night between 10pm and 6am.

A40(M) Westway including Marylebone Flyover—both carriageways are closed at intervals of six weeks from 2am to 10am on Sundays.

The Highways Agency has not made an analysis of the additional journey time imposed on traffic by these closures. We do, however, use our knowledge of traffic flows to ensure that the inevitable disruption occurs only when traffic is at a minimum.

Cyclical closure of carriageways can be caused by matters other than routine maintenance. You will know that the Maidenhead, Windsor and Eton Flood Alleviation scheme on the River Thames will cause some closures of the M4 in and around your constituency from April to September. Notices giving the details of the closures are due to be published soon. The diversion route for the whole has been assessed as being 7 minutes longer than the M4 route.

Roads (A417/A419)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what decibel projections were modelled for the proposed A417/A419 DBFO road; what decibel readings have been taken by the Department, or other agencies, on the road (a) before and (b) after it was constructed; at which points along the road the readings were taken; and whether any of these readings are above the Department's decibel mean; [35346]

(2) what were the costs of surfacing an average mile of the A419/A417 DBFO road in (a) HRA, (b) SMA and (c) concrete; [35348]

(3) what critical noise modelling has been undertaken in respect of the A419/A417 DBFO road; and what the results are; [35347]

(4) which sections of the A419/A417 DBFO road are surfaced with (a) hot rolled asphalt, (b) stone mastic asphalt and (c) concrete; how many miles in total of the A419/A417 DBFO are surfaced with each; and what reasons underlay the use of different surfaces; [35345]

(5) what would be the cost of roadsurfacing all the concrete surfaces on the A419/A417 DBFO road between Latton and Nettleton Bottom with hot rolled asphalt. [35349]

Dr. Strang: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Geoffrey Clinton-Brown, dated 25 March 1998:

The Minister for Transport, Dr. Gavin Strang, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the new A417/A419 DBFO scheme.

About 15 miles of the road between the M4 and Marston Meysey and between Cowley Roundabout and the M5 are surfaced with Hot Rolled Asphalt (HRA). The sections surfaced with Stone Mastic Asphalt (SMA) total about 7 miles and are at Marston Meysey, the Churn Valley Viaduct and from Stratton to Cowley Roundabout. About 8.2 miles of the road from Latton Village to Quarry Junction have a concrete surface, apart from section across the Churn Valley Viaduct.

Under the terms of the contract, the choice of road carriageway materials was entirely a matter for the contractor.

Noise predictions were calculated in accordance with "Calculation of Road Traffic Noise" (CRTN), a copy of which can be seen in the House of Commons Library. I am arranging for a copy of the noise report that was prepared for this scheme under CRTN to be sent to you direct. We are checking the road traffic noise calculations to ensure that the correct assessments have been made. Noise readings, which use a different unit of noise measurement, were taken at eighteen Control Stations along the route to record the ambient noise levels before work started and to monitor the level of construction noise. Measurements are also being taken now at the same control stations.

Because this is a Design Build Finance Operate contract we do not have exact details of the costs incurred in laying the road surfaces used. However the Department's Agent estimates that the cost of constructing the full depth of pavement with different surfacings on an average mile of the road were

a.	HRA	935,000 per mile
b.	SMA	965,000 per mile
c.	Concrete	645,000 per mile

These estimates do not take account of any consequential changes in earthwork quantities due to the different pavement thicknesses.

There are no plans to resurface the concrete section with (HRA) and in any event there may be difficulties in doing so because the thickness of the (HRA) surfacing required would affect the drainage design, the height of the safety barriers and the headroom at bridges; major work could be required to overcome the problems.

If the concrete carriageway were to be overloaded with a thin surfacing such as SMA the estimated cost would be £1.4 million (excluding VAT, any preliminaries, insurances, drainage and maintenance costs).

Accounting Officer (Directions)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions written directions were sought by the accounting officer of the Department of Transport since 1 January 1996; what were the circumstances of each direction; and on what dates the directions were sought. [35369]

Dr. Strang: One. It concerned a scheme of redress for those who had experienced exceptional hardship from generalised blight as a result of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link before the final route was fixed. It was sought on 18 March 1997 but became unnecessary owing to changes in the hardship scheme.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that the choice of site for the London terminal for the rail link to the Channel Tunnel meets the needs of the North West and Northern regions. [35742]

Dr. Strang: St. Pancras is the London terminal specified in both the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Act 1996 and the Development Agreement with London and Continental Railways. It would provide ready access to services from King's Cross and Euston to the North and North West of England. LCR also plan through international services to the West Coast Main Line via Stratford.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authorities own housing stock; and if he will list those which spend notional rent surpluses to meet the cost of housing benefit, indicating for each how much notional rent surplus is spent on housing benefit; what is the total number of council house tenants in each authority; and what is the total number who do not receive housing benefit. [35640]

Mr. Raynsford: In 1997, 324 local authorities in England owned housing stock which was accounted for in their Housing Revenue Account.

The other information requested is contained in tables which I have placed in the Library of the House.

Private Hire Vehicles

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the responses to the consultation document, "Licensing Minicabs in London", advocated that private hire drivers in London should undergo a form of topographical training. [35847]

Dr. Strang: The majority of responses were in favour of some test of topographical knowledge for minicab drivers, though there was a range of views as to the nature of such a test.

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Government have to require applicants for licences as taxi drivers to pay for their own testing. [35845]

Dr. Strang: Such an arrangement might be desirable in principle, but would depend on an opportunity being found for primary legislation.

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the statement by the Principal of the Public Carriage Office in February, that a map reading test will be a sufficiently rigorous check on topographical skills should licensing be introduced for private hire drivers, represents Government policy. [35858]

Dr. Strang: Decisions on licensing arrangements for private hire vehicles drivers will be taken after the necessary primary legislation is in place.

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultation processes the Public Carriage Office undertakes when it proposes to make changes to its operating procedures. [35846]

Dr. Strang: I understand that the Public Carriage Office consults as it judges appropriate in the light of any particular change.

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what process of consultation and policy development will be undertaken by the Public Carriage Office in developing topographical training and testing for licensed private hire vehicle drivers under his Department's proposals to license minicabs in London; which organisations will be formally included in the consultation process; and if testing procedures for private hire vehicles will also apply to licensed taxi drivers. [35877]

Dr. Strang: It is envisaged that there will be consultation with appropriate organisations on topographical knowledge testing as on other aspects of licensing arrangements. The details are for consideration once the necessary legislation is in place.

Road Traffic

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the pilot schemes being evaluated by his Department to monitor the effect of increased journey times in reducing the volume of private road traffic. [35638]

Dr. Strang: The Department is not at present conducting a programme of pilot schemes examining this topic. With London Transport, it has studied the reductions in the volume of road traffic when roads happened to be closed or their capacity restricted for a variety of purposes. The results were published on 11 March 1998 in a summary report entitled "Traffic Impact of Highway Capacity Reductions", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. The study did not analyse the relationship between increased journey times and the volume of traffic.

Rail Services (Overcrowding)

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to encourage renewal of rolling stock and to reduce overcrowding on the Wharfedale, Harrogate and Calderdale lines. [35745]

Dr. Strang: These are matters for the Franchising Director and West Yorkshire Passenger Transport Executive. On 6 November 1997, I gave the Franchising Director new Objectives, Instructions and Guidance which require him to manage existing franchise agreements in a manner which promotes the interests of the passenger, and to secure a progressive improvement in the quality of rail services. Existing franchise agreements require operators to address expected demand for services and to demonstrate improving levels of customer satisfaction. Our forthcoming White Paper will set out new measures to increase the attractiveness of rail travel.

Parish Councils

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the potential use of (a) referendums and (b) other forms of public consultation in determining support for the establishment of parish councils. [35703]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government and Rating Act 1997 provides for the creation of parishes either where there is public support as evidenced by a petition signed by 250 or 10 per cent. of the electorate (whichever is the greater) or as a result of a request by a district council following a parish review. Since the Act has come into force my right hon. Friend has not made any assessment of the potential use of referendums or other forms of public consultation in such reviews.

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for the setting up of parish councils he has (a) received, (b) approved and (c) rejected since 1 May 1997; and for what reasons. [35699]

Mr. Raynsford: Since 1 May 1997 my right hon. Friend has received 6 requests for new parishes in the form of petitions and two from district councils following parish reviews. To date he has decided that three new parishes should be created; he has yet to decide on the other requests.

The three parishes for East Cowes, Beverley and Cottingham were all requested by petition and all fulfil the definitions set out in Section 22 of the Local Government and Rating Act 1997 and Environment Circular 11/97.

Planning Consents

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in how many cases since 1 May 1997 he has revoked a planning consent; and if he will list them. [35889]

Mr. Raynsford: None. My right hon. Friend has, however, used his power under section 100 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 on 5 March 1998 to modify a planning permission to delete class A1 retail use from a planning permission granted on 20 December 1993 by Alnwick District Council for development of a retail/business park on land north east of Willowburn Avenue, Alnwick.

Highway Schemes

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the total sums in bids for transport supplementary grant or credit approval for 1998–99 made by each local authority in England in each of the categories (a) major highway schemes eligible for TSG, (b) major highway schemes not TSG-eligible, (c) structural maintenance on carriageways, (d) structural maintenance on bridges, (e) major public transport projects, (f) minor works: packages, (g) minor works: non packages and (h) minor works: local safety schemes. [35649]

Dr. Strang: Bids for 1998–99 local transport capital resources are shown in a table, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Circus Accidents

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many circus accidents involving (a) lions, (b) tigers and (c) other wild animals have been reported in each year since 1990. [35748]

Angela Eagle: The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) records all accidents at work or in connection with work that result in a fatality, major injury or over-3-day injury. HSE's information systems can identify accidents involving animals as a whole since the operating year 1991–92, the first year where accidents occurring in circuses can be identified. These records show one over-3-day injury to an employee by a circus animal. The species of animal is not identified.

The provisions of the Data Protection Act preclude any further detail being provided as it would allow the injured person to be identified.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what calculation he has made of the volumes of low level and intermediate level radioactive wastes that will be stockpiled in the United Kingdom by 2010. [35755]

Angela Eagle: At 2010, the volume of committed intermediate-level radioactive waste from all sources and when conditioned is estimated to be 136,457m^3.

No estimates are available for the low-level radioactive waste (LLW) in store at 2010. The vast majority of LLW is routinely disposed of and no projections have been made of the small amounts of LLW that are unsuitable for disposal using the current disposal routes.

The total volume of radioactive waste of all types, from all sources, including those in store on 1 April 1994 and those predicted to arise thereafter can be found in The 1994 United Kingdom Radioactive Waste Inventory. A copy of the summary called Radioactive Waste Arisings in the UK—A Summary is in the Library of the House. The next inventory—for 1998—will be published in 1999.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many submissions from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) other European Union countries and (c) other countries were made to the public consultation on the Sellafield MOX plant before the submission period closed. [35753]

Angela Eagle: The Environment Agency has run two public consultations regarding the application to commission and operate the Sellafield MOX plant. The Environment Agency has provided the following breakdown of the responses it has received.

The consultation which ended on 7 April 1997 elicited 88 responses as follows:

	Number
United Kingdom	85
Other European Union countries	3
Other countries	—

A further public consultation, which ended on 16 March, was held into the report produced by PA Consulting on its assessment of BNFL's economic case for the MOX plant. This consultation elicited 88 responses, 10 of which arrived after the closing date and will be taken into consideration. The responses are broken down as follows:

	Number
United Kingdom	78
Other European Union countries	5
Other countries	5

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money has been received through the single regeneration budget, by Government office region, each year since its inception. [35913]

Mr. Caborn: The table gives the regional breakdown of funding under the Single Regeneration Budget (SRB) since April 1994. The figures exclude expenditure by English Partnerships, which although part of the SRB, receives a national allocation. A forecast figure has been provided for 1997–98.

Government office	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98

Bracken

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the clearance of bracken on local biodiversity. [36055]

Angela Eagle: The impacts of bracken control have been studied by my Department, as well as by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the statutory conservation agencies and voluntary sector organisations such as Butterfly Conservation. Although bracken can form important habitat for some flora and fauna such as rare butterflies—notably Fritillaries—it is an invasive weed and needs to be considered in terms of the vegetation and faunal communities which it is replacing. It may also displace livestock on to adjacent heather moorland contributing to overgrazing of this habitat. The studies point to a targeted rather than a blanket approach to bracken control, with judicious decisions on a site by site basis taking into account the value of the area for biodiversity and locally agreed management objectives.

Hedgerows

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has for amendments to the Hedgerow Regulations 1997 in relation to matters not covered by the recent consultation; [36054]

(2) when he will publish the results of the consultation on the Review of Hedgerow Regulations 1997; and what estimate he has made of the proportion of hedges in rural areas which will be exempt from the regulations. [36053]

Angela Eagle: We expect shortly to receive the report by the group set up to review the Hedgerows Regulations 1997. The Regulations protect important countryside hedgerows from removal through a process of prior notification to the local planning authority. No estimate of the scale of exemptions from the requirement for prior notification under Regulation 6(1) has been made.

It is estimated, on the basis of a limited survey carried out by ADAS as part of their hedgerow evaluation system research, that some 20 per cent. of all hedgerows would meet the current statutory criteria defining importance. One of the main tasks of the review group was to look at improving the criteria.

Following consideration of the group's recommendations, the Government will announce any revisions they propose to make to the Regulations. Any such proposals would be subject to statutory consultation.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect on hedgerows of the MAFF proposals to give retirement grants to farmers whose land goes to a larger holding or to forestry. [36056]

Angela Eagle: On 18 March 1998, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food invited views on whether the Early Retirement Scheme, as provided under Regulation No. 2079/92, should be applied in the United Kingdom.

No specific assessment has been made of the effect of the scheme, if introduced, on hedgerows. However, if the land were to go to a larger agricultural holding or to forestry, the requirements of the Hedgerow Regulations 1997 would apply.

London Docklands

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for each year since the creation of the London Docklands Development Corporation, what was the (i) population, (ii) unemployment rate and (iii) employment rate for the area covered by the London Docklands Development Corporation. [36095]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 24 March 1998]: These figures are not available on a yearly basis. The figures shown in the Table have been compiled from information available from the 1981 and 1991 Population Censuses and estimates by the London Docklands Development Corporation in 1996 and 1997.

[5] LDCC estimate—assumes all estimated economically active who are not employed are employed

Notes:

The smallest geographical area for which unemployment rates are produced are travel to work areas which approximate to self-contained labour markets. Official unemployment rates are therefore produced for the Heathrow and Greater London travel to work area but not at borough, ward or Urban Development (UDA) level.

Unemployment rates for the London Docklands UDA have been calculated using the estimated count of unemployment for the UDA (using official unemployment counts) and dividing this by the known or estimated economically active population.

Employment rates are based on residents in employment (including self employed) as a percentage of the economically active population.

In July 1991 there were an estimated 3,533 UDA residents who were unemployed; by December 1997 the count of unemployment was estimated to be 2,883. Over the same time period the population has more than doubled.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the total financial assistance given to the London Docklands Development Corporation since its inception. [36094]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Since the LDDC's creation in 1981, until 31 March 1998 when the Corporation ceases to operate, it will have received a total of £1,859 billion in Grant in Aid support.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the transport projects of value greater than £10 million funded by public money in the area covered by the London Docklands Development Corporation; and what is the total cost for each project for each of the last five years. [36096]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the table. The total estimated final cost of the major projects as illustrated in the Table is £719.3 million.

Audit Commission

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the Audit Commission in Scotland; if he will state the (a) location of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) number of staff based at the HQ of the Audit Commission; what percentage of staff are based in (i) head office, (ii) London and (iii) Scotland; and what percentage of (A) salary and (B) running costs are incurred in (1) London and (2) Scotland. [36107]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The Audit Commission's responsibility for audit of local authorities and health service bodies extends only within England and Wales. The headquarters of the Audit Commission is at 1 Vincent Square, London, SW1 2PN. The estimated total running costs of the Audit Commission, including District Audit, for 1997/98 are £71.4m, including salary costs of £46.7m. 150 staff work in headquarters in London and 17 in a sub-office in Bristol. The percentage of staff in headquarters in London is 11.4% and in Bristol 1.2%. The London headquarters account for 8% of salary costs and 5% of running costs. The cost of the work undertaken by district auditors in London is not readily available.

British Board of Agrément

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) location of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) number of staff based at the head office of the BBA, the percentage of staff employed (i) at head office, (ii) in London and (iii) in Scotland, and the percentage of (A) salary and (B) running costs incurred in (1) Scotland and (2) London. [36121]

Mr. Raynsford: The British Board of Agrément employs a total of 95 staff, comprising 84 staff (88% of the total) based at its headquarters in Garston, Watford, and 11 salesmen and inspectors, who are mobile. No employees are based in either London or Scotland.

Projected salary and running costs for 1997–98 are as follows:

Headquarters staff salaries	1,869
Mobile staff salaries	220
Running costs	2,231

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the British Board of Agrément in Scotland. [36120]

Mr. Raynsford: The British Board of Agrément provides commercial services for the testing and certification of construction products for which there are no recognised product standards. The service is available to manufacturers throughout the UK. The BBA is also appointed by Government as the UK spokesbody in the European Organisation for Technical Approvals and is designated to issue European Technical Approvals to companies, including those in Scotland, which successfully apply for them.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) location of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) number of staff based at the head office of the Ordnance Survey; and what percentage of (i) salary, (ii) general administration expenditure and (iii) capital expenditure costs relate to (1) London and (2) Scotland. [36118]

Mr. Raynsford: Ordnance Survey's headquarters are located in Southampton. It moved to Hampshire from the Tower of London following a fire at the Tower in 1841.

Running costs and salary costs relating to the 1,300 Ordnance Survey staff based at its Southampton headquarters for 1996/97 (latest available information) are as follows:

	£ million
Running costs	29.9
Salary costs	33.8

The percentage of Ordnance Survey's salary, general administration (running costs) and capital expenditure costs relating to London and Scotland as a percentage of the total cost of these items for Ordnance Survey in 1996/97 (latest available information) is as follows:

	percentage
	London	Scotland
Salary costs	0.5	3.4
Running costs	0.2	1.9
Capital expenditure	0.2	0.7

Ordnance Survey's presence in central London is a field office in Vauxhall. The above costs relate to this field office.

Departmental Transfer

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total estimated cost of the Department's transfer from Marsham Street. [36124]

Angela Eagle: The latest estimated costs of relocating staff from 2 Marsham Street and satellite accommodation to Eland House and Ashdown House is £67.4 million and to Great Minster House is £23.1 million.

Core Policy and Administration

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 18 March 1998, Official Report, column 608, what percentage of his Core Policy and Administration Group is based in (a) London and (b) Scotland. [36119]

Angela Eagle: At 1 January 1998, the percentage of the Headquarters element of my Department based in (a) London and (b) Scotland is 80 per cent. and 1 per cent. respectively.

Public Bodies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) locations of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) number of staff based at the head office of the (i) Commission for the New Towns, (ii) Countryside Commission, (iii) English Nature, (iv) English Partnerships, (v) Environment Agency, (vi) Health and Safety Commission and Executive, (vii) Housing Corporation, (viii) Rural Development Commission, (ix) London Pension Fund Authority, (x) National Forestry Commission, (xi) Local Government Commission for England, (xii) Local government Residency Board for England and (xiii) Joint Nature Conservation Committee; and if he will state the percentage of total (1) staff based in, (2) salary costs and (3) running costs for each body which relate to London. [36117]

Angela Eagle: The latest available figures are as follows:

Common Land

Mr. Walter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 18 March 1998, Official Report, column 608, what is the total area of common land in each National Park on which payments are made under agri-environmental schemes; and under which schemes those payments are made. [35781]

Angela Eagle: The total area of common land in each National Park on which payments are made under agri-environmental schemes, and the schemes under which those payments are made, are set out in the table.

[2] These figures relate to schemes implemented under EC Council Regulation 2078/92 (the Agri-Environment Regulation). My answer of 18 March (columns 608–609) also included areas covered by English Nature's Wildlife Enhancement Scheme and by the Moorland Regeneration Scheme.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will be publishing in draft the direction to the Local Government Commission for England, in accordance with section 7 of the Greater London (Referendum) Act 1998. [36568]

Mr. Raynsford: A draft direction to the Commission has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Water Abstraction

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the means by which the water abstraction licensing system in England and Wales can be used to deal with environmentally damaging water abstractions. [36418]

Mr. Meacher: Where water abstractions are damaging sites specially protected under the EC Habitats and Birds Directives, or by designation as SSSIs, the Environment Agency should seek voluntary agreements for reductions with the abstractors wherever possible. Where that is not possible, the Environment Agency should use its existing powers, on a clearly prioritised basis, to vary or revoke the relevant licences, and be prepared to pay compensation where necessary. As part of their review of the water abstraction licensing system, the Government are considering future compensation arrangements and a consultation paper on those and other proposals will be published within the next few weeks.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations she has received regarding the length and complexity of the self-assessment forms for claiming disability living allowance; what consideration is being given to changing the questionnaires; and if she will make a statement. [35095]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Andrew Love, dated 24 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what representations have been received regarding the length and complexity of the self assessment forms for claiming Disability

Living Allowance (DLA) and what consideration is being given to changing the questionnaires. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

A comprehensive review of DLA and Attendance Allowance (AA) claim packs was undertaken by a dedicated project team over a two year period up until November 1997. Part of the remit for the work undertaken by the team was to reduce the complexity and volume of questions and/or pages within the packs. As a result, ten pages were removed from the DLA claim pack.

Additionally a child specific claim pack was introduced in April 1997. This was as a direct response to requests from the disability lobby. Liaison was undertaken with some 30 disability groups of and for disabled people.

Effectively disability organisations such as RNIB, Age Concern, Mencap, the National Schizophrenia Association and ASBAH worked with BA staff in redesigning and refining the claim pack.

Since the revisions to DLA adult packs and the introduction of the child specific pack the Disability Benefits Directorate has not received any representations regarding the length or complexity of claim packs. In a survey to our customers following the changes to the DLA claim pack it was confirmed that the revised versions were a significant improvement on their predecessors.

There are no current plans to review the DLA claim pack given the period of time over which the last review was conducted, the organisations with whom liaison was undertaken and the relatively recent conclusion of such work. However, comments are always welcomed and can be directed to: The Customer Service Team, Disability Benefits Unit, Warbreck House, Warbreck Hill, Blackpool, FY2 0YE, telephone number 01253 337 871.

I hope you find the reply helpful.

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people (a) nationally and (b) in the Edmonton constituency have had their disability living allowance (i) increased, (ii) reduced and (iii) disallowed as a result of the Benefit Integrity Project; how many of those in categories (ii) and (iii) have been reviewed; of those how many appeals have been held or are pending; and what is the outcome of those appeals that have been heard. [35054]

Mr. Denham: The Benefit Integrity Project aims to ensure that those in receipt of Disability Living Allowance are entitled to it. While it is right to check that people are receiving the correct amount of benefit, we are determined that those checks should be undertaken as sensitively as possible—also, that we should ensure all decisions taken as a result of the project are right. We have, therefore, acted to introduce an extra safeguard to improve the quality of, and confidence in, benefit decisions made by the Project.

The administration of this programme is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from David Riggs to Mr. Andrew Love, dated 24 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning how many people (a) nationally and (b) in the Edmonton constituency have had their Disability Living Allowance (i) increased, (ii) reduced and (iii) disallowed as a result of the Benefit Integrity Project (BIP); how many of those in categories (ii) and (iii) have been reviewed; of those, how many appeals have been held or are pending; and what is the outcome of those appeals that have been heard.

The information is not available in the format requested. The database of casework has not been designed to extract information geographically during the project. To do so would necessitate high cost and disruption to the processing of ongoing casework. However, once the casework has been completed a full evaluation of the data is planned to provide a geographical analysis.

As at 31 January 1998, 54,839 cases nationally have been examined as part of the BIP. Of the total cases dealt with 1,299 have had their benefit increased, 42,730 have been unchanged, 6,884 have had their benefit reduced and 3,926 have had their benefit stopped. The total includes 10,811 renewal cases; of which 334 had their benefit increased, 5,601 remain unchanged, 2,907 have had their benefit reduced and 1,969 have had their benefit decreased. Of those cases where benefit has been reduced, 1,279 have been reviewed. Of those cases where benefit has been stopped 895 have been reviewed. In total 554 appeals have been registered.

As at 17 March 1998, 45 appeals have been heard. Of these 7 have maintained the BIP award, 6 have been reduced to a lower rate, 4 have been increased to a higher rate and 28 have reverted to the original award.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what efforts her Department is taking to ensure payment of the winter assistance to pensioners to pensioner households in (a) tenement blocks and (b) blocks of flats; [35420]

(2) what estimate she has made of the percentage of the total winter assistance payments which (a) have been made and (b) have been made incorrectly to date. [35421]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. A total of £400 million has been committed for this winter and next, to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay. This is the first time any Government have provided additional help with heating costs to all pensioners receiving a Retirement Pension or one of a number of other qualifying benefits.

The making of this winter's payments has been an enormous and unprecedented exercise. In order to establish all eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to correlate data in around fifteen million computer records, involving fifteen qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Overall, almost ten million payments will have been made to over seven million pensioner households by the end of March.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Swinney, dated 24 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions concerning the payment of winter fuel payments.

The making of almost ten million winter fuel payments to over seven million pensioner households before the end of March 1998 has been a challenging task for the Benefits Agency. Around one and a half million of the poorest pensioners, those receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, received their payment of £50 during January.

In order to establish other eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to match around fifteen million computer records, involving fifteen qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. We expect that every eligible pensioner will have received a payment before the end of March 1998. This has been achieved whilst maintaining normal benefit business.

In order to determine whether these eligible pensioners were entitled to a payment of £20 or £10 it was necessary to undertake an exercise of data correlation of all addresses held in Departmental records. Where only one eligible person was identified as living at an address a payment of £20 was made. Where more than one eligible person was identified as living at an address a payment of £10 was made.

Where official records showed that an address contained a number of separate households, for example, numbered flats or bedsits, each separately identifiable unit was treated as a separate address for the purposes of determining the number of eligible pensioners in a household. Therefore, where only one common address was recorded for more than one eligible person, it was not possible to determine which, if any, lived in a household where there was no other eligible person. As a result, some eligible pensioners who live alone or are the only eligible person in a household, but share a common address with other eligible person, will have been sent a payment for £10 when they should have received £20.

The award letter which accompanies the payment clearly explains the entitlement conditions and informs anyone who receives a £10 payment, but satisfies the conditions for a £20 payment, to contact the Benefits Agency Office which deals with their pensions, or to telephone the Winter fuel Helpline, and request the balance. Requests for review of the original decision to pay £10 are being dealt with as a matter of priority, particularly in the case of tenement residents.

So far, fewer than 10,000 of the £50 payments made during January have been identified as being incorrectly made. I am unable at present to provide you with information which takes into account payments of £20 or £10 made incorrectly. This is due to the fact that those payments are still in the process of being issued. it is anticipated that this information will be available some time after the end of April. I will provide the information requested once it is available.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Special Needs

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he is taking to help local education authorities achieve the 18 week target on drafting all statements for children with special educational needs. [35548]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department will be contacting LEAs which failed to produce most of their draft statements within 18 weeks to ask how they propose to improve their performance, and to inquire about any obstacles to better performance. We shall also be contacting those LEAs which have performed well to identify the factors which contributed to their success. We shall then provide guidance to LEAs aimed at increasing significantly the proportion of draft statements produced within 18 weeks, and consider what further action may be helpful.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the figures in the Audit Commission's report on education services, in respect of Coventry local education authorities' performance in the processing of statements on special needs education against the Government's target period. [35549]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Audit Commission's report showed that in 1996–97 only 7 per cent. of the draft statements produced by Coventry LEA were made within the statutory 18-week time limit. This is not acceptable. My Department will be contacting LEAs, including Coventry, which did not produce most of their draft statements within the time limit to ask how they propose to improve their performance.

Funding Agency for Schools

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the present number of employees of the Funding Agency for Schools in Darlington. [35940]

Mr. Byers: The total number of employees of the Funding Agency for Schools based in Darlington as at 28 February 1998 was 158. Of this figure, 88 staff are on permanent contracts, 32 staff are on loan from other government departments, 24 staff are on fixed terms contracts and 14 staff are either casual or long term temporary staff.

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what redundancy arrangements have been made for the staff of the Funding Agency for Schools following the passage of the School Standards and Framework Bill. [35941]

Mr. Byers: The provisions of the Civil Service Compensation Scheme will apply in the event of redundancies for the staff of the Funding Agency for Schools which is a member of the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme. It is however, a matter for the Funding Agency, as the employer, to determine the precise redundancy arrangements which will apply to its staff. I have asked the Chairman of the Funding Agency to write to the right hon. Member.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Seal Hunting (Canada)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the Government of Canada concerning the subsidising of commercial seal hunts. [35896]

Mr. Fatchett: We have made no representations to the Canadian Government on the specific question of subsidies for commercial seal hunting. However, we do raise the general question of seal culling at suitable opportunities at senior levels with the Canadian Government and they are fully aware of the strength of opposition in the UK to the practice. I understand that the Canadian Federal Government subsidy for seal meat will be phased out in 1999.

Kenya

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the compliance with his Department's ethical foreign policy of the sale of military, security and police equipment to Kenya. [35969]

Mr. Fatchett: In accordance with the revised criteria for licensing arms exports, we do not issue arms export licences for Kenya where there is a clearly identifiable risk that the proposed export might be used for internal repression.

During 1997 we rejected licence applications (together worth over £1.5 million) to export certain types of riot control equipment, including baton rounds and tear gas, to the Kenyan police. Furthermore, we removed Kenya from the coverage of several Open Individual Export Licences for the supply of body armour, firearms and ammunition.

Passport Application

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the application of Mr. B. M. H. Handa for a British passport was turned down at the British Embassy in Sana'a on 19 February 1998, (Embassy ref; 343/6APP5/95). [35921]

Mr. Fatchett: Mr. Handa is not a British Citizen. He was a Citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies (CUKC) by virtue of his birth in the former Aden Colony. When the People's Republic of Southern Yemen (PRSY) gained independence on 14 August 1968 he became a citizen of that country and lost his citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies.

EU (Exemptions and Derogations)

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) exemptions and (b) derogations from the Treaty on European Union permitted for member states and the legal bases in European Union law on which they are allowed. [36073]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Treaty on European Union, as now in force, inserted into the Treaty establishing the European Community provisions on Economic and Monetary Union, in respect of which Protocols make special provisions with regard to the UK and Denmark.

When the Treaty on European Union was concluded at Maastricht, exemptions where also agreed for Denmark in Protocol No. 1 on the acquisition of property in Denmark; for the United Kingdom in Protocol No. 14 on social policy; and for Ireland in Protocol No. 17 on Article 40.3.3 of the Constitution of Ireland. The Treaty concerning the accession to the European Union of Austria, Finland and Sweden also provided for certain temporary derogations for those States.

Arms Sales

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he made of proposals that the EU Code of Conduct on arms sales should be reviewed annually and that each review should be made available to the public. [35599]

Mr. Fatchett: Discussions with EU partners on the proposed Code of Conduct are ongoing. We have no difficulty in principle with the idea of an annual review of the Code's operation. The details of a review remain to be agreed.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation he had with non-Governmental organisations prior to the negotiations for the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Sales. [35600]

Mr. Fatchett: Ministers and Officials have discussed the proposed EU Code of Conduct on arms exports with non-governmental organisations (NGOs) on a number of occasions, although NGOs were not consulted on the draft text. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary held the most recent discussions on the EU Code of Conduct with NGO's on 18 February.

British Council

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the locations of the British Council (a) headquarters and (b) other buildings in the United Kingdom, providing a breakdown of (i) staff numbers, (ii) salary costs and (iii) running costs for each building in (1) London and (2) Scotland. [36184]

Mr. Fatchett: The British Council's headquarters are located in London and Manchester. In addition, the Council has a presence, which may range from a single room to part of a building, in Aberdeen, Bangor, Belfast, Birmingham, Brighton, Bristol, Cambridge, Canterbury, Cardiff, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Guildford, Huddersfield, Lancaster, Leeds, Liverpool, London (Portland Place and Telford Way), Loughborough, Newcastle, Norwich, Nottingham, Oxford, Plymouth, Reading, Southampton and Warwick.

The details for London and Scotland are as follows (1997–98 figures):

	Running costs (£)	Salary costs (£)	Staff numbers
London		13,800,000	580
Spring Gardens (Headquarters)	2,952,005
Portland Place	339,230
Telford Way	281,790
Scotland		600,000	25
Glasgow	14,000
Aberdeen	4,000
Edinburgh	60,000

Note:
Running costs include reception staff, rent, rates, utilities, maintenance, cleaning, security, restaurant.

WALES

Travelcards

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to promote the use of travelcards for public transport. [35524]

Mr. Hain: Greater use of travelcards is being considered as part of the review of integrated transport policy. This will lead to a UK-wide White Paper on transport later this year, together with a Welsh Transport Policy Statement at around the same time.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amounts allocated by the Welsh Development Agency under its statutory duties in connection with land reclamation in the current year. [35535]

Mr. Hain: Sections 1 and 16 of the Welsh Development Agency Act 1975, as amended, provide the necessary statutory powers for the land reclamation activities of the WDA. In 1997–98, the WDA has allocated £16.3 million for this purpose.

Railway Line Maintenance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what safety procedures are enforced during railway line maintenance in Wales; and what measures are taken to ensure compliance with these procedures. [35536]

Mr. Hain: All those involved in maintenance of the railway throughout Great Britain must comply with their obligations under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and related legislation. Work on Railtrack's network must comply with the requirements of their Rule Book and the Railway Standards (the provisions of which are mandatory on Railtrack plc and its contractors by virtue of Railtrack's Railway Safety case and related contractual arrangements).

Inspectors of the HSE's Railway Inspectorate are responsible for enforcing legal requirements relating to health and safety on the railways.

Civil Servants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the staff of the Welsh Office is currently aged 50 years or over; and what percentage of the staff recruited during the past 12 months was aged 50 years or over at their time of appointment. [35584]

Mr. Ron Davies: The percentage of permanent staff in the Welsh Office who are currently aged 50 years or over is 19 per cent.

The percentage of permanent staff recruited over the past 12 months (19 March 1997–18 March 1998) who were aged 50 years or over at their time of appointment is 9 per cent.

Road Accidents

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of accidents on (a) rural and (b) urban roads for the latest available period. [35576]

Mr. Hain: The readily available information is for accidents involving personal injury on roads in built-up areas (defined as roads where the speed limit does not exceed 40 mph) or on roads in non built-up areas, as recorded by the police. The latest figures, which are provisional, are for the twelve months to September 1997. There were 6,531 accidents on built-up roads and 3,268 on non-built up roads in Wales in addition to 251 accidents on motorways/A(M) roads.

Optec D.D. Factory, Buckley

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress the WDA has made in finding a new tenant for the Optec D.D. factory in Buckley. [35738]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Development Agency is continuing to actively market the company's premises at Buckley and is aware that there have been a number of expressions of interest in the property. The Agency will continue its efforts until a tenant has been found.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the agreed number of modern apprenticeship places in each training and enterprise council area for 1998–99. [35626]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 18 December 1997, Official Report, column 285.

Degree Courses (Applications)

Mr. St.Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) school-leavers and (b) mature students (i) applied for, (ii) were offered and (iii) accepted places on degree courses, by university, in Wales in (1) 1995, (2) 1996 and (3) 1997. [36045]

Mr. Hain: Information in the form requested is not readily available centrally.

The number of applicants and acceptances, aged 17 and 18 and aged 21 and over, who made at least one application for full-time and sandwich first degree, diploma or HND higher education courses at Welsh higher education institutions for the academic years 1995–96, 1997–97 and 1997–98 is set out in the table.

Applicants/acceptances to Welsh higher education institutions[1]

Age of Student[2]	1995–96		1996–97		1997–98
	Applicants	Accepted	Applicants	Accepted	Applicants	Accepted
17 and 18	27,242	7,360	23,125	8,213	25,292	9,004
21 and over	7,198	3,234	6,056	3,501	5,761	3,349

[1] Includes applicants who made at least one application for full-time and sandwich first degree, diploma or HND higher education courses.

[2] Age as at 30 September in year of entry.

Universities and Colleges Admissions Service

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by university, how many school-leavers have applied for places on degree courses in Wales in 1998. [36044]

Mr. Hain: Information in the form requested is not readily available centrally.

As at 15 December 1997 there were 33,266 applicants, aged 17 and 18, who made at least one application for full-time and sandwich first degree, diploma or HND higher education courses at Welsh higher education institutions for the academic year, 1998–99.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by university, how many mature students have applied for places on degree courses in Wales in 1998. [36043]

Mr. Hain: Information in the form requested is not readily available centrally.

As at 15 December 1997 there were 5,151 applicants, aged 21 and over, who made at least one application for full-time and sandwich first degree, diploma or HND higher education courses at Welsh higher education institutions for the academic year, 1998–99.

PRIME MINISTER

Bournemouth

Q17. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister when he next plans to make an official visit to Bournemouth. [34673]

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Government Business (Civil Servants)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Prime Minister what advice has been given to civil servants on the conduct of Government business during the forthcoming local elections and London referendum campaign. [36455]

The Prime Minister: The Government have issued guidance to civil servants on the principles which they should observe in relation to the conduct of Government business in the period before the forthcoming local elections. This guidance also incorporates material on the role and conduct of civil servants during the London Referendum campaign which will coincide with the local elections.

The guidance stresses that civil servants should conduct themselves in accordance with the Civil Service Code and is based on the need to maintain political impartiality of the Civil Service and the need to ensure that public resources are not used for party political purposes.

The guidance on the London Referendum will come into force today with the publication of the Government's White Paper on a Greater London Authority. For local elections, the convention is that particular care should be taken in the three weeks prior to polling day.

Copies of the guidance have been placed in the Libraries of the House, and are also available from the Vote Office.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ethical Trading

10. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will meet representatives of retail organisations to discuss the promotion of ethical trading policies. [34636]

Mr. Foulkes: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets representatives of retailers whenever possible to encourage them to adopt ethical codes and to work with their suppliers to improve labour conditions and environmental standards. We are greatly encouraged by the growing strength of ethical consumer movements, the responsiveness of many retailers and the huge improvements in life to which this leads for very poor producers in developing countries.

Voluntary Service Overseas

11. Mr. HomeRobertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the promotion of Voluntary Service Overseas. [34637]

Mr. Foulkes: The Government currently support volunteers serving overseas through the British Volunteer Programme. In the current financial year, we are providing £23.769 million to support over 2,000 volunteers through agencies such as Voluntary Service Overseas.

EU Aid Programme

12. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from non-governmental organisations concerning the future of the EU aid programme. [34638]

Clare Short: I receive regular representations from NGOs on all subjects. In January I spoke at an NGO forum on the re-negotiation of the Lomé Convention. In April I will attend a similar forum in Brussels with NGOs from throughout the EU. The major objective of our Presidency in the development area is to ensure that the future Lomé Convention and EC development efforts more effectively support this international poverty eradication strategy. Most NGOs strongly support this objective.

Poverty

13. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she last met her European counterparts to discuss the United Kingdom's priorities for the EU presidency in respect of poverty alleviation; and if she will make a statement. [34639]

Clare Short: I met all the EU Development Ministers or their representatives and Commissioners Pinheiro and Marin at a High Level seminar in Brussels on 17 March. The seminar, which was arranged on the initiative of British Presidency, provided a valuable opportunity for an open and informal discussion on how the European Union can more effectively contribute to the implementation of the International Poverty Eradication Strategy, a key target of which is to halve world poverty by 2015. There will be a further discussion of these issues and the future of the Lomé Convention at the General Affairs Council on 30 March, and Development Council on 18 May.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

14. Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made in ensuring that the concerns of non-OECD countries, with particular reference to environmental and labour standards, are taken into account in the MAI discussion. [34640]

Clare Short: The study of the development implications of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) commissioned by my Department has just been completed. It indicates that this Agreement could offer substantial opportunities to developing countries in attracting and regulating foreign investment. I have placed copies of this report in the Libraries of the House. The Government have made it clear that we would not sign an MAI that undermined environmental protection or core labour standards but will work for an MAI and possible WTO based agreement that benefits developing countries.

22. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's report on the consequences for developing countries of the proposed multilateral agreement on investment. [34650]

Clare Short: The report on the development implications of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) commissioned by my Department was completed on Monday 23 March and placed in the Library on 25 March. The key conclusion is that the MAI could offer substantial opportunities to developing countries if their needs are accommodated in the Agreement. The Government are currently considering all the report's findings and how best to respond to them.

Safe Motherhood

15. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans the Government have to promote safe motherhood in connection with World Health Day on 7 April. [34641]

Mr. Foulkes: We are promoting safe motherhood in collaboration with developing countries, through the UN health and development agencies (the World Health Organisation, the UN Population Fund and UNICEF) and through international NGOs. We are also supporting research into the extent and causes of maternal ill health. The Department is also supporting a major World Bank-led meeting on World Health Day to review progress on reducing maternal mortality. There is an urgent need for greater progress. In Nepal, for example, pregnancy still carries a one in 10 chance of death.

Angola

16. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to support developments to provide clean water in Angola. [34643]

Clare Short: We have committed almost £0.9 million to projects in Luanda and Kwanza Sul province which will bring clean water to poor communities and help them manage and maintain the services. The EC, to which we are a major contributor, is also rehabilitating water services in the Planalto region.

EU Development Committee

17. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development who attended the EU Seminar for Development Ministers, European Commissioners and representatives of the European Parliament's Development Committee earlier this month on behalf of the United Kingdom. [34644]

Clare Short: I represented the United Kingdom at the High Level Seminar in Brussels on 17 March with my officials. Commissioners Pinheiro and Marin also attended, as did Ministers or high level representatives from all EU Member States.

Biological Diversity

18. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress her Department has made in implementing the convention on biological diversity. [34646]

Clare Short: My Department supports the implementation of the Convention on Biological Diversity by helping poor people in developing countries to manage and benefit from their biodiversity. Since 1992, we have committed over £185 million in support of a wide range of biodiversity programmes in over 40 developing countries, including management of ecosystems, institution building, research and training and education. We have also committed over £130 million since 1991 to the Global Environment Facility (GEF), which is the financial mechanism for the Convention. Since 1991, the GEF has committed over $600 million in support of the Convention, which represents nearly 40% of its total commitments to the global environment.

The Department for International Development is currently reviewing its strategy of support for biodiversity and expects to issue a revised strategy at the Fourth Conference of the Parties to the Biodiversity Convention in Bratislava in May.

Development Assistance

19. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she has to concentrate development assistance on the poorest countries. [34647]

Clare Short: My Department is revising Country Strategy Papers in the light of the White Paper and the Departmental Spending Review. Over time, we shall increase the proportion of bilateral assistance allocated to low income countries, in particular countries which are themselves committed to sound policies to bring about the elimination of poverty. Country Strategy Papers will be made publicly available as they are finalised.

Children (Conflict)

20. Mr. Martin Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to help children whom UNICEF assesses to have been affected by conflict situations. [34648]

Clare Short: My Department is committed to supporting initiatives to protect and promote the rights of children affected by war. We have supported a number of projects world-wide including UNICEF's new work on child protection, and will continue to push for the upholding of humanitarian norms to protect children threatened by conflict. In addition, we have provided £200,000 to support the work of the new UN Special Representative on Children and Armed Conflict which aims to ensure the protection, healing and rehabilitation of children affected by armed conflicts world-wide. We will host a ministerial meeting in London on 23 June to promote Mr. Otunnu's work to our European partners and NGOs, and will explore opportunities for working together in specific countries.

Development Issues

21. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how she plans to increase public awareness of development issues; and if she will make a statement. [34649]

Clare Short: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development will chair the first meeting of the Development Awareness Working Group on 31 March. This will consider an outline strategy document for our work in this area. We are seeking not only to review the treatment of development issues in the formal education sector, but also to find new ways to engage other sectors of the Community.

My hon. Friend and I are also continuing a series of regional visits to take the message of the recent White Paper on International Development to a wider audience.

Bhutan

23. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she next plans to visit Bhutan to discuss aid to refugees. [34651]

Clare Short: I have no plans at present to visit Bhutan. My Department is a major contributor to the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) which is supporting 93,000 refugees from Bhutan in Nepal. The Governments of Bhutan and Nepal have been seeking a solution to the problem through a series of bilateral talks and UNHCR will help to implement any arrangements reached.

Women

24. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to ensure that the needs of women are met by development programmes. [34652]

Clare Short: As is made clear in the White Paper on International Development, the overwhelming majority of the poor of the world are women and children. Sustainable development is impossible without educating girls and empowering women. We are actively involved in the implementation of the Platform for Action agreed at the 1996 Beijing Conference on Women and are pursuing a twin-track approach, addressing gender inequalities as an integral part of all our development activities, as well as continuing to support specific and focused initiatives to enhance women's empowerment, both in our own programmes and in our support to relevant national and multilateral organisations.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

25. Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the long-term future of the EBRD. [34653]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 28 January 1998, Official Report, column 290.

Irrigation Projects

26. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to increase assistance to irrigation projects. [34654]

Clare Short: Agricultural irrigation has a vital role to play in ensuring future food security, and brings with it direct and indirect benefits, the latter mainly through employment, to poor people. 2.4 billion people living in developing countries depend directly on irrigated agriculture for food. This number will increase. Two thirds of all water extracted from rivers and aquifers is used for irrigation. In developing countries the proportion is even higher. There is increasing awareness of the finite nature of water as a resource, and increasing competition for the use of that water.

This issue and the general question of sustainable water management will be the subject of the meeting of the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development in New York in April.

Water, Food and Shelter

27. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of her budget is spent on providing help to those without adequate access to water, food and shelter. [34655]

Clare Short: The percentage of the Department for International Development's budget spent on providing basic education, basic health, water and sanitation, nutrition and emergency food aid, both directly and through NGOs, was 11 per cent. in the last financial year.

Jamaica

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with the Government of Jamaica regarding debt relief; and if she will make a statement. [34642]

Clare Short: My officials have made several visits to Jamaica in the past months to make recommendations to me on whether debt relief should be extended to Jamaica under the Commonwealth Debt Initiative. I expect to be in a position to take a decision soon.

Iraq

Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department has taken to provide humanitarian assistance to the people of Iraq; and if she will make a statement. [34635]

Clare Short: I have recently announced a new £7 million programme for humanitarian assistance to the people of Baghdad-controlled Iraq, to be directed through UN Agencies, and NGOs who have a capacity to provide food and medicines to those in need. This new package is in addition to my Department's existing programme of some £3 million a year, which is concentrated in the North.

I will also be co-hosting a meeting in April with my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary to discuss how the European Union and others can help the UN to try to ensure that the expanded oil-for-food programme brings urgent relief to the Iraqi people.

HEALTH

Food Poisoning

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of outbreaks of food poisoning for each of the last three years, listed by known infective agent. [35761]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is given in the table.

Microbiological Research Agency

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the management statement of the Microbiological Research Agency dated February 1995. [36027]

Ms Jowell: Copies of the management statement have been placed in the Library.

Microbiological Research Authority

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 21 July 1997, Official Report, column 409, if he will make a statement about the quinquennial review of the Microbiological Research Authority. [36028]

Ms Jowell: The findings of the first stage of the review are currently being discussed by Ministers, and we expect to make a statement in the near future.

NHS Anniversary (Internet)

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to date involved in starting and administering the NHS 50th Anniversary Internet site. [36150]

Mr. Milburn: The cost to the Department has been approximately £20,700, all of which has been met from within the communications budget. All other costs of the NHS 50 website have been met through British Telecommunications sponsorship.

Departmental Information Division

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost at current prices of his Department's Information Division in 1996–97. [36185]

Ms Jowell: The cost of the Department's press and publicity division (formally information division) for 1996/97, inflated to current prices, was £2,757,727. Press and publicity division is comprised of a news branch, containing the press office and public inquiry office, together with a publicity branch. In addition the cost of the Department's storage, distribution and fulfilment was £2,741,355.

NHS Funding

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the purposes on which the £420 million extra NHS funding allocated in the Budget will be spent. [36148]

Mr. Milburn: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made on 18 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1290–92.

Glaucoma

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will remove prescription charges for eye-drops for those suffering from glaucoma. [36176]

Mr. Milburn: All aspects of prescription charges are being examined as part of the comprehensive spending review, which will report in the summer. The review in the Department is being undertaken in the context of our manifesto commitment:

"if you are ill or injured there will be a national health service there to help; and access to it will be based on need and need alone—not your ability to pay, or on who your general practitioner happens to be or on where you live".

Access Committee for England

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will restore funding to the Access Committee for England. [36175]

Mr. Milburn: Decisions on the funding of voluntary organisations by this Department for the 1998–99 financial year have now been made and communicated to the organisations concerned. We have no current plans to restore funding to the Access Committee for England.

Food Science Research Contracts

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the food science research contracts allocated by his Department and its agencies in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97 broken down by (i) length of contract, (ii) value of contract and (iii) institution securing the contract. [35404]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The Department funds the following contracts which could be considered to fall under the heading of food science research.

Department of health food science related research projects

Project title	Duration	Cost (£)	Organisation
1994/95
Detection of specific mRNA as an index of viability in stressed foodborne microbes	36 months	256,626	Institute of Food Research
Quantitative detection of metabolically active Campylobacter spp. in four hours	24 months	70,644	University of Nottingham
1995/96
Assessment of the degree of heat treatment necessary to destroy E. coli 0157	24 months	159,631	University of Reading
The application of notational analysis and hazard analysis to assess the potential for cross contamination in domestic food preparation	36 months	66,857	Cardiff Institute of Higher Education
Food safety risks scores and food operations risk scores of targeted groups of consumers and the evaluation of hygiene intervention	36 months	69,832	Cardiff Institute of Higher Education
Investigation of methods for logging and recording the temperature of food samples submitted for microbiological analysis	21 months	51,532.30	Preston Public Health Laboratory
A study into tolerance and survival in salmonellas particularly Salmonella typhimurium DT104	12 months	37,524	Exeter Public Health Laboratory
1996/97
Acid tolerance and pH homeostasis of verocytotoxin producing Escherichia coli	36 months	126,304	University of Aberdeen
Quantitative detection of metabolically active Campylobacter spp. in four hours	12 months	44,481	University of Nottingham
Development and evaluation of solid media to identify verocytotoxin producing Escherichia coli and to detect verocytotoxin in clinical and food samples by a novel method producing a direct colour response to both the toxin antigen and its biological activity	36 months	286,083.12	Laboratory of the Government Chemist
Diarrhetic shellfish poisoning (DSP): development of a protein phosphatase inhibition (PPI) assay and tissue culture assay for the detection of DSP toxins in shellfish	12 months	38,356	Public Health Laboratory Service

In addition, the Department currently funds a Unit at St. Bartholomew's Hospital for research into the toxicology of chemicals some of which can be found in food.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish (a) the number of places on each of his Department's non-departmental public bodies, (b) the number of places that are currently unfilled on each non-departmental public body, (c) the total number of members that have resigned since 1 May 1997, (d) the total number that have retired since 1 May 1997, (e) the total number that have not had their contracts renewed since 1 May 1997, (f) the total number that have remained in place since 1 May 1997 and (g) the total number that have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [35274]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The appointments to non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department include appointments made by the Prime Minister, and myself. In addition, I also make appointments for a non-departmental public body sponsored by the Central Office of Information, which is a Department in its own right and which reports directly to me.

The table lists the information requested.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what financial provisions will be made available to public authorities to process applications for information, following the implementation of his Freedom of Information proposals. [35776]

Dr. David Clark: Public authorities will be expected to allocate resources to fulfil their duties under the Freedom of Information Act from within overall expenditure ceilings.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what figure he plans to set as a disproportionate cost or diversion of resources under the Gateway provisions of his Freedom of Information proposals. [35777]

Dr. David Clark: We do not envisage the Freedom of Information Act specifying a fixed sum for what would amount to disproportionate cost or diversion of resources from other priorities. This would depend on the circumstances of the public authority concerned and the nature of the request.

As proposed in the White Paper, Your Right to Know, a decision by a public authority not to provide the information requested on these grounds would be appealable to the Information Commissioner who would take account of other discretionary cost thresholds such as that for answering Parliamentary Questions.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what evaluation was made of the option of using an air-conditioning system for the Millennium Dome powered by hydrocarbons. [35928]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) received no bids proposing the use of hydrocarbons during the procurement process for air chiller units. Subsequent inquiries made by the NMEC suggested that suppliers were reluctant to offer a hydrocarbon system for a project of the scale and nature of the Dome. I also understand from the NMEC that hydrocarbons would require additional and more complex precautions to ensure optimum safety in a project the size of the Dome.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the sponsorship secured by contract for the Millennium Dome by 18 March giving in each case (a) the company or individual, (b) the amount and (c) details of undertakings given to sponsors in return for their sponsorship. [35931]

Mr. Mandelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Ms Cooper) on 24 February 1998, Official Report, column 204. Negotiations on the contractual details are continuing in each case.

Millennium Experience

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what are the specifically Christian elements of the Millennium Experience. [36173]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company is holding regular discussions, facilitated by the Archbishops' Officer for the Millennium, with representatives of the Lambeth Consultation Group. The purpose of these discussions is to ensure that the "Spirit Zone" of the Millennium Experience contains appropriate and inclusive references to Christianity and the Christian heritage of the United Kingdom.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EU Fisheries Council

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Brussels on 24 March; and if he will make a statement. [36569]

Dr. John Cunningham: I chaired the meeting of the Fisheries Council in Brussels on 24 March. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary represented the United Kingdom together with my noble friend the Under-Secretary of State at the Scottish Office, Lord Sewel.

The Council discussed the introduction of a ban on high seas drift nets. Views were divided. The UK, with a majority of other Member States, argued for the phasing out of such nets because of the by-catch problems associated with them, particularly by-catches of dolphins. Several Ministers opposed a ban. However, at the end of the discussion I was able to conclude that there was an expectation that there will be a qualified majority in support of a ban. This helps clear the way for a formal agreement before the end of June. In the meantime, the European Commission will prepare measures such as decommissioning or conversion, to be applied within existing funding provisions, for fishermen affected by the ending of drift netting for tuna, swordfish and other high seas species.

The Council agreed by qualified majority, with Belgium voting against, new total allowable catches (TACs) and quotas for the North Sea. The six new TACs will help to conserve stocks by extending the quota system to cover anglerfish, megrim, skates and rays, turbot and brill, dab and flounder, lemon sole and witch. The new TACs are precautionary and national quotas are based on historic catches, so confirming large UK shares.

Political agreement was reached, with the Netherlands dissenting, on a measure to rationalise by-catch limits for herring in industrial fisheries for other species and to limit industrial fishing for herring to part of the Baltic Sea. No other herring may be used for industrial purposes unless it is first offered for sale for human consumption and fails to find a buyer. Taken together, these measures should help to conserve sensitive herring stocks.

The European Commission presented a report reviewing the operation of fisheries monitoring under the Common Fisheries Policy (CFP) and drawing attention to areas where enforcement needs to be strengthened by means of a 3-year action plan. In an orientation debate, the UK supported the introduction of new measures to achieve more effective and more consistent fisheries enforcement. As chairman, I was able to conclude that there was general support for improved enforcement and the Council welcomed the Commission's intention to come forward rapidly with concrete proposals. The Council will return to the subject at its next meeting.

The Council unanimously agreed conclusions welcoming pilot regional meetings held during 1997 and calling for the initiative to be developed and extended in 1998. These regional meetings contribute to the UK's objective of increasing the involvement of fishermen in CFP discussions and developing the regional dimension of the CFP.

Finally, the Council unanimously agreed, with Spain abstaining, autonomous tariff quotas for imports of fish products in 1998.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Department has to transfer the MAFF-funded food research work programme to other scientific institutions in Norwich in the event of closure of the Norwich site of the Central Science Laboratory. [35963]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: There are no plans to transfer ongoing MAFF funded work to other research institutes in the event of closure of the Norwich laboratory. MAFF funding for food research is available via open competition; scientific institutions at Norwich may continue to bid for such funding in the usual way.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what detailed studies (a) his Department and (b) the Central Science Laboratory have made of options for setting the Sand Hutton Laboratory, York on a sound financial footing; and if he will publish them. [35961]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: I have asked officials to undertake studies on measures to improve the financial footing of the Central Science Laboratory, and am considering their analyses with Ministerial colleagues.

Such studies necessarily include commercially sensitive information and therefore it would not be appropriate to publish them.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what redundancy costs his Department is assuming, and for how many staff, for (a) scientists and (b) non-scientists if the Central Science Laboratory site at Colney Lane, Norwich is closed; and by which body such costs would be born. [35956]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) would seek to retain as many staff as possible if a decision is taken to move the work of the Norwich laboratory to York. CSL would endeavour to avoid compulsory redundancies by seeking to re-deploy non-mobile staff.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current and projected capital charges for the Central Science Laboratory at Sand Hutton, York, for each of the years 1996–97 to 2001–02, indicating which are payable by (a) his Department, (b) the Central Science Laboratory and (c) other public bodies. [35953]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Capital charging is being introduced across the Government estate from 1 April 1998. Information is therefore only available from that date. The annual cost for Sand Hutton is anticipated to be £7.2 million until the year 2001–02. The Department will bear the full cost of the capital charge as the Agency forms part of the MAFF estate. However, the Central Science Laboratory must recover the full accommodation costs of both sites through charges to customers.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of (a) the number and (b) the total value of the contracts which would be lost by the Central Science Laboratory in the event of closure of the Norwich laboratory of the CSL. [35964]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: In relocating to York in 1996, the Central Science Laboratory closed three large sites and five smaller sites. Experience from this exercise indicates that there would be minimal long-term loss of work or customers as a result of relocating work from Norwich to York.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the possibility of moving other MAFF and MAFF Agency laboratories to the Central Science Laboratory at Sand Hutton, York. [35960]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The Prior Options review of Government Research Establishments explored all avenues in relation to science programmes and the location of work. MAFF laboratory agencies were considered as part of this review.

There are no laboratories within the core Department.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if (a) his Department and (b) the Central Science Laboratory have taken legal advice on the possible redundancy costs of closure of the Central Science Laboratory at Norwich. [35958]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food operate the rules laid down in the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme for the administration of early retirement and redundancy. Legal advice would be sought, as appropriate, should it be decided to re-locate staff currently based at Norwich.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the capital cost of closing the Central Science Laboratory facility at Colney Lane, Norwich; and where this cost would be funded from. [35954]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Closure of the Central Science Laboratory at Norwich would result in costs of £2.8 million being incurred. These costs would be borne by the Department.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates his Department has made of the revenue savings resulting from the closure of the Central Science Laboratory facility at Colney Lane, Norwich; and to which body such planned savings would accrue. [35952]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Projected revenue savings of £1.5 million per annum would result from the closure of the Norwich site. These savings would accrue to the Department in terms of a reduction in running costs for the Central Science Laboratory.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 728, what reasons underlie the difference between the £133,832,000 cost to his Department of constructing the new Central Science Laboratory at Sand Hutton, York, and its assessed value at 31 March 1997. [35546]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The estimate of value as at 31 March 1997 has been prepared for capital charging purposes, on the basis of ongoing operational use, in readiness for the move to resource accounting. The valuation was made on a depreciated replacement cost basis to reflect the building's specialist use, in accordance with HM Treasury's publication "Capital Charging for Property—Accounting Guidance". This requires that, in accordance with the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors' Appraisal and Valuation Manual, valuations are based on the estimate of the existing use value of the land and an estimate of the gross replacement cost of the buildings, from which deductions are made to allow for age, condition and functional obsolescence.

There are a number of reasons why a difference can be expected between the estimate of value based on the depreciated replacement cost basis and the realised building cost. The depreciated replacement cost approach assumes that the design is fixed at the beginning of the contract and is built without variation or delay, for example as a result of inclement weather, construction difficulties or design changes in what is a sophisticated and complex building. This impacts on the building costs, the fees and the various overhead items incorporated in the valuation. In accordance with normal practice, VAT has been included with all the cost items but has been reduced in proportion to the extent to which the Central Science Laboratory is able to recover VAT in the services provided to clients. The property valuation also specifically excluded all equipment not of a fixed nature. Off site service provision including electricity, water and drainage is not included in the cost but was reflected indirectly in the land value.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 255, if he will make a statement on the distinction between fee earning and other scientists. [35545]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The majority of Central Science Laboratory staff are fee-earning in that they work on funded scientific contracts. A number of other scientists are employed in management roles and support functions.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the projected non-scientific pay bill in the year 1997–98 at the Central Science Laboratory site at Sand Hutton, York. [35406]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 25 February 1998]: The projected non-scientific pay bill for the Central Science Laboratory, Sand Hutton in 1997–198 is £2.2 million.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much income is projected to be received by the Central Science Laboratory in the 1997–98 financial year from research contracts based primarily at Colney Lane, Norwich from (i) his Department, (ii) other public sector agencies and (iii) private companies. [35405]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: Projected income for 1997–98 from research contracts primarily based at Colney Lane, Norwich is as follows:

	£ million
MAFF	5.0
Other public agencies	0.5
Private sector	0.9
Total	6.4

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons overheads per employee in the Central Science Laboratory average £7,248 at Colney Lane, Norwich, and £17,378 at Sand Hutton, York. [35402]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The figures that my hon. Friend has quoted appear to have been based on the number of scientists at each of the Central Science Laboratory sites. Equivalent figures based on the total number of employees at each site would be £5,766 and £12,723.

The Sand Hutton site has a high proportion of specialist R&D facilities and this contributes to the higher cost per employee.

Sausage Labelling

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce labelling of pork sausages which contain beef in relation to BSE risks. [35650]

Mr. Rooker: No. Warning statements of this nature are unjustified on any food containing beef, including pork sausages. Labelling rules already require ingredients lists on pork sausages which also contain other meats to declare the presence of each type of meat separately. I consider these rules sufficient to enable consumers to make their own decisions about whether or not they buy particular products.

Poultry

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the risk of food poisoning contracted from New York dressed poultry. [35382]

Mr. Rooker: The Government believe that the evisceration of New York dressed poultry, whether in the domestic kitchen or in a butcher's shop, could lead to cross contamination of other foods by any foodborne pathogens present, via contamination of the hands of the person carrying out the evisceration and the implements and surfaces used.

This view is based on scientific evidence and advice, including that of the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food, in its 1996 Report on Poultry Meat; and a paper from Professor Mead and Dr. Scott of the Royal Veterinary College, published in British Poultry Science, 1997, Vol. 38, pages 195 to 198, entitled, "Spread of an enteric 'marker' organism during evisceration of New York dressed poultry in a simulated kitchen environment".

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 10 March 1998 to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin), Official Report, columns 164–66, by what date he has requested the Expert Group under Professor Bourne's chairmanship to provide advice on the timing and conduct of the culling experiment recommended in the Krebs report. [35647]

Mr. Rooker: I hope to receive advice on the design of the culling trial by June.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of recent evidence indicating the spread of TB related to badgers to new areas. [35648]

Mr. Rooker: We continue to monitor the situation in all areas of the country. The Krebs report recommended a package of measures to address the issue of TB in cattle and badgers. We will make a further announcement when we have considered submissions made during consultation.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the situation facing Cheshire farmers in respect of the spread of bovine tuberculosis following the publication of the Krebs report on Bovine Tuberculosis in Cattle and Badgers. [35518]

Mr. Rooker: In Cheshire there was one confirmed breakdown in 1994 and one in 1995. There were no confirmed breakdowns in 1996 or 1997, but there has been one so far in 1998. The breakdowns appear to be sporadic and not confined to any particular area of the county. There has been no evidence of badger involvement. I can assure the hon. Member that we are continuing to monitor the situation.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to protect the livelihoods of farmers affected by outbreaks of bovine tuberculosis on their land during the period before an effective vaccine has been developed and following the recommendations contained in the Krebs report; and if he will make a statement. [35517]

Mr. Rooker: We will continue to test cattle for bovine tuberculosis at intervals of four years, or more frequently where there is perceived to be an increased risk of disease. Regular testing, plus the removal to slaughter of reactor cattle (for which farmers receive compensation) ensure that disease is generally caught at an early stage. Restrictions imposed on the movement of cattle from herds where disease is suspected safeguards against the spread of disease to other herds. We are considering the implementation of the Krebs recommendations which should provide a sound basis for future policy concerning badgers and bovine TB. We will make an announcement when we have considered submissions made during the consultation exercise.

SCOTLAND

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what impact the Multilateral Agreement on Investment would have on the powers of the Scottish Parliament to deal with issues relating to land ownership, absentee landlords and second home ownership. [34546]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The key principle of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment is that signatories would not generally discriminate on the basis of the ownership of an investment. Under proposals in the Scotland Bill currently before Parliament changes in the law relating to land ownership in Scotland will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament, subject to any international obligations which might apply.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Parliament will have the power to create exemptions on matters covered by the Multilateral Agreement on Investment. [35143]

Mr. Wilson: The Multilateral Agreement would be an addition to the range of international obligations already undertaken by the UK through the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and other agreements affecting trade and investment. These remain reserved and will continue to be dealt with by the UK Government. The Scotland Bill includes appropriate machinery, in Clause 54 and elsewhere, to ensure that Scottish legislation and practice observes these obligations in so far as they impact on devolved areas.

Cashmere Goat Farming

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to implement the recommendation contained in the Third report of the Scottish Affairs Committee of Session 1995–96 (HC 629) to extend to cashmere goat farming the same support as is given to sheep farming. [35142]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend has no plans to extend Sheep Annual Premium payments or Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances to cashmere goats.

Higher Still Programme

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet representatives of teachers of English to discuss the assessment procedure proposed for Higher Still English. [35190]

Mr. Wilson: I meet regularly with representatives of teacher associations to discuss Higher Still and other issues.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received expressing concern about the content and assessment procedures proposed for Higher Still English; and what response he has made to them. [35192]

Mr. Wilson: I have received a number of representations from teachers about the content and assessment procedures proposed for Higher Still English and Communication.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to him on 6 March 1998, Official Report, columns 777–78, for my response to these representations.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that the methods of assessment proposed for Higher Still will maintain the educational standards currently expected of fifth and sixth year secondary pupils. [35214]

Mr. Wilson: Higher Still is designed to raise standards of achievement in schools and colleges, leading to more passes and better grades. This will be achieved without compromise on standards of assessment.

The benchmark for the new Higher is the existing Higher Grade. I commissioned research on the benchmarking of standards from the Scottish Qualifications Authority. This has confirmed that Higher Still requirements are appropriately set against the existing Higher Grade.

In order to ensure that staff are familiar with the new assessment system, staff development has been offered to principal teachers and subject leaders. A National Assessment Bank containing nationally validated assessment instruments for use in schools and colleges is being developed. These will help to ensure that internal assessment is consistent with national standards. The Scottish Qualifications Authority is currently working on external assessment exemplars drawing heavily on the existing Higher Grade and CSYS for new qualifications at Higher and Advanced Higher levels.

Quality assurance of both the internal and external elements of Higher Still is a function of the Scottish Qualifications Authority. The Scottish Qualifications Authority will operate a variety of techniques to maintain standards involving, for instance, the benchmarking of external assessment to ensure the maintenance of standards and the moderation of internal assessment in school and colleges. Research carried out by the Scottish Council for Research in Education has shown that the Authority's predecessor (the Scottish Examination Board) was successful in maintaining assessment standards through a period of change in the qualifications structure. I am confident that the Authority will be able to capitalise on this experience and be equally successful.

Residential Colleges (Arts and Crafts)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will assess the benefits of providing financial start-up assistance to a residential college for arts and crafts. [35140]

Mr. Wilson: A wide range of arts and craft provision is already available both in schools and in further education colleges. I am not aware of any expression of need for such residential provision.

Head Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce qualifications for head teachers. [35504]

Mr. Wilson: Raising standards in schools means making teachers more effective. That means training and development for head teachers and classroom teachers alike. For aspiring head teachers we plan to introduce a new qualification, soundly based on practical experience in schools, which will help them acquire the skills, knowledge and understanding required for the job. Development of this new qualification is proceeding and I look forward to its introduction next year.

Students

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what previous qualifications were held by students entering a first degree course at a Scottish university in its second or third year in each of the past five years, indicating in each case the number holding the qualifications. [35503]

Mr. Wilson: Information on the number of new entrants to a second or third year of programme of a first degree course at a Scottish higher education institution for 1994–95 to 1996–97 by known highest entry qualification is given below. Information on previous qualifications for students entering a first degree course is not available for the years prior to 1994–95.

New entrants into 2nd & 3rd year of programme, at a Scottish higher education institution, of a first degree course by year and highest entry qualification

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
GCE A level, SCE highers and equivalent	1,981	938	1,428
ACCESS courses	100	6	13
Other UK	101	106	60
Overseas qualification	582	605	654
No formal qualification/not known	856	349	950
Total	3,620	2,004	3,105

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students started first degree courses in Scottish universities each year for the past 10 years; how many started their course in its second year; and how many of each group gained (a) an honours degree, (b) an ordinary degree, (c) dropped out of the course and (d) are still on their course. [35502]

Mr. Wilson: The statistical information held by The Scottish Office on higher education students does not permit the tracking of entrants to their results. It is therefore not possible to produce a table linking the numbers of students starting, and students starting in the second year, with course outcomes.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps have been taken to reduce the delays in the processing of student award applications by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland. [35902]

Mr. Wilson: A Review has been initiated to examine the lessons to be learned from the problems which were experienced during academic year 1997–98; to consider whether any changes in existing arrangements can be identified to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of dealing with applications and handling inquiries; to consider the implications of changes in student support arrangements; and to identify the resource implications of any improvements identified. A Steering Committee, including representatives from the private sector with experience of high volume processing, has been established to oversee the work of the Review. I expect the Committee to report its conclusion to me in April.

Housing (Improvements)

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the investment required to bring all housing in Scotland to an acceptable standard in terms of (a) eliminating dampness and condensation, (b) reaching a score of seven in the energy efficiency scale and (c) effecting urgent repairs. [35841]

Mr. Macdonald: I would refer the hon. Member to the report of the 1996 Scottish House Condition Survey, a copy of which is in the Library. The survey estimated that the cost of carrying out all urgent repairs was £530 million. It did not provide any estimate of the cost of eliminating dampness and condensation or of reaching a score of seven in the energy efficiency scale.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investment from public funds has been made in repairs and improvements to houses in Scotland in each of the past 10 years broken down to show funding provided to (a) council houses, (b) Scottish Homes and housing association houses and (c) private houses. [35840]

Mr. Macdonald: The information requested is set out in the table.

Public expenditure on repairs and improvements

£ million

	Council houses	Scottish homes and housing association houses	Private houses
1987–88	344.300	n/a	138.000
1988–89	352.081	n/a	148.000
1989–90	387.997	185.034	146.000
1990–91	374.129	169.628	121.000
1991–92	350.675	165.802	100.000
1992–93	339.399	155.805	112.000
1993–94	360.622	147.900	106.000
1994–95	364.295	132.130	114.000
1995–96	363.550	112.260	106.000
1996–97	269.751	90.525	74.000

Notes:

1. The figures for Council houses, Scottish Homes and housing association houses are for capital and revenue expenditure for the provision of repairs and improvements to housing stock. The figures for private sector houses are for improvement and repair grants obtained by proprietors from local authorities. The sources for columns 1 and 3 are local authorities and for column 2 is Scottish homes.
2. n/a denotes information not readily available for that year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what figure was allowed in (a) percentage and (b) cash terms, for wage rises in GAE, AEF and capping limits to Scottish councils in 1998–99 and in each of the last 10 years; and what the actual increases were in respect of the wage levels for (i) teachers and (ii) other staff. [35843]

Mr. Macdonald: Pay awards to local authority staff in Scotland are a matter for councils themselves, and no central record of actual pay increases is kept. Whether any allowance was made for wage rises in the local authority settlement by the previous Administration is not a matter for me: actual levels of GAE, AEF and spending for the previous 10 years are given in the table. In setting Government support for council spending and in capping levels for 1998–99, no assumption was made about the level of pay rises in local authorities; the Government's public sector pay policy is that pay increases must be affordable within existing resources.

[1] Provisional Outturn
[2] Budget Estimate

Notes:

1. Grant Aided Expenditure (GAE) does not include expenditure on loan and leasing charges.
2. Prior to 1991 Grant Aided Expenditure (GAE) was known as Assessments of Relative Need.
3. Prior to 1991–92 Aggregate External Finance (AEF) was known as Aggregate Exchequer Grant.
4. Aggregate Exchequer Grant consisted of Rate Support Grant and Specific Grants only. The Non-Domestic Rate Income (NDRI) figures have therefore been added to these years for comparison purposes.
5. The above AEF figures are as announced and do not include any subsequent redeterminations.
6. Total net expenditure figures are total non-housing net current expenditure (including loan and leasing charges). For the years 1988–89 to 1995–96 the figures are final outturns, for 1996–97 the figure is a provisional outturn and for 1997–98 it is a budget estimate.
7. No adjustments have been made for changes in local authority responsibility over the period in question.
8. The 1997–98 AEF and expenditure figures include £105.6 million which was paid to local authorities as a special grant (outside AEF) in respect of Strathclyde Passenger Transport. £5.236 million has also been included in the 1998–99 AEF figure for the same purpose.

Schools

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the research study into the management of change in small schools to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [35695]

Mr. Wilson: The research exercise is now complete and the final report is being drafted. The Scottish Office will publish an "Interchange" (summary of research) as soon as possible after the report has been submitted.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the primary schools earmarked for closure in each education authority, the number of pupils currently in attendance in each and the distance from the nearest school. [35704]

Mr. Wilson: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to assist schools in poorer areas to raise matching funds so as to be able to take advantage of lottery funding. [34775]

Mr. Galbraith: It is open to schools which are preparing applications for funding from the National Lottery, and to education authorities advising them, to discuss with the relevant distributing body such matters as partnership funding.

Scotland Bill (Environmental Appraisal)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what environmental appraisal of the Scotland Bill has been produced; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [35642]

Mr. McLeish: The Scottish Parliament will have significant legislative powers over many aspects of the environment, including environmental protection, matters relating to air, land and water pollution, and the functions of the Scottish Environment Protection Agency. It will be open to the Parliament to require environmental appraisal of Acts of the Scottish Parliament.

Departmental Salaries and Running Costs

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the salary and running costs of his core Department and the percentage of these costs which are incurred in (a) Scotland and (b) London. [36125]

Mr. Dewar: The running costs budget for the Scottish Office core for 1997–98 is £136.1 million, of which £88.5 million is to cover salary costs. The percentage of these costs which are incurred in Scotland are: 99.63 per cent. for running costs and 99.65 per cent. for pay. The percentages incurred in London are: 0.37 per cent. for running costs and 0.35 per cent. for pay. The figures for London comprise the running costs of staff permanently based in Dover House and of Dover House itself.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the (a) location of and (b) public assistance given to urban development corporations in Scotland since their establishment. [36097]

Mr. Macdonald: There are no urban development corporations in Scotland.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parole

Mr. Conker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is responsible for decisions on the non-disclosure of information in parole dossiers. [36572]

Ms Quin: The responsibility for decisions on the non-disclosure of information contained in parole dossiers presently rests with the Parole Board Chairman.

From 1 May 1998 I intend to move responsibility for such decisions to prison governors, who already have responsibility for taking such decisions in applications for temporary release.

From 1 May 1998, under new procedures which are designed to streamline and speed up the parole process, a fuller dossier will be submitted to the Parole Board at a later stage by the prison.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the Metropolitan Police Policing Plan. [36071]

Mr. Straw: Following consultation with the Chairman of the Metropolitan Police Committee and the Commissioner, the Metropolitan Police Policing Plan 1998–99 will be published tomorrow morning. I will place a copy of the report in the Library and will be sending copies to all hon. Members whose constituencies are within the Metropolitan Police District tomorrow.

Young Offenders

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15-year-olds have been convicted under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 in each of the last five years; and of that number, how many who were not previously resident in secure units were placed by him in young offenders' institutions during the same period. [35608]

Mr. Michael: Information held centrally on the Court Proceedings database for the years 1992–1996 (latest available) is given in table A.

Information on the number of 15 year olds who were previously resident in secure units is not collected centrally. The available information relates to the number of 15 year olds received into prison service establishments in England and Wales under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 and is given in table B.

Table A: Number of 15 year olds sentenced under section 53 of the Children and Young persons Act 1933, 1992–1996

Note:

Information for 1992–1996 (and for other custody types, by age) is published in successive volumes of "Prison statistics, England and Wales" (table 3.9 of the 1993 edition and table 3.10 of the 1994–96 editions), copies of which are in the Library.

Focus Groups

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department plans to spend on focus groups. [34977]

Mr. Straw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that the Under-Secretary my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton East (Mr. Howarth) gave to the hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) on 16 March 1998, Official Report, column 507.

My Department is not planning any further expenditure on focus groups at present.

Police Authorities

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what interests members of police authorities are required to register; and what plans he has to change the requirements. [34941]

Mr. Michael: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Extraditions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people Britain has extradited, and to which countries, in each of the last five years. [35872]

Mr. Michael: The number of extraditions which have taken place in each of the last five years is as follows:

1993: 27

1994: 35

1995: 31

1996: 35

1997: 43.

Information is not available for the full period as to which countries were involved. The table shows to which countries extraditions have taken place since 15 May 1995.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries with which Britain has an extradition treaty. [35871]

Mr. Michael: Those countries with which the United Kingdom has extradition arrangements are listed below. The Extradition Act 1989 also enables special extradition arrangements to be made with foreign states with which the United Kingdom has no extradition arrangements. In addition, there are a number of international conventions which allow for the extradition of fugitives between ratifying states for certain serious offences, even in the absence of an extradition arrangement.

Countries with bilateral extradition treaties with the United Kingdom (with date of entry into force)

1. Albania: 1927
2. Argentina: 1894,1980

TREASURY

Lloyd's of London

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 454, on Lloyd's of London, what account he took of the impact on public confidence of the legal proceedings currently under-way in the United States of America in reaching his decision. [36140]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 24 March 1998]: In reaching a view on the future regulatory arrangements for Lloyd's, a range of relevant factors was taken into account.

Equitas

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he intends to take to provide information to the American policyholders on the solvency of Equitas following publicity arising from legal proceedings over Lloyd's of London currently in progress in the United States of America. [36141]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Financial information provided by UK authorised insurance companies including Equitas, pursuant to requirements under the Companies Acts and the Insurance Companies Act 1982, is available for public inspection at Companies House.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions for inflation and asset growth he used in calculating the revenue effects of his Budget proposals for capital gains tax reform. [36040]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The assumptions for inflation and asset price growth used in calculating the revenue effects of the Budget proposals for Capital Gains Tax reform are consistent with the economic assumptions referred to on pages 108 and 109 of the march 1998 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" (FSBR, HC620 published on 17 March 1998). Equity prices are assumed to grow at the same rate as gross domestic product (GDP) at current market prices—"money GDP".

Smuggling

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the recent report on alcohol and tobacco smuggling prepared by Customs and Excise. [36076]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The Government will be taking action to clamp down on smuggling and fraud and, in view of the possible public spending implications, will announce their proposals for doing this as part of the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review. Nothing will be published before then.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish the recent Customs and Excise Review of measures to combat the smuggling of beer. [35721]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government will be taking action to clamp down on smuggling and fraud and, in view of the possible public spending implications, will announce their Proposals for doing this as part of the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Insurance Premium Tax

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received since 1 January on extending the application of the higher rate IPT for travel insurance to the motor vehicle and electrical retail sectors; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of equalising treatment of the travel, motor vehicle and electrical retail sectors. [36114]

Dawn Primarolo: Treasury Ministers have received no such representations.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend his proposal on higher rate IPT for travel insurance to the motor vehicle and electrical retail sectors. [36113]

Dawn Primarolo: No.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the date of the meetings of the standing committee chaired by the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe on United Kingdom preparedness for the introduction of the euro in the euro countries; if he will list the members of the committee and the interests which they have declared; and if he will place the minutes of the meetings in the Library. [35572]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The Standing Committee on preparations for EMU has met once, on 27 January. The meeting was chaired by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Non-ministerial members of the Committee are the Governor of the Bank of England, the Chairman of the Financial Services Authority, the Head of the Home Civil Service, the President of the Confederation of British Industry, the President of the British Chambers of Commerce, the President of the British Bankers' Association and the General Secretary of the Trades Union Congress. They all attended in their capacity as representatives of these organisations. A copy of the minutes of the meeting has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The next meeting is planned to take place in May: no date has been set.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the priority accorded to compliance with the Maastricht fiscal convergence criteria in determining his Department's (a) fiscal and (b) economic policies. [35207]

Mrs. Liddell: Economic stability based on low inflation and sound public finances is an essential precondition for high levels of growth and employment The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published on 17 March 1998 shows that figures for the fiscal deficit and government debt as a ratio of GDP are already well below the 3 per cent. and 60 per cent. reference values set out in the Maastricht Treaty and are projected to remain below these levels.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy to observe the requirements of the EMU stability pact in the period before joining EMU. [35213]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government's commitments with respect to the Stability and Growth Pact are set out in Council Regulations (EC) 1466/97 and 1467/97. The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published on 17 March 1998 shows fiscal projections which are consistent with the terms of the European Union Stability and Growth Pact.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the extent to which the United Kingdom is in compliance with each of the Maastricht fiscal convergence criteria. [35206]

Mrs. Liddell: The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published on 17 March showed that in 1997 the UK's general government financial deficit on a Maastricht basis was 1¾ per cent. of GDP and the general government gross debt on a Maastricht basis was 53½ per cent. of GDP. Both of these figures are well below the 3 per cent. and 60 per cent. reference values set out in Protocol No. 5 to the Maastricht Treaty.

Income Tax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) of 9 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1–4, on income tax, if he will provide equivalent information for Scotland; and if he will list the number and percentage of taxpayers paying income tax at the lower rate in England, Wales and Scotland. [35598]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 1998]: Table 1 shows estimates of the number and percentage of basic and higher rate taxpayers by unitary authority in Scotland in 1995–96, the latest year for which there is information. Table 2 shows estimates of the number and percentage of taxpayers paying income tax at the lower rate in England, Wales and Scotland in 1995–96.

[1] All taxpayers includes people liable to tax at the lower rate as well as the basic and higher rate

[2] Sample size too low to make reasonable estimate

Table 2: Number and percentage of lower rate taxpayers for England, Wales and Scotland

	Number of lower rate taxpayers (thousands)	Percentage of all taxpayers
England	4,780	22.0
Wales	297	25.3
Scotland	493	22.0

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be raised in a year by taxing (a) at the standard rate and (b) at the higher rate all households with (i) a total income in excess of £40,000 and (ii) one earner with an income in excess of £40,000. [35527]

Dawn Primarolo: Information is given for 1998–99 in the table.

£ million

	Income	Cost(-)/yield(+) in a full year
(i)	Total income[1] of single person or couple exceeds £40,000 p.a.
	—All taxable income[2] taxed at flat rate of 23 per cent. (basic rate)	–7,700
	—All taxable income[2] taxed at flat rate of 40 per cent. (higher rate)	+20,000
(ii)	Total income[1] of single person or at least one member of couple exceeds £40,000 p.a.
	—All taxable income[2] taxed at flat rate of 23 per cent. (basic rate)	–7,700
	—All taxable income[2] taxed at flat rate of 40 per cent. (higher rate)	+8,800

[1] Total income subject to tax, including earnings from employment, self-employed income, investment income and taxable social security benefits.

[2] Income subject to tax less tax allowances and reliefs which are available at the marginal rate.

This answer assumes that the intention is to apply a flat rate of tax at 23 or 40 per cent. to taxable income in the specified circumstances. The personal allowance and married couple's allowance have been given where appropriate.

Code for Fiscal Stability

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) for what reasons the principles of fiscal management set out in the Code for Fiscal Stability do not refer to the need to take account of environmental impact; [35333]

(2) for what reasons environmental impact is not specified in the Code for Fiscal Stability as part of the minimum information required to be included in economic and fiscal strategy reports. [35332]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The Code for Fiscal Stability is primarily designed to improve the conduct of macroeconomic fiscal policy by specifying the principles that shall guide the formulation and implementation of fiscal policy, and by strengthening the reporting requirements incumbent on the Government.

Information on the environmental impact of Budget measures is published in other sources, and was included within the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" on 17 March.

PEPs and TESSAs

Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research his Department has evaluated in respect of the average gross salary of those who have taken out (a) PEPs and (b) TESSAs in each year since their introduction. [35096]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The distribution by income of the take-up of PEPs and TESSAs is not available from Inland Revenue records. However information on take-up by household income based on data from household surveys was published in November 1997 by the Institute for Fiscal Studies in "Commentary 66—Taxing Household Saving: What role for the new individual savings accounts?". The proportion of holders in the various income tax bands has also been considered in a survey conducted by NOP.

Generally the proportion of those holding PEPs and TESSAs increases with household income. The two key objectives of the Budget proposals for a new savings account are to develop and extend the savings habit and to ensure that tax relief on savings is fairly distributed.

Suicides

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons committed suicide by taking an overdose of (a) paracetamol since 1996 and (b) other non-prescription drugs in each year since 1992. [35208]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 25 March 1998:

As the Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on suicides.

The available information is given in the attached table.

It is not possible to identify deaths certified as due in part or whole to other non-prescription drugs, as there is no definitive list.

For suicides the classification suicides has been used and for deaths the classification injury and poisoning undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted has been used. This corresponds to codes E950-E959, and E980-E989 (excluding E988.8), of the International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision (ICD9).

Deaths with a mention of paracetamol certified as (a) suicide and (b) undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted, England and Wales occurrences 1996 and 1997 [4]

Year	Suicide		Deaths[1]
	Paracetamol[2]	Paracetamol[3]	Paracetamol[2]	Paracetamol[3]
1996	54(6)	160(16)	54(3)	94(19)
1997	66(5)	124(28)	64(5)	113(28)

[1] Deaths undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted
[2] Paracetamol without mention of other drugs
[3] Paracetamol with mention of other drugs
[4] 1997 data are provisional

Note:
The figures in brackets are those deaths where there was a mention of alcohol. These figures are included in the non-bracketed figures.)

Excise Duty

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the excise duty receipts for 1998–99 were projected to be in the July 1997 budget statement for (a) fuel, (b) alcohol and (c) tobacco; and what they are now projected to be. [36074]

Dawn Primarolo: The forecast excise receipts for 1998–99 are as follows:

£ billion

	July 1997 forecast	March 1998 forecast
Fuel duties	20.6	21.5
Alcohol duties	6.1	6.0
Tobacco duties	9.0	8.9

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield in 1996–97 and what is the latest estimate of yield in 1997–98 from (a) petrol duty, (b) derv duty, (c) vehicle excise duty, (d) VAT on petrol and derv sales and (e) VAT on vehicle sales. [35966]

Dawn Primarolo:

£ billion

	Yield 1996–97	Estimated yield 1997–98
(a) petrol duty	10.9	11.9
(b) derv duty	6.1	7.0
(c) vehicle excise duty	4.2	4.6
(d) VAT on petrol and derv sales	1.9	2.0
(e) VAT on vehicle sales	4.5	5

(b) Breakdown of figures in table B9 of March 1998 Financial Statement and Budget Report.
(c) Table B9 of March 1998 Financial Statement and Budget Report.
(d) Estimate based on Office for National Statistics' figures for consumers' expenditure on petrol and diesel.
(e) Estimate based on Office for National Statistics' figures for consumers' expenditure on motor vehicles plus estimates for VAT blocked on vehicles bought by businesses.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue would have been forgone since 1992 from duty in petrol and diesel fuel excise duties if those duties had been increased in line with the retail price index. [35513]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise's estimate of the revenues that would have been forgone since 1992 had petrol and diesel fuel excise duties been increased in line with the retail price index is shown in the table.

£ billion

Financial year	Revenues forgone
1992–93	0.2
1993–94	1.4
1994–95	2.7
1995–96	3.9
1996–97	5.0

The estimates include VAT and take account of expected changes in the pattern of consumers' expenditure as a result of the lower duty increases.

Civil Servants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the nations and regions of the United Kingdom and for the UK as a whole in (a) 1970, (b) 1979, (c) 1989 and (d) the last available two years, the amount paid out in (i) Civil Service salaries, (ii) all other running costs of the Civil Service and (iii) the total of (a) and (b) expressed in current prices. [34870]

Mr. Darling: The running costs and paybill of the civil service are shown in the table.

£ billion

	1989–90	1995–96	1996–97
Civil Service running costs (cash)[1]	9.707	14.345	14.331
(constant prices)[2]	13.188	15.164	14.718
Civil Service paybill (cash)[3]	9.0	11.0	10.9
(constant prices)[2]	12.2	11.6	11.2

[1] This covers the gross expenditure on civil departments' running cost net of VAT on contracted out services. It does not include the administrative expenditure of the Ministry of Defence which falls outside the central government running costs regime. Wholly consistent running costs figures are only available from 1992–93.
[2] Uses the adjusted GDP deflator at market prices to convert to constant (1997–98) prices.
[3] This covers the pay costs, national insurance and superannuation charges of civil servants and others (including casual staff) covered by running costs, and the civil servants employed by the Ministry of Defence.

Civil Service running costs were not measured separately in this way until 1985. Figures relating to prior years are therefore unavailable.

Running costs and Civil Service paybill figures for each of the nations and regions of the UK are not collected.

Tax Harmonisation

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government will place a general discussion on VAT and tax harmonisation on the agenda of the Council of Ministers during their presidency of the EU. [35624]

Dawn Primarolo: Discussions on tax matters at ECOFIN are ordinarily based on specific proposals presented by the European Commission. I have no plans to initiate any more general discussion of tax issues during the remainder of the UK Presidency.

Charity Taxation

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account the Government will take of the views of the charitable sector expressed through the review of charities' taxation in future discussions with other EC states on VAT social reliefs; and if he will make a statement. [35621]

Dawn Primarolo: One of the aims of the Review of Charities' Taxation is to inform the Government's negotiating position in any future EC discussions of VAT social reliefs. The contributions to the first phase of the review are currently being analysed and a consultation document will be issued later this Spring. A consultation process will follow during 1998. It is too early to speculate on the outcome of the review.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reform the taxation of charities to take account of the representations of the Church of England in respect of VAT on repairs. [35744]

Dawn Primarolo: European law does not allow any VAT relief for church repairs.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many submissions to his review of charity taxation were received by 1 December 1997. [35622]

Dawn Primarolo: There were over 3,000 submissions to the first phase of the Review of Charities' taxation.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the financial effect on UK charities of the phased withdrawal of tax credits on dividends over a five year period beginning in 1999. [35623]

Dawn Primarolo: What charities might lose will depend on the extent of their UK equity holdings in the years from 1999–2000, the level of dividend payments, and on assumptions about company performance and dividends had my right hon. Friend not undertaken his corporation tax reforms, including significant cuts in companies' tax burdens. Charities will enjoy generous compensation costing up to £1 billion, by reference to their dividend income for 1999–2000 to 2003–2004.

Church Schools

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will assess the benefits of bringing the VAT treatment of Church schools into line with that of those run by local education authorities; and if he will make a statement. [35620]

Dawn Primarolo: The VAT treatment for local education authorities was established to prevent VAT from falling as a burden on local taxation. Church schools are independent bodies and it is therefore not appropriate to extend the same treatment to them.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what figure for the national minimum wage was assumed in the preparation of the Budget. [35394]

Mrs. Liddell: None.

The Government are committed to setting the national minimum wage at a sensible level once they have the advice of the Low Pay Commission, taking into account the effects on employment, inflation and the public finances.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 26 March 1998

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Ethical Investments

Mr. Flynn: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what guidance the Church Commissioners give to cathedrals on ethical investments. [36252]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Church Commissioners' ethical investment policy is developed in consultation with the Ethical Investment Working Group which includes all of the Church of England's central investing bodies. Information about the Commissioners' ethical investment policy, including an annually updated list of the Commissioners' larger equity investments, is widely disseminated.

The Commissioners do not take investment decisions or make ethical investment policy for other bodies in the Church; this is a matter for the trustees of their own funds. Cathedrals are required to make investment decisions on advice from the Commissioners. The making of ethical investment policy is also a matter for trustees, but the Commissioners explain the rationale and working of their ethical investment policy to other Church bodies, including cathedrals, when approached.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Travelcards

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to promote the use of travelcards for public transport. [35523]

Dr. Strang: Greater use of travelcards is being considered in the context of developing an integrated transport policy.

Eurostar

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the projections of passenger numbers for Eurostar in the years 1998 to 2005. [35392]

Dr. Strang: There is no single, definitive set of traffic forecasts. A number of forecasts have been produced, including those commissioned by LCR, who own Eurostar (UK) Ltd.

Kyoto Protocol

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 4 March 1998, Official Report, column 648, on the Kyoto Protocol, if he will list his objectives in respect of each of the outstanding issues. [35616]

Mr. Meacher: Consistent rules, modalities and guidelines for the operation of each of the flexible mechanisms of emissions trading, joint implementation and the clean development mechanism must be put in place at the earliest opportunity. They should ensure that the mechanisms provide real, cost effective and verifiable environmental benefits and do not create loopholes that undermine the objectives of the Protocol.

It is also a priority for the UK and its EU partners to continue the dialogue with developing countries at the 4th Conference of the Parties and beyond about how to take forward the issue of increasing participation in global efforts to combat climate change.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how the success of RDAs will be (a) evaluated and (b) monitored (i) in general, (ii) with reference to rural areas and (iii) with reference to the environment; and who will be responsible for evaluating and monitoring the programmes and strategies of RDAs; [35915]

(2) if he will make it his policy to encourage RDAs to create strategies which relate specifically to rural areas. [35914]

Mr. Caborn: We are currently considering what guidance to give to Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) about the preparation of their strategies. We are also considering what arrangements need to be put in place to monitor the work of RDAs.

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the risks posed to food safety by the use of treated sewage sludge on agricultural land; [36061]

(2) what progress is being made towards the target of 100 per cent. of sewage sludge being treated by 2002; [36059]

(3) what changes he is considering to the 1996 Code of Practice for the Agricultural use of Sewage Sludge; [36060]

(4) if he will take measures to encourage the disposal of treated sewage sludge on agricultural land. [36062]

Angela Eagle: The Government consider that the controlled use of sewage sludge on agricultural land is the best environmental option for most sludges—particularly where there is ready access to suitable land. Government measures to encourage this use, and to maintain the confidence of farmers and their customers in it, include a review of the adequacy of the current controls in The Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989 and the associated Code of Practice. This review, which contains an assessment of the controls to protect food safety, taking into account the latest scientific evidence, will be scrutinised by independent experts and published in the next few months. Decisions on proposed changes to the 1989 Regulations or the Code of Practice, including any targets on treatment requirements, will be based on the results of the review and will take into account the recent recommendations of the Environment Sub-Committee of the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the economic impact of the EC Groundwater Regulations on farmers in the tenth decile rank of income who use sheep dip. [36050]

Angela Eagle: The Government are currently consulting on proposed regulations to improve the transposition of the EC Groundwater Directive. Their potential impact on all economic sectors, including sheep farming, is being addressed as part of the consultation process, and a compliance cost assessment of the proposals will be published when the Regulations are laid before Parliament.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the proportion of registered sheep dips in England which have a direct drain into watercourses. [36049]

Angela Eagle: This information is not held centrally. However, the Government issued a consultation paper in January on proposed regulations to improve the transposition of the EC Groundwater Directive (a copy of which is in the Library of the House). These would provide for enhanced controls over activities such as sheep dipping and the disposal of spent sheep dip. As a result of these measures, information on the number and location of sheep dips will become available to the Environment Agency.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to reduce the environmental impact of poorly managed sheep dips. [36051]

Angela Eagle: The proposed regulations to improve the transposition of the EC Groundwater Directive on which the Government are currently consulting, provide for enhanced controls over activities, including sheep dipping, or the disposal of waste, including spent sheep dip, which pose a threat to groundwater.

Clear advice on what farmers must do to avoid pollution is already contained in the leaflet 'Sheep Dipping', issued jointly by the Health and Safety Executive, Veterinary Medicines Directorate, Environment Agency and SEPA. A revised version of the leaflet was launched on 12 March.

Fuel and Vehicle Excise Duties

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the yield in 1996–97 and what is the latest estimate of yield in 1997–98 from (a) fuel duty and (b) vehicle excise duty broken down by (i) cars, light goods vehicles and taxis, (ii) motorcycles, (iii) buses and coaches, (iv) goods vehicles over 3.5 GVW and (v) other vehicles. [35967]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The revenue yield in 1996–97 is as follows:

Revenue yield 1996–97	£ million
Fuel duty	17,174
Vehicle excise duty	4,252
of which:
Cars, light goods and taxis	3,604
Motorcycles	27
Public service buses and coaches	23
Goods over 3.5 tonnes gross weight	552
Others	46

Sources:
HM Customs and Excise: Annual report 1996–97
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency: Motor tax account 1996–97
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency: Financial statistical returns for 1996–97

Projected revenues given in the recent Financial Statement and Budget Report estimate that the yield from fuel duties and vehicle excise duties in financial year 1997–98, will be £19,100 million and £4,600 million respectively.

Ferry Transport

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much of the additional funding for public transport announced in the Budget will be available for ferry travel to and from offshore communities; [36218]

(2) what proportion of the rural transport subsidy announced in the Budget will be available for ferry travel to and from offshore communities. [36219]

Dr. Strang: The Budget included provision for an additional £500 million in total for public transport over the next three years. There is no specific provision for ferry services. £365 million is being made available for London Transport. There is also an additional £50 million a year across the UK for rural public transport. £45 million of this will be used to support additional bus services in rural areas. The rest will be made available for community-based transport schemes. Criteria will be developed to ensure a fair and comparable distribution process, and to make sure the money gets to where it is most needed.

Honorary Advisory Panel on Driving and Diabetes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the members of the Honorary Advisory Panel on Driving and Diabetes, together with their qualifications. [36401]

Dr. Strang: The information requested is as follows:

Dr. Peter J. Watkins, BChir 1961, MB Camb. 1962, MD Camb. 1968, FRCP Lond. 1975 (Member since 1985, Chairman since 1997)

Professor John D. Ward, Bsc Lond. 1958, MB BS Lond. 1961, MD 1971, FRCP Lond. 1976 (Member since 1985)

Dr. John L. Day, MB BS 1963, MD Lond. 1973, FRCP Lond. 1979 (Member since 1985)

Dr. Nina Essex, MB BS Lond. 1965, FRCP Lond. 1985 (Member since 1989)

Dr. Anthony B. Stevens, MB BCh BAO Belf. 1982, MRCP (UK) 1985, MD Belf. 1991, MFOM RCP Lond. 1991, AFOM 1989 (Member since 1997)

All are consultant physicians who specialise in diabetes.

Green Belt (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many dwellings situated in the Green Belt in Hertfordshire he has given planning consent to on appeal since 1 May 1997. [36362]

Mr. Caborn: The provision of information on planning appeals is the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. I have asked the Inspectorate's Chief Executive, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Shepley to Mr. Peter Lilley, dated 26 March 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of dwellings in the Green Belt in Hertfordshire given planning consent on appeal since 1 May 1997.

Twelve appeals involving residential development in the Green Belt have been allowed. However, most were for extensions to an existing dwelling. Two new dwellings have been approved, one at Goffs Oak (which was already classed as ancilliary residential accommodation), and the other at Bower Health (a conversion from a barn).

Access Committee for England

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the level of grant provided to the Access Committee for England in the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [36332]

Mr. Raynsford: Grant payments by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions for the years in question are:

(a) 1996/97: £10,000

(b) 1997/98: £10,000

(c) 1998/99: 0.

The grant payments in 1996/97 and 1997/98 were made as part of an inter-departmental agreement by the previous Government to provide funding to the Access Committee for England for the two years ending 31 March 1998.

Hillingdon Hospital (Incinerator)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the results of his Department's inquiry into the incinerator at Hillingdon Hospital to be published. [36321]

Mr. Caborn: I hope to announce decisions and release the inspectors' report of this inquiry very shortly.

Ecolabelling Board

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if she will list the (a) location of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) staff numbers at the head office of the UK Ecolabelling Board; what percentage of staff are based in (i) London and (ii) Scotland; and what percentage of salary and running costs relate to (1) London and (2) Scotland. [36128]

Angela Eagle: The UK Ecolabelling Board is located in central London. The Board's running costs for 1997/98 are £0.6 million, of which £0.3 million are salary costs. The Board has 14 members, five full-time officers and one part-time officer, all of whom work at the London office. It is not possible to identify the proportion of the Board's staff and running costs that relate to each part of the United Kingdom as its main activities, the negotiation of ecolabelling criteria within the European Community and the promotion of the scheme nationally, relate to the United Kingdom as a whole.

Environment Council

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 23 March. [36939]

Mr. Meacher: I chaired the first Environment Council of the UK Presidency on 23 March 1998. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle), represented the UK.

I am happy to report a very satisfactory outcome with the Council reaching four common positions, agreeing four sets of Conclusions and making good progress on a number of other issues.

The Council agreed common positions on three directives: on landfill, emissions from light vans (part of the Commission's Auto-oil programme) and emissions of volatile organic compounds from certain industrial processes. These had been discussed and significant progress made under preceding Presidencies, but the Council had been unable to agree a common position in the absence of the European Parliament's opinion.

As part of a heavy climate change agenda, the Council reached common position on a revised mechanism for member states to monitor their CO_2 and other greenhouse gas emissions. The Council agreed conclusions on the Community's Strategy on climate change, which assess the outcome of the Kyoto Conference last December and set out the main priorities for work to be done on emissions trading and other matters before the next Conference of Parties in Buenos Aires in November. The Council also agreed conclusions authorising the Community to sign the Kyoto Protocol on Climate Change. On reducing CO_2 emissions from passenger cars, the Council concluded that the recent ACEA offer could form the basis for further negotiation and called on the Commission to take this forward and report to the Council in June.

In discussion on the Recommendation on zoos, there was substantial support for the UK Presidency's compromise proposal for a legally binding directive. We shall now consider the best way forward in light of Member States' views.

Conclusions were agreed on the Community's positions in preparation for the Fourth Meeting of the Conference of Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and for the Sixth session of the Commission of Sustainable Development.

There was also a useful discussion of the Air Quality Daughter Directive which will improve ambient air quality standards for four main pollutants, NO_x, SO_2 lead and particulates. I gave progress reports on the Water Framework Directive and a proposal for a directive reducing the sulphur content of certain liquid fuels.

Over lunch, when the Deputy Prime Minister joined his colleagues, ministers had an informal discussion of climate change and discussed the environmental implications of Community enlargement.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will publish (a) the number of places on each of her Department's non-departmental public bodies, (b) the number of places that are currently unfilled on each non-departmental public body, (c) the total number of members that have resigned since 1 May 1997, (d) the total number that have retired since 1 May 1997, (e) the total number that have not had their contracts renewed since 1 May 1997, (f) the total number that have remained in place since 1 May 1997 and (g) the total number that have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [35278]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The number of places on each of my Department's non-departmental public bodies and the number of places unfilled for public body are shown on the lists.

Since 1 May 1997—61 have resigned; 63 have retired; 47 have not had their appointments renewed; 2,889 have remained in place; and 165 have been appointed.

Look-alike Products

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures her Department is proposing to take to protect brand manufacturers from look-alike products. [35775]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 25 March 1998]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs met representatives of the British Brands Group (BBG) and Anti-Copying in Design (ACID) on 20 January to discuss the concerns they have about look-alike products. We understand the BBG and ACID propose to make further representations to this Department following that meeting. My hon. Friend made it clear at that meeting that we would also need in due course to consider the views of others with an interest in this issue. In particular the Government are concerned to ensure that the interests of the consumer are fully represented and considered.

During the debate on the Competition Bill in another place, Lord Haskel made it clear that the Government believe that the Bill is not an appropriate vehicle to deal with this issue.

Inward Investment

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her letter of 8 December to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, concerning the concordat on inward investment, what are the principles on which the proposed concordat will be founded. [34774]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The underlying principle is co-operation between all parts of the United Kingdom to allow effective negotiations to attract large inward investment projects. The proposed concordat on financial assistance will be an agreement between all parties seeking better co-ordination and co-operation, the sharing of best practice, and transparency.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Levitt: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if volunteer workers who receive board and lodging but no other remuneration for their work will continue to be regarded as volunteers and not employees for purposes of the application of the national minimum wage. [29806]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 16 February 1998]: Yes. The Government introduced a new clause to the National Minimum Wage Bill at Report stage to address this point, after consultation with various voluntary organisations and members of the Standing Committee. The clause ensures that volunteer workers who are employed by a charity, voluntary organisation, associated fund-raising body or a statutory body and who receive genuine and reasonable expenses, subsistence and accommodation but no other remuneration or payment in kind will be outside the scope of the national minimum wage.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Dr. Starkey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the impact of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment on the ability of devolved executives to establish new discriminatory measures (a) to secure desired environmental standards and (b) to control foreign land ownership. [35617]

Mrs. Roche: The MAI will prohibit new measures which discriminate against investors on the basis of nationality unless explicitly provided for; and it will apply to all levels of government.

Departmental Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the quantity of (a) oil, (b) gas and (c) electricity purchased for the heating, lighting and powering of all accommodation occupied by the Department within the United Kingdom in each year since 1989–90; and what was the total cost in real terms for (a) to (c) in each year. [36163]

Mrs. Beckett: The quantities for the last two years are as follows:

	Gas		Oil		Electricity
Year	MWh	£000	MWh	£000	MWh	£000
1996–97	25,238	'309	3,578	78	32,460	1,891
1995–96	29,112	357	2,884	46	41,666	2,316

' Estimate

Quantities for previous years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Trade Union Recognition

Mr. Syms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on Government policy on trade union recognition in the workplace. [34911]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government believe that unions should be recognised where a majority of the relevant workforce vote in a ballot for the union to represent them. We will set out our proposals in a White Paper in the first half of this year.

North Yorkshire Electricity Line

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she will announce her decision on the North Yorkshire electricity line. [36992]

Mr. Battle: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has today brought to a conclusion the long running saga of the North Yorks line. She has granted consent to install a new 400 kV overhead electric line over much of the route between Lackenby and Shipton via Picton. However, consent has been refused for two short sections at Nunthorpe and near Newby. It will now be for the National Grid Company to consider undergrounding those stretches.

The decision announced today is in line with the recommendations of independent Inspectors appointed to consider the conflicting views and competing concerns raised by this development. In reaching her conclusion, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has carefully considered the views expressed by members of the local communities, hon. Members and all the material that has built up on the case. The full reasons for this decision are contained in the letter which has today been sent to NGC confirming the decision, copies of which have been placed in the Library and are also being sent to the local authorities and other interested parties. I cannot here repeat in full the contents of that very long letter but will outline some of the points which will be of particular interest to hon. Members.

In coming to her decision the Secretary of State is satisfied that the technical need for this line has been established. As well as the Inspectors' conclusions, and the opinions of interested parties, she has had regard to the views of the Director General of Electricity Supply on system planning standards and his concern that the current supply system in the North East of England does not meet the required standard and that a long term solution is required.

In reaching her decision the Secretary of State has considered the environmental impact of the proposed line. She recognises that the environment should have a high level of protection and that sufficient regard should be had to environmental effects in reaching her decision. She notes that NGC has reflected concerns expressed at the first inquiry by proposing diversions to the originally proposed route, that in two sections consent for overgrounding is being refused, and that as a result of the decision an existing line from Lackenby to Norton will be removed to the significant environmental benefit, as the Inspectors indicated, of the large number of people living close to that line, some 4,400 houses being within 200 metres of that existing line.

While a number of possible alternative routes for the line were explored during the course of consideration of this development, the Secretary of State notes that these were not without their own difficulties, and she is satisfied that in announcing consent today she has identified an acceptable way forward to meet the identified technical need.

This decision follows a lengthy history of applications first submitted in 1991, the two public inquiries in 1992 and 1995 into the proposed line and possible diversions along its route, other public inquiries and hearings into aspects of the line proposals, and continued representations since the last Inquiry closed in April 1995. All this has produced a fair amount of material which the new Administration has had to consider since coming into office.

As I have said, the full reasons for the Secretary of State's decision are set out in the letter which is being sent to NGC, copies of which I am placing in the Library of the House, along with copies of the Inspectors' report from the 1995 public inquiry. Copies of the Inspectors' report from the 1992 public inquiry are already available in the Library of the House.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many (a) football, (b) cricket, (c) rugby league and (d) rugby union matches the Minister for Sport has attended in his official capacity since 1 May 1997; and where each took place. [34738]

Mr. Chris Smith: Since my hon. Friend's appointment as Sports Minister on 1 May, he has attended in his official capacity the following:

20 Football matches at Stratford, Wembley, Upton Park, Old Trafford, Leicester, Northampton, Romford, Reading, Stevenage, Stamford Bridge, Sunderland, The New Den, Paris, Italy and Marseilles.

3 Cricket matches at the Oval and Lords.

1 Rugby League match at Wembley.

0 Rugby Union matches.

My hon. Friend has also attended other sporting occasions, at different locations, such as: the World Blind Sailing Championships in Weymouth, Boxing at Wembley Arena, Special Olympic National Summer Games in Portsmouth, Tennis at Wimbledon, Winter Olympics in Nagano, Basketball at the London Arena in Docklands, British Grand Prix at Silverstone, Netball at Crystal Palace Sports Centre, and a Gymnastics display in Gloucester.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many times the Minister for Sport has attended meetings with the (a) British Athletic Federation, (b) Cricket Council, (c) Football Association, (d) Rugby Football Union, (e) Rugby Football League, (f) Central Council for Physical Recreation, (g) British Association for Physical Training, (h) British Olympic Association, (i) National Coaching Foundation, (j) National Playing Fields Association and (k) Sports Nutrition Foundation since 1 May 1997. [34736]

Mr. Chris Smith: Since 1 May my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport has attended meetings with the following organisations.

Although my hon. Friend has had no meetings with the British Federation, he has recently met the British Athletes whilst he was in Nagano during the Winter Olympics.

British Athletic Federation: 0

Cricket Council: 0

Football Association: 9

Rugby Football Union: 0

Rugby Football League: 2

Central Council for Physical Recreation: 3

British Association for Physical Training: 0

British Olympic Association: 3

National Coaching Foundation: 0

National Playing Fields Association: 1

Sports Nutrition Foundation: 0.

My hon. Friend has also had meetings with other organisations such as: the Sports Council, English Sports Forum, Youth Charter for Sport, British Olympic Association Athletic Commission, Commonwealth Games Federation, British Ski Federation, Sports Aid Foundation, Sportsmatch, Football Licensing Authority, various Angling organisations, Athletics Youth Foundation, the Lawn Tennis Association.

D'Oyly Carte Opera Company

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his funding proposals for the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company. [36153]

Mr. Fisher: The allocation of funding between art forms, and to individual arts companies, is a matter for the Arts Council of England.

Museums and Galleries Commission

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the (a) location of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) number of staff based at the Head Office of the Museums and Galleries Commission, the percentage of total staff based

(i) at HQ, (ii) in London and (iii) in Scotland and the percentage of salary and running costs incurred in (A) Scotland and (B) London. [36109]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 24 March 1998]: All staff of the Museums and Galleries Commission are based at its headquarters offices at 16 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AA. For the financial year 1997–98, running costs were £507,000 and salary costs were £1,054,951 for a total of 43 staff. With all staff being based at the headquarters offices, 100 per cent. of running costs and salary costs are incurred in London.

Broadcasting Complaints Commission

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the (a) location of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) number of staff based at the head office of the Broadcasting Complaints Commission; what percentage of total staff are based (i) at head office, (ii) in London and (iii) in Scotland; and what percentage of salary and running costs are incurred in (1) London and (2) Scotland; [36123]

(2) if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the Broadcasting Complaints Commission in Scotland. [36122]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 25 March 1998]: The former Broadcasting Standards Council and Broadcasting Complaints Commission were succeeded on 1 April 1997 by the Broadcasting Standards Commission. It has UK-wide jurisdiction to act as a forum for public concern on standards of taste, decency and fairness on television and radio. It considers and reaches findings on complaints received from the public, monitors programmes, commissions research, and draws up and maintains codes of practice on fairness and standards of taste and decency.

It receives grant-in-aid of £1.971m, of which salary costs for the current financial year are expected to total £621,000. All its 25 staff are employed at its London headquarters.

Digital Radio

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the holders of the three national commercial radio licences who were offered guaranteed capacity on digital radio have accepted that offer; and if he will make a statement on the regulatory framework for digital radio broadcasting. [36830]

Mr. Chris Smith: Classic FM plc, Talk Radio UK Ltd. and Virgin Radio Ltd. each informed the Radio Authority by 1 March of their intention to take up the guaranteed capacity on the sole digital national commercial radio multiplex offered to them by the Government.

The radio industry have voiced concerns to me that the current restriction to 10 per cent. of digital capacity for licensed additional services does not permit sufficient advertising on data services to support the investment in and development of digital radio. Having consulted the Radio Authority, I have decided to bring forward, shortly, an order under section 54(3) of the Broadcasting Act 1996 to raise to 20 per cent. the limit of capacity on digital multiplexes that can be used for digital additional services. However, the spectrum which has been allocated to digital radio should be used principally for communicating to the general public. The Government do not want to see a significant amount of the capacity that has been assigned for digital radio additional services used for services addressed to closed-user groups, when such services can be and are delivered by other means. I have therefore asked the Radio Authority to monitor the digital additional services that are broadcast and to report to me on the second anniversary of the start of digital radio services on the use made of additional service capacity. I shall consider in the light of the Authority's report whether the limit needs to be revised.

I welcome the suggestion by the Commercial Radio Companies Association that the Radio Advertising Clearance Centre regulate the content of advertisements carried on digital additional services. I have asked the Radio Authority, when reporting to me on additional services, to include an assessment on the effectiveness of the RACC's regulation.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration Adjudicators

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many immigration adjudicators are currently employed by his Department; how many have been employed in each of the last five years; how many cases have been dealt with in each year; and what have been the administrative costs in each year. [36320]

Mr. Hoon: The number of adjudicators (in addition to the Chief Adjudicator and Deputy Adjudicator) is currently:

33 Adjudicators (full-time)

161 Adjudicators (part-time).

Information is not available on a year by year basis and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The overall adjudicator disposals (including asylum and non-asylum appeals) for the past 5 financial years are:

1993/94: 27,580

1994/95: 26,770

1995/96: 21,282

1996/97: 29,182

1997/98: '36,279.

' projected figure.

I am unable to provide administrative costs for the immigration adjudicators alone but can provide the following information for the Immigration Appellate Authority as a whole:

1994/95: £6,965,344

1995/96: £8,404,699

1996/97: £11,388,311

1997/98: '£12,513,282.

' projected figure.

Information for 1993/4 is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Appointments

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what procedures he uses to ensure that appointments made in his Department observe principles of equal opportunity. [36439]

Mr. Hoon: Ministerial responsibility for judicial appointments rests with the Lord Chancellor. It is the Lord Chancellor's policy to appoint to judicial office those who appear to him to be the best qualified regardless of ethnic origin, gender, marital status, sexual orientation, political affiliation, religion or (subject to the physical requirements of the office) disability. Merit is established by an assessment of the candidate against the criteria for appointment. In respect of non-judicial public appointments, the Department has issued guidance on policy and practice and has distributed widely the Commissioner for Public Appointments' guidance. In respect of all other appointments, standard procedures set out in the Civil Service Management Code and the Civil Service Commissioners' Recruitment Code are used to ensure that appointments in the Lord Chancellor's Department observe principles of equal opportunity. Of the staff employed in the Lord Chancellor's Department 9.43% are of ethnic minority origin, 3.33% have declared a disability and 62.7% are women.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the salaried appointments he has made which have not been advertised. [36443]

Mr. Hoon: The salaried appointments made by the Lord Chancellor since 1 May 1997, which have not been advertised, are:

- the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct (on 10 October 1997);
- a Senior Circuit Judge at Preston Combined Court (on 1 December 1997);
- a Permanent Circuit Judge at the Central Criminal Court (on 1 January 1998); and
- the Expert Adviser (on 5 March 1998).

The Lord Chancellor has also provided advice to the Crown on 14 senior judicial appointments since 1 May 1997.

This excludes casual appointments within the Lord Chancellor's Department, records of which are not centrally held, and appointments resulting from the internal redeployment of existing members of staff.

DEFENCE

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish (a) the number of places on each of his Department's non-departmental public bodies, (b) the number of places that are currently unfilled on each non-departmental public body, (c) the total number of members that have resigned since 1 May 1997, (d) the total number that have retired since 1 May 1997, (e) the total number that have not had their contracts renewed since 1 May 1997, (f) the total number that have remained in place since 1 May 1997 and (g) the total number that have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [35280]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 19 March 1998]: MOD has 17 Non-Departmental Public Bodies; the answers to questions (a) and (b) are as follows:

	Number of places on each NDPB (a)	Places currently unfilled (b)
Executive NDPBs
Fleet Air Arm Museum	8	1
Royal Naval Museum	11	2
Royal Marines Museum	8	0
Royal Naval Submarine Museum	12	3
National Army Museum	12	1
RAF Museum	11[1] (plus 2 ex officio)	—
Oil and Pipelines Agency	2	0
Advisory NDPBs
Advisory Committee on Conscientious Objectors	5[1]	—
Dartmoor Steering Group and Working Party	1 (plus 13 ex officio)	0
Defence Scientific Advisory Council	190[1]	—
Independent Board of Visitors for the Military Corrective Training Centre	10	5
Royal Military College of Science Advisory Council	21	0
National Employer Liaison Committee	14	0
Nuclear Powered Warships Safety Committee	12	0
Nuclear Weapons Safety Committee	12	0
Review Board for Government Contracts	5	0
Royal College of Defence Studies Advisory Board	10	0

[1] There is no fixed number for appointments

Regarding questions (c) to (g):

(c) Since 1 May 1997, six members of MOD NDPBs have resigned (this figure excludes the Defence Scientific Advisory Council where details are not held).

(d) Since 1 May 1997 five members have retired.

(e) Since 1 May 1997 there have been no instances of members not having their contracts renewed.

(f) Since 1 May 1997 308 members have remained in place (this figure includes two nominated ex officio Trustees).

(g) Since 1 May 1997 96 members have been appointed (this figure includes some reappointments, two ex officio appointments and one instance of a committee member being promoted to the position of Chairman).

Eurofighter

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are being taken to maintain minimum noise output on the Eurofighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [35949]

Mr. Spellar: As with military aircraft already in Service, the Ministry of Defence will place appropriate restrictions on the heights, speeds and operating procedures for the Eurofighter during training sorties to ensure that noise levels experienced on the ground are minimised as far as practicable.

SCOTLAND

Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is currently assessing relating to the work of secondary teachers in Scotland. [35839]

Mr. Wilson: My first concern is to raise standards in our schools. Teachers have a large part to play in securing that objective. I await with interest the report of the Millennium Review of School Education (which is being conducted by COSLA and the teacher unions) and any proposals it may have to improve teacher effectiveness.

Tuberculosis

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of (a) TB and (b) drug resistant TB have been identified in Scotland in each of the last three years. [36015]

Mr. Galbraith: The table shows the number of notifications of tuberculosis by medical practitioners to Health Boards in Scotland and the numbers of cases where laboratories have confirmed resistance to one or more of the drugs commonly used in treatment.

Year	Number of [1]Respiratory and Non-Respiratory Cases	Number of [2]Drug Resistant Cases
1995	478	9
1996	509	13
1997	441 (provisional)	Not yet confirmed but less than 10

Note:
Of the cases of drug-resistance, there was in 1995 one case of multi-drug resistant TB, three in 1996 and none in 1997. Multi-drug resistant TB is defined as TB resistant to both isoniazid and rifampicin, and perhaps to other drugs.

[1] Common Services Agency for the NHS in Scotland
[2] Scottish Centre for Infection and Environmental Health

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what immunisation rates for TB have been achieved in each of the last three years. [36016]

Mr. Galbraith: BCG vaccination is delivered to schoolchildren in Scotland around the age of 12. However, relatively low numbers were tested and vaccinated in 1995, because some Health Boards had concentrated their resources on the measles and rubella vaccination programme based on schools at that time. The figures for 1996 suggest there was then a degree of "catching-up" in that year. The BCG vaccination rate in those years can therefore only be estimated and between 1995 and 1997 it is estimated that more than 80 per cent. of 12 year old children were vaccinated. A further 4 per cent. of children were found to be positive on tuberculin skin testing—ie not in need of vaccination.

EU Sheep and Goatmeat Regime

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet the Scottish Cashmere Producers Association to discuss the EU Sheep and Goatmeat Regime; and if he will make a statement. [36033]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend has no plans to discuss the EU Sheepmeat and Goatmeat Regime with the Association, the matter having been raised last year at a meeting with my noble Friend Lord Sewel.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the recommendation of the Scottish Affairs Committee in its Third report of Session 1995–96 (HC 629) on allowing individual farmers to choose support for deer or goats as an alternative to sheep under the EU Sheep and Goatmeat Regime. [36031]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend has no plans to seek to extend the EU Sheepmeat and Goatmeat regime to deer or cashmere goats.

Sewerage

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce guidelines for the siting of sewage plants in residential areas; and if he will make a statement. [35944]

Mr. Macdonald: I have no plans to introduce guidelines for the siting of sewage plants in residential areas. It is a matter for planning authorities to consider any planning applications for proposed sewage plants which come before them.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons his Department sets aside grant relief to domestic customers in respect of sewerage charges. [36041]

Mr. Macdonald: Prior to Scottish local government reorganisation in April 1996, expenditure on domestic sewerage was included in a householder's Council Tax bill. Since then the new water authorities have made a separate charge for the sewerage service. Transitional relief was introduced to give householders time to adjust to the new arrangements. This relief is being phased out.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are being taken to improve treatment for drug addicts in prisons in Scotland. [35899]

Mr. McLeish: All prisons in Scotland have a range of support measures for drug abusing prisoners. These include new drug reduction units at Barlinnie and Shotts Prisons; new relapse prevention programmes to tackle the long term needs of reformed addicts; and clinical prescribing to alleviate the symptoms of opiate withdrawal. The approach is multi-disciplinary and evidence based, and involves collaborative work with external agencies, to ensure so far as possible that the range of support measures inside prison reflects those available in the community and that there is adequate throughcare.

Charity Commission

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the Charity Commission in Scotland. [36135]

Mr. McLeish: The Charity Commission for England and Wales has no responsibilities in Scotland. The supervision and regulation of charities in Scotland is governed by the terms of Part I of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1990 and supporting regulations and is carried out by the Scottish Charities Office under the authority of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Appeals

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases in each of the last three years were referred to the Court of Appeal to review apparently lenient sentences; and how many of those reviews resulted in stronger sentences. [35718]

The Attorney-General: The figures for references by the Law Officers of sentence to the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) under Part IV of the Criminal Justice Act 1998 are as follows:

For England and Wales

Year	Number of sentences referred	Number of sentences increased	Number of references withdrawn	Number of references waiting to be heard
1995	77	67	4	1
1996	68	49	2	0

Probation Service

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what external independent body can be approached by a member of the public when a complaint against a probation officer has been investigated at the various levels of the Probation Service, including the area Probation Committee, and the complainant is still not satisfied with the outcome. [34754]

Ms Quin: If a member of the public is not satisfied with the way in which the chief probation officer concerned has dealt with a complaint against a member of the service he may ask the responsible probation committee to look into it. The committee comprises magistrates and other local members who provide, under the present statutory framework, local accountability for the work of the probation service. It is also open to the Home Secretary to ask Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Probation to inquire into and report on any matter concerning that work; and this power could be used if there were evidence that a probation committee had not dealt with a complaint properly.

Rebound Secure Training Centre

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what statutory authority outreach workers will be employed at the Rebound Secure Training Centre; and if he will make a statement. [35343]

Mr. Michael: Under the terms of its contract with the Home Office, the operator of Medway Secure Training Centre, ECD Ltd, will provide outreach workers, who will be social workers employed at the Secure Training Centre. The workers will be employed under contract rather than statutory authority. The statutory authority for making the contractual arrangements rests with the Home Secretary and in the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. The outreach workers will play a key role in developing the two week induction programme in which each trainee will take part. They will consult the trainee's family or carer for views on their strengths and weaknesses. These views will be taken into account when the Training at the end of the induction period. Along with the supervising officer, the outreach worker will provide the main focus for maintaining links between the trainee and his or her home community during the custodial part of the Order.

Bristol Prison

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to (a) expand permanent parking facilities at HM Prison Bristol and (b) return temporary parking places to their former use; and if he will make a statement. [35752]

Ms Quin: There are no plans to expand permanent parking facilities at Her Majesty's Prison Bristol, but the establishment is exploring the possibilities for finding a suitable off-site parking facility. There are no temporary parking places at the prison.

Operation Countryman

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will release the conclusions of the report of the Operation Countryman investigation. [35698]

Mr. Michael: No. Disclosure is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. Investigating officers' reports are as a class regarded by the courts as subject to public interest immunity. In our response to the Home Affairs Committee Report on Police Disciplinary and Complaints Procedures, we said that we will consult on the scope for greater openness in respect of investigation reports, either generally or individually.

Prisons (Commercial Activities)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to ensure that commercial activities undertaken by prisons do not compete unfairly with local enterprises; and if he will make a statement. [35890]

Ms Quin: It is Prison Service policy that commercial activities should not be undertaken by prisons at the expense of private sector businesses or employment in this country. Prisons should seek work which substitutes imports, or which uses their facilities for work which would be uneconomic for outside contractors, for example because it involves short production runs or is labour intensive.

Prison Service goods and services should be offered at a fair market price, which recovers direct manufacturing costs plus a contribution to the recovery of overheads. Prison overheads are much higher than outside because of high fixed costs (such as the cost of supervision, a short working week and low productivity rates).

Rather than competition, the Prison Service is keen to see private sector businesses make use of prison labour and facilities through partnerships.

Child Curfews

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compatibility of his proposal for local child curfews with the European Convention on Human Rights; and if he will make a statement. [36047]

Mr. Michael: I am satisfied that the proposals for local child curfew schemes as set out in the Crime and Disorder Bill are compatible with the European Convention on Human Rights. They are designed to protect the interests of children and the wider community.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what existing sources of free competent legal representations are available to destitute asylum appellants ineligible for benefits to pursue appeals against refusal of refugee status. [35904]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration Advisory Service and The Refugee Legal Centre provide free legal representation to asylum appellants. It is also open to appellants to seek assistance from other voluntary bodies.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the success rate for asylum appellants at appeals hearings before the Immigration Appellate Authority who are (i) legally represented and (ii) unrepresented in the latest period for which figures are available. [35907]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the requested breakdown is not available because the figures are not held in a form which would enable us to provide the information accurately.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision he has made to ensure that destitute asylum appellants who are ineligible for benefits can afford to pay for legal representation on their appeals against refusal of refugee status. [35905]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Home Office makes grants under section 23 of the Immigration Act 1971 to the Refugee Legal Centre and the Immigration Advisory Service which provide free advice and representation to people with rights of appeal under immigration and asylum legislation. In 1997/98, the total grant paid to the two organisations will be just under £5.9m.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the criteria used to determine which asylum seekers will be sent to Category A prisons; and on what grounds asylum seekers are currently held in such prisons. [36227]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: About half of those people detained under Immigration Act powers are housed in immigration detention centres, which are run on the lines of secure hostels. Some, however, are held in Prison Service accommodation, generally because their current behaviour or past history indicates that they require a greater level of control or supervision than can be provided in immigration accommodation. Such persons who are placed in prison custody, some of whom will be asylum seekers, are subject to Prison Rules made under section 47(1) of the Prison Act 1952 which empowers the Secretary of State to make rules for, among other things, the classification, discipline and control of prisoners. Rule 3 of the Prison Rules 1995 provides for the classification of prisoners

'in accordance with any directions of the Secretary of State, having regard to their age, temperament and record with a view to maintaining good order'.

In accordance with guidance contained in the Prison Service Manual on Security, prison staff are required, on reception into prison custody, to report to Prison Service Headquarters the cases of those prisoners who, on the information available, may need to be placed in Category A. Category A, the highest security category, is applied to those prisoners whose escape would be highly dangerous to the public or the police or the security of the State, no matter how unlikely that escape might be; and for whom escape must be made impossible.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to grant (a) an amnesty and (b) exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom to those whose asylum appeals are still outstanding. [36440]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are reviewing all aspects of the asylum system, including how best to deal with the backlogs inherited from the previous administration, but have no plans to grant a general amnesty.

Travel Document Fees

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on travel document fees. [36749]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In line with the increase in the fee for a British passport which I announced on 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 402, the fee for a Refugee Passport and for a Stateless Persons Document will be increased from £18 to £21 today.

The cost of a Refugee Passport and of a Stateless Persons Document is directly linked to the cost of a British Passport. A fee of £21 still represents very good value for money.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have died in each of the past 18 years following heroin misuse; and how much was spent in each year to counteract (a) heroin misuse and (b) all illegal drugs misuse. [36253]

Mr. George Howarth: We understand from the Office for National Statistics (ONS) that the number of deaths from heroin during the period 1979–1992 were published by ONS in Series DH4 "Mortality Statistics": Injury and Poisoning" Numbers 6–18, copies of which are available in the Library. Deaths in the following four years are as follows:

1993: 52

1996: 186.

Data for the period 1993–96 are not directly comparable to those given for earlier years in the DH4 Series. Since 1993, deaths from misuse of drugs have included those certified as due to drug dependence and non-dependent abuse of drugs. Series DH4 included only deaths certified as due to Suicide, Accident and Undetermined injury.

Information on how much was spent in each year to counteract drug misuse, including heroin misuse, is not recorded. It was estimated in 1995 that at least £526 million was spent on tackling drug misuse across the United Kingdom in 1993/94, but that estimate appears not to have taken account of all Government spending connected with drug misuse. A more comprehensive estimate is being developed and will be published shortly.

Police Raids

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 January 1998, Official Report, column 278, if the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has completed his investigation of the leak to a journalist of targets of police raids on 21 November 1997; what were his conclusions; and if he will make a statement. [36046]

Mr. Michael: This is an operational matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis . However, he tells me that one of the Metropolitan Police's Complaints Units has carried out an investigation. This included questioning a journalist who had knowledge of the source of the leak. The journalist, whilst not revealing the identity of the source, has categorically assured the investigators that the leak did not come from the Metropolitan Police.

The Metropolitan Police's role in the raids was to act as a facilitator in the co-ordination of intelligence in the raids. The Commissioner tells me that there are several prosecutions pending as a result of the police raids.

Charity Commission

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) location, (b) running costs and (c) salary costs of the head office of the Charity Commission; what percentage of total staff are based in (i) head office, (ii) London and (iii) Scotland; and what percentage of salary and running costs are incurred in (A) London and (B) Scotland. [36136]

Mr. Michael: The Charity Commission does not have a head office, but operates from three sites in London, Liverpool and Taunton. The running costs for the financial year 1996–97 were £20.724 million, of which £12.135 million represented staff pay costs. In 1996–97, it employed an average of 577 staff, of which 199 (34.5 per cent.) were located in London, 197 (34.1 per cent.) in Liverpool and 181 (31.4 per cent.) in Taunton.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Africa (Privatisation Projects)

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contribution her Department has made to privatisation projects in Africa. [35728]

Clare Short: Our policy is to help African governments create a suitable environment for increased investment, public and private. Privatisation, with appropriate incentives and regulation, can help. We have specifically provided support for the privatisation process in several, including £1,350,100 for Assistance to the Divestiture Implementation Committee in Ghana, £410,000 for the Dairiboard and £115,000 for other Agricultural Parastatals in Zimbabwe and a commitment of £3 million over 3 years for the Presidential Parastatal Sector Reform Commission in Tanzania.

We are also currently looking at providing support for privatisation in other countries, including Uganda.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Air Conditioning Systems

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what representations have been received on the air conditioning systems in the House. [36323]

Sir Sydney Chapman: I have received no representations on this subject, but I understand that the Serjeant at Arms has recently received a letter from the hon. Member on this subject, to which he is replying.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the risk that light weapons or armoured vehicles exported to Turkey could be used for internal repression. [36158]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on 24 March 1998, Official Report, column 98.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge the Turkish Government at the UN Commission on Human Rights to facilitate the visits of, and co-operate with, the Working Group on Involuntary and Enforced Disappearances and the Special Rapporteur on Torture in 1998. [36156]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 29.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the evidence presented in 1996 by Her Majesty's Government to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons remains Government policy. [36154]

Mr. Fatchett: We have considered the International Court of Justice's Advisory Opinion. It does not require a change in our purely defensive policy of nuclear deterrence.

It is not our practice to comment on submissions made by previous Governments in the course of legal proceedings.

Military Training Assistance

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department's review of military training assistance has been completed. [36496]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The review of the FCO's UK Military Training Assistance Scheme (UKMTAS) was launched as part of our Comprehensive Spending Review. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary concluded that for 1998–99, UKMTAS will be replaced by a new programme called Assistance to Support Stability with In-Service Training (ASSIST), and that we will set up a specific Human Rights Project Fund.

The ASSIST programme will be worth £11.15 million in 1998–99. The criteria will be:

1) To promote, within overseas military and police forces, respect for civilian democratic government and practices, the rule of law and international human rights standards. This should be done by training activities which:

- promote human rights both as a distinct discipline and as an element of broader training courses;
- deliver practical skills for peacekeeping, conflict prevention, dispute resolution and disaster management;
- help fight crime, including terrorism;
- enhance the professionalism of the armed forces.

2) To promote effective arms control and non-proliferation measures.

3) To promote English Language training, as preparation for other training, and as a tool to allow contributions to peacekeeping and other activities where English is the common language.

The creation of the new Human Rights Project Fund is the first time the FCO has set aside dedicated funds for human rights.

The new fund will enable our Embassies and High Commissions to give practical help to promote human rights through Governments and non-governmental organisations.

Priority areas will include:

- children's rights, including work to tackle child sexual abuse;
- rule of law cooperation, eg training for judges and lawyers, prison reform;
- support for national human rights institutions and NGOs;
- media, eg training of journalists.

The Fund is made up of £2.25 million from overseas military training budgets (UKMTAS), together with an additional £2.75 million available through savings elsewhere.

Public Bodies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the total financial assistance provided to (a) the Commonwealth Institute and (b) the Westminster Foundation for Democracy; and if he will list the locations of the (i) head office and (ii) other buildings used by these bodies in the United Kingdom, providing a breakdown of (1) staff numbers, (2) salary costs and (3) running costs for buildings in (A) Scotland and (B) London. [36190]

Mr. Fatchett: During the financial year 1997–98, this Department provided the Commonwealth Institute with a grant-in-aid of £800,000. It also provided an additional £316,000 to pay for redundancies. The Commonwealth Institute has 30 staff. The salary costs for the financial year 1997–98 were £1.25 million. This figure includes National Insurance, pension contributions, seasonal staffing and the chairman's honorarium.

The Commonwealth Institute is in Kensington High Street, London. In the current financial year the running costs of this building were approximately £470,510. This figure was broken down as follows:

Breakdown	£
Maintenance and site service charges	171,000
Site security	92,000
Business rates	72,000
Electricity, fuel and gas	72,000
Water charges	40,500
Cleaning	23,000
Rental	10

The Institute also used to have premises in Edinburgh. This building, however, is no longer in use and we are currently seeking the agreement of the Trustees that it may be sold. Although empty, the Edinburgh building still generates running costs, for which this Department is liable. During the financial year 1997–98, the running costs for the building in Edinburgh totalled £8,452.15. This is broken down as follows:

Breakdown	£
Council tax/water/sewerage	693.18
Rates	3,404.22
Electricity	37.14
Maintenance work	4,317.61

The grant-in-aid given to the Westminster Foundation for Democracy by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, during financial year 1997–98, was £2,713,650. No other financial assistance was provided. The Foundation's head office is at Clutha House, 10 Storey's Gate, Westminster. They do not use any other building.

The Foundation has 6 staff. The total salary cost for financial year 1997–98 was £215,892/ This figure includes National Insurance and pension contributions.

The total running costs for Clutha House during financial year 1997–98 came to approximately £56,199. This was broken down as follows

Breakdown	£
Rent and rates	31,799
Service charge	14,000
Business rates	8,000
Electricity	1,200
Building insurance	1,200

BBC World Service

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the location of BBC World Service buildings in the United Kingdom, providing a breakdown of (a) staff numbers, (b) salary costs and (c) running costs for buildings in (i) London and (ii) Scotland. [36192]

Mr. Fatchett: The BBC World Service directly employs 1,057 equivalent full-time staff with an average basic salary of £25,117.

The World Service does not itself own any premises; all buildings are owned or leased by the BBC as a whole, and the World Service pays a central accommodation charge for the use of these buildings, which are all located in London. At present "running costs" are:

Location	Running costs (£)
Bush House (World Service share only)	5,008,000
Beaumont House	112,000
Macklin Street Nursery	65,000

Inward Investment

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the inward missions organised for foreign companies to the United Kingdom in 1996–97; which nations were involved in each; and what percentage of the missions included visits to sites in (i) London, (ii) England and (iii) Scotland. [36188]

Mr. Fatchett: The Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) which is jointly managed by DTI and FCO organises visits by groups of foreign companies interested in the UK as an inward investment location. In 1996 and 1997 IBB organised 11 missions. Members of these missions visited London, England and Scotland as follows:

Country	London	England	Scotland
1996
Germany		x
Japan[1]		x	x
Korea[1]		x	x

[1] Specific site visits in London were not included in these programmes although a general briefing on London was provided.

University and Careers Fairs

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the university and careers fairs attended by his Department's officials in 1996–97. [36191]

Capital Projects

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the capital projects funded by his Department in the United Kingdom for which cumulative costs have exceeded £1 million, indicating the percentage of projects in (a) Scotland and (b) England. [36193]

Mr. Fatchett: The estimated outturn of the current FCO capital projects in the United Kingdom exceeding £1 million is as follows:

1990–98	Outturn (£)
Old public offices refurbishment	74,339,500
Hanslope Park development	38,874,000

100 per cent. of this spend has been incurred in England.

HEALTH

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to discuss the Department's progress regarding millennium compliance. [32308]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 March 1998]: I attended the Ministerial sub-group on the millennium date change problem, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on 5 March 1998.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from which budgetary sub-head the costs of millennium computer compliance will be met by his Department. [32309]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Costs for millennium computer compliance are met from the Department's Vote 2 running costs allocation.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many officials or individuals working within his Department on millennium compliance have (a) given notice of their intention to leave, or (b) left the Department in the last six months. [32306]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 March 1998]: In the last six months one permanent member of staff and one contractor working on the Department's Year 2000 programme have left or given notice of their intention to leave. Both staff have been replaced.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met a Treasury Minister to discuss the costs of millennium computer compliance. [32307]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 March 1998]: I attended the Ministerial sub-group on the millennium date change problem (MSG), chaired by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, on 5 March. Her Majesty's Treasury was represented at MSG by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many community hospitals have been (a) placed under review and (b) closed since 1 May 1997; [34443]

(2) how many community hospitals in the United Kingdom are currently under review. [34436]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 13 March 1998]: It is difficult comprehensively to define what is meant by "community" or "cottage" hospital. They differ from place to place in the scale, range and volume of services they offer. What characterises nearly all is that they provide a local service and admit patients under the care of a general practitioner.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of deaths from solvent abuse in each of the past 18 years; and how much was spent in each of those years on anti-drug use publicity and education. [36251]

Ms Jowell: Data relating to deaths associated with solvent or volatile substance abuse are collected on the Department's behalf by St. George's Hospital Medical School; copies of the latest annual report "Trends in Deaths Associated with the Abuse of Volatile Substances 1971–1995" are in the Library and can be accessed on the world wide web at http://www.sghms.ac.uk/phs/index.htm. Information on expenditure on anti-drugs publicity since 1979 is not readily available, although the Department has held a contract with the Health Education Authority since 1995–96 valued at £5 million per year.

Access Committee for England

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of grant provided to the Access Committee for England in the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [36333]

Mr. Milburn: The Department has provided a grant of £85,000 in 1996/97 and £65,000 in 1997/98, towards the central administrative costs of the Access Committee for England (ACE). This is in addition to project funding of £24,000 in each of these two years. This Department will not be providing funding to ACE in 1998/99.

European Specialist Medical Qualifications Order

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has made to the European Commission about the European Specialist Medical Qualifications Order 1995; and if he will make a statement. [35438]

Ms Jowell: The Department consulted officials at the European Commission on both the European Specialist Medical Qualifications Order 1995 (which came into force on 12 January 1996) and the European Specialist Medical Qualifications Amendment Regulations 1997 (which came into force on 31 December 1997).

WALES

Air Quality

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many air quality monitoring sites there are in Wales; and what plans he has to increase the number. [35521]

Mr. Win Griffiths: At the end of October 1997 there were 44 continuous and 377 non-continuous air quality monitoring sites in Wales. A variety of pollutants are monitored at these sites including nitrogen dioxide, sulphur dioxide, carbon monoxide, ozone, fine particles (PM10) and hydrocarbons.

The Government keep their monitoring network and the need for additional sites under review. In partnership, with local authorities throughout Wales and the University of Wales Institute Cardiff, the Welsh Office has established an air quality forum to share information and to assist in providing an effective air quality monitoring programme.

Council Houses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many council houses have been sold by each unitary authority; how many remain under their ownership; what the capital receipts are for each authority; and if he will make a statement on the future role of councils in providing social housing in Wales. [35525]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The available information is set out in the table. Local authorities are required to set aside a proportion of the receipts from Right to Buy sales for credit liabilities in accordance with the provisions of section 59 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Local authorities have the key role in determining housing needs and priorities. These are set out in their housing strategies and operational plans which now drive the allocation of social housing grant to registered social landlords in their areas. I have no reason to think that local authorities will not continue to be substantial landlords for some years to come.

Lapwings

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the lapwing population at the Rhyd-y-Blew site and of the effect on it of the proposed clearing of grassland. [35541]

Mr. Win Griffiths: This is primarily a matter for Blaenau Gwent County Borough Council. However, they, along with the Countryside Council for Wales, are fully aware of the nature conservation value of this site. An environmental appraisal is being carried out to minimise the effect of development on the lapwing population.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those hospitals which have been closed in Wales in the past five years, indicating how many of these have been sold and if the relevant health authorities have been entitled to retain for use within their areas, the money raised by such sales. [35586]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The following list names 21 hospitals which were closed between March 1993 and 31 March 1997. Statistics for 1998 are not yet available.

Fourteen have been sold and conditional offers have been made for four others. Health bodies were allowed to retain all or part of the sale receipts in eight cases.

Abortions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many women in Wales had to wait (a) less than a week, (b) between one and two weeks, (c) over two weeks but less than four weeks and (d) over four weeks, between the date they first requested an NHS abortion and the date of the abortion in the most recent available period. [35581]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The waiting time from the date that an NHS abortion is first requested to the date the abortion is performed is not collected centrally.

The waiting times from the date the consultant agrees to admit to the date of admission are shown in the following table.

Abortions carried out in Welsh NHS hospitals during the financial year 1996–97

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future of the uniform business rate in Wales. [35736]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consult shortly on his proposals for the operation of non-domestic rates in Wales. No changes to the present arrangements will be made until there has been full consultation with representatives of the business community and with local government.

Farmers' Organisations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many meetings he has had since taking office, with leaders of farmers' organisations. [35734]

Mr. Win Griffiths: My right hon. Friend has met leaders of farmers' organisations on 12 occasions since taking office.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) children there were on the NHS waiting lists in Wales at the latest available date. [35737]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Waiting list information in Wales is not available separately for men, women and children. Welsh health authorities reported that on 31 January 1998 there were 180,100 Welsh residents waiting for an out-patient appointment, and 70,100 Welsh residents waiting for in-patient or day case treatment.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the proportion of registered sheep dips in Wales which have a direct drain into watercourses. [36064]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not held centrally. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ross, Skye and Inverness, West (Mr. Kennedy) on 17 February 1998, Official Report, column 557.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what performance targets he has set for the Planning Inspectorate Agency's work in Wales for the financial year 1998–99. [36831]

Mr. Win Griffiths: As in previous years, the main objectives for the Planning Inspectorate are to maintain the impartiality and quality of its work while making the most efficient use of the resources available to it. I have today set the following key targets for the Agency's work in Wales:

Timeliness

(a) Eighty per cent. of all planning appeals decided by written representations to be determined within 17 weeks;

(b) Eighty per cent. of all planning appeals decided by hearings to be determined within 22 weeks;

(c) Eighty per cent. of all planning appeals decided by inquiries to be determined within 30 weeks;

(d) (i) To provide an inspector for local/unitary development plan inquiries in at least 80 per cent. of cases on the date requested by the local planning authority—provided that the objection period has ended and at least 6 months notice is given; and,

(ii) To deliver 90 per cent. of inspector's reports on local /unitary development plan inquiries to local authorities according to the timescales agreed under service agreements;

Financial

(a) Unit costs of planning appeals decided by written representations not to exceed the target set for the Inspectorate by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions;

(b) Recover receipts in accordance with the target set for the Inspectorate by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions;

Efficiency

Contribute to the generation of an efficiency improvement in the Agency's use of running costs compared with 1997–98, in accordance with the target set for the Inspectorate by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions;

Quality

To satisfy the Advisory Panel on Standards, and thus the Secretary of State, annually and following rigorous monitoring, that the quality of the Inspectorate's work is being maintained at a high standard with 99 per cent. of its casework free from justified error;

Welsh Language

To respond in Welsh to all inquiries, written or oral, received in Welsh within the same time-scales as allowed for responding to inquiries generally.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Citizen's Charter in raising standards in the public services. [35743]

Dr. David Clark: We recently carried out an extensive consultation to find out people's views on the Citizen's Charter Programme. The majority of respondents believed that the programme had made a significant contribution to the improvement in public services over recent years. We have also carried out a thorough evaluation of The Charter Mark Award Scheme which was also broadly positive.

But both the consultation and evaluation showed scope for improvement. Notably the Programme had not always tackled issues that really mattered to users. I intend to put this right when the new Charter programme is launched later in the spring, as part of the wider Better Government initiative.

Better Government (Older People)

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Better Government for Older People Programme. [36622]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Better Government for Older People is a new, national Government-led programme to improve public services for older people and give them more say in how those services are run. It is part of a series of Government-wide initiatives to test new ways of improving the delivery of services and programmes.

Its aim is to work with older people to provide them with:

Clearer and more accessible information on their rights;

More say in the type of services they can get;

Simplified access to services;

Improved linkages between different agencies; and

Better opportunities to contribute to their local community.

As a first step, the Cabinet Office (OPS) is producing "Passport 50+: Your Practical Guide to the Law"—a document covering older people's rights in relevant areas including healthcare, pensions, and benefits, housing, safety/crime, travel and leisure. This is being developed in partnership with the Citizenship Foundation and Age Concern, with commercial sponsorship from SAGA and Guardian Insurance. The "Passport 50+: Your Practical Guide to the Law" will be published in June. Copies will be available in bookshops and circulated by Age Concern, SAGA and the Anchor Trust on their own networks.

Secondly, the Cabinet Office (OPS) is leading a consortium including the Warwick University Local Authorities Research Consortium, Age Concern, the Anchor Trust and the Carnegie Third Age Programme to develop, test and evaluate how we can take better account of older peoples' wishes in the delivery of public services—to make those services more user-friendly, and to help older people remain independent for longer.

This will be based on 28 local pilot projects across the UK. Each pilot will be led by a local authority, but all will include a wide-ranging partnership with other agencies such as health trusts, the police and voluntary groups, as well as older people themselves. They will show how by working across sectors, services can be delivered in a seamless and more-cost effective way. The pilots will employ a range of different strategies including: greater use of information technology; new one-stop shops; improved information; new user groups of older people; and looking at ways of giving older people a greater say in decision making processes.

The pilot authorities are:

Bolton Metro
Bury Metro
City of Coventry
Devon County Council
Hartlepool Borough Council
Royal Borough of Kensington and Chelsea
London Borough of Hackney
London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham
London Borough of Harrow

The pilots, which will be launched at a conference in London on 5 June, will initially run for two years.

Departmental Employees (Scotland)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36213]

Dr. David Clark: My answer covers the Cabinet Office, the Office of Public Service and its executive agencies and the Central Office of Information, which is a Department in its own right and which reports directly to me.

23 members of staff are employed in Scotland; 21 in Edinburgh and two in Glasgow.

CABINET OFFICE

Newspaper Conference Annual Luncheon

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will place in the Library a copy of his speech to the 1998 Newspaper Conference Annual Luncheon on 23 March. [36369]

Mr. Mandelson: I have done so today.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will discuss the contents of the smaller Dome with the North West region Showmen's Guild and theme park owners. [31967]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company welcome all constructive discussions with organisations from the leisure industry on issues concerning the Millennium Experience, including the use of the smaller Dome.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many companies from (i) the North West Region and (ii) Chorley have received contracts in respect of work for the Millennium Dome. [32051]

Mr. Mandelson: As at the end of February 1998, the New Millennium Experience company had awarded three contracts to a company in the North West. These are to Watson Steel of Bolton for the provision of masts, cables and core steelworks; for tunnel vents, shafts and cladding; and for exterior plantroom cladding.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what representations he has received and what advice he sought from the Deputy Prime Minister before deciding to use HFCs to power the air-conditioning system within the Millennium Dome. [35939]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The decision was taken by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC). I was informed in the last week of February, and took immediate advice from DETR officials. I informed my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister of the Company's decision the following week.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list the contracts so far awarded in respect of the Millennium Dome, and in each case (a) the value, (b) the successful tenderer and (c) whether the successful tenderer is British-based. [35971]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 24 March 1998]: As at the end of February 1998 the following main trade contracts had been awarded by the New Millennium Experience Company in respect of the Dome.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will publish quarterly full details of his proposals for the contents of the Millennium Experience exhibition and the dome, for public consultation and response. [36174]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 25 March 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company unveiled details of around half the Dome's contents on 24 February. I shall ensure that the Company keeps the public informed of significant new developments over the coming year.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what is the total floor space of the Millennium Experience Dome; and what proportion is presently (a) allocated to zones or themes already determined and (b) unallocated. [36315]

Mr. Mandelson: The total floor space is 80,000 square metres. All this space is allocated—to exhibits, services, and visitor circulation routes.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what plans he has to ensure that the Millennium Dome exhibition will employ (a) induction loops, (b) video subtitles, (c) sign language and (d) textphone. [34342]

Mr. Mandelson: The New Millennium Experience Company will aim to ensure that the needs and interests of all who visit the Experience are taken into account, including through the use of appropriate communication methods.

Millennium Projects

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what responsibilities he has for millennium projects outside London. [31970]

Mr. Mandelson: I am shareholder of the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC), which has responsibility for the Millennium Experience at Greenwich and the associated Challenge programme of events and activities which will engage people and communities all over the country.

The NMEC is also contributing £20 million to a new £100 million Millennium Festival Fund for the year 2000 which will include national, regional and local sporting and artistic events and heritage projects. Applications for larger projects can be made from May this year.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will publish a list of persons employed (a) directly and (b) on a freelance basis by the New Millennium Experience Company, giving their function and rate of salary. [35929]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) will be publishing the remuneration, including benefit in kind, if any, paid to its Board members; the remuneration of the Chief Executive; and the remuneration of senior employees starting from £40,000, shown in bands of £10,000 in its Annual Report and Accounts for the financial year 1997/98, which it will publish by the end of September this year.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Young Unemployed)

16. Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what indications he has had from the pathfinder areas of the extent to which the new deal is helping young unemployed people into work or training. [34909]

Mr. Blunkett: It is, of course, early days for this ambitious undertaking, but I am encouraged by the impressive start to New Deal Pathfinders. Across the country we have already seen over 15,000 young people enter the Gateway, seen over 2,600 employer agreements signed and seen over 8,600 clients referred to unsubsidised jobs and over 4,900 referrals to the four New Deal options.

31. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the new deal in helping young unemployed people into work or training. [34926]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I am encouraged by the progress recorded in the New Deal Pathfinder areas so far. Across the country we have seen over 13,000 young people enter the Gateway and already there have been successful referrals to unsubsidised jobs and the four New Deal options. The Employment Service has developed, and is now implementing, a comprehensive evaluation strategy for New Deal. I look forward to the national implementation of New Deal from 6 April 1998.

Literacy (Teacher Training)

17. Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what training and support will be given to teachers in respect of raising literacy standards among pupils. [34910]

Ms Estelle Morris: As part of the National Literacy Strategy, all primary teachers will receive training in the most effective methods of teaching literacy. All schools should now have received copies of the strategy's "Framework for Teaching" and, after Easter, they will be sent distance learning materials to use during their training days. We are also funding more than 200 LEA literacy consultants who will give direct support to classroom teachers.

From this September all primary trainees, on all courses of Initial Teacher Training, must follow our new national training curriculum in English. The curriculum specifies the essential knowledge, understanding and skills which all trainees must be taught and be able to use in relation to teaching literacy and language skills effectively in the classroom. The Teacher Training Agency is currently consulting on a parallel teachers national training curriculum for secondary teachers.

Pupil Behaviour

18. Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice he has given to schools on improving pupil behaviour in the classroom. [34912]

Ms Estelle Morris: We shall shortly be issuing for consultation draft guidance on pupil behaviour and discipline and on exclusions.

New Deal (Disabled People)

19. Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the new deal for disabled people and those with long-standing illnesses. [34913]

38. Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the New Deal for disabled people and those with long-standing illnesses. [34933]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The programme is based on our belief that many people on sickness and disability benefits would work given the right support. The Department and the Department of Social Security are working together to develop new approaches to helping disabled people move into or stay in work, and to pilot initiatives involving Personal Advisers helping disabled people to overcome barriers to work. The first tranche of successful bids to run innovative schemes will be announced in May and the first of 12 Personal Adviser pilots will start in September or October 1998.

Numeracy Summer Schools

20. Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will introduce summer numeracy schools. [34914]

35. Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to promote pupils' progress in numeracy over the summer holidays. [34930]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced funding for a pilot of around 30 summer numeracy schools. The pilot programme will be supported by £300,000 from the Standards Fund.

Grant-maintained Schools

21. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if it is his policy to fund those extra functions carried out by grant-maintained schools which are not carried out by locally managed schools. [34915]

Mr. Byers: In 1998–99 grant-maintained schools will continue to receive funding for their additional responsibilities over and above those of locally managed schools.

School Inspections

22. Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures are being taken to ensure the quality of inspectors carrying out the inspection of schools. [34916]

Mr. Byers: In addition to provisions in the School Standards and Framework Bill, the Chief Inspector is implementing a programme of changes which are intended to improve the quality of inspectors and inspections. In particular, subject to legislation, the Chief Inspector will have a new duty to maintain a list of inspection team members and will have powers to remove inspectors from that list where they are judged not to be competent to inspect schools.

Higher Education

23. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received concerning the Government's proposals for higher education funding. [34917]

Dr. Howells: We have received a large number of representations. There is considerable support for the principle that the costs of higher education should be shared between those who benefit from it. The Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals have given their backing to the broad principles of the proposed new funding arrangements, which have enabled the Government to announce an additional £125 million for universities and colleges for 1998–99 to maintain and improve quality and standards. The National Union of Students have supported the switch from grants to income contingent loans, which will mean a fairer system, with students having access to money to help with their living costs when they need it.

27. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the number of student applications to higher education institutions for entry in autumn 1998. [34921]

Dr. Howells: The large increase in new entrants in autumn 1997 meant that fewer prospective students were expected to apply for next year. But latest published figures from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service show that the fall in applicant numbers by 15 December 1997 compared with the previous year was only some 4 per cent. The position since then has further improved. Home applicant numbers for 1998, while down on comparable numbers for 1997, are currently running at a similar level as for 1996 and 1995.

Disability Rights Commission

25. Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to establish a disability rights commission. [34919]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Disability Rights Task Force has been considering the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission. It is expected to report its conclusions to the Government by the end of March. The Government will give careful consideration to the Task Force's recommendations.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the disability rights task force will publish its report on the establishment of a commission. [34918]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Disability Rights Task Force is expected to report its conclusions to the Government by the end of March. Its report will be made available via the Internet and copies will be placed in the Libraries.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Disability Rights Task Force will report. [36412]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Disability Rights Task Force is expected to make recommendations on the role and functions of a Disability Rights Commission by the end of March 1998 and provide a full report of its recommendations on wider civil rights issues no later than July 1999.

School Buildings

26. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his present estimate of the monetary value of the backlog of school buildings, repair and maintenance. [34920]

Mr. Byers: Under the previous government no such estimate was made. We shall require every LEA to prepare an asset management plan. This will identify the backlog of work to be carried out.

Groundwork Dearne Valley (Apprenticeship Scheme)

28. Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will assess the effectiveness of the apprenticeship scheme being operated by Groundwork Dearne Valley. [34923]

Dr. Howells: It is too early to form a full assessment of the Groundwork Dearne Valley Apprenticeship Scheme which has been running since October 1997. However the project is subject to regular reviews which have revealed many positive aspects. There will be a formal interim review after eighteen months of the life span of the project which will enable partners to identify and disseminate areas of best practice.

Chief Inspector of Schools

29. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the length of contract of the chief inspector of schools. [34924]

Mr. Byers: Chris Woodhead was appointed to the post of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in England on a five-year contract commencing on 1 September 1994.

Literacy Summer Schools

30. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the number of literacy summer schools. [34925]

Mr. Byers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced at the Secondary Heads Association conference that we will expand the Summer Literacy Schools scheme. It will grow from 50 schools last summer to 562 this summer with 503 being LEA-maintained, 57 grant-maintained and 2 independent schools.

Child Care

32. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the availability of child care information. [34927]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Improving information on child care for parents, employers and providers will be an integral element of the national child care strategy on which we plan to launch a Green Paper after Easter. Working in partnership, our objective will be to ensure that a comprehensive information service is available in every area and local help is available to potential providers of child care.

New Deal (Long-term Unemployed)

33. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received from employers in the private sector relating to the New Deal and the long-term unemployed. [34928]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have received many representations from employers about the New Deal and have been greatly encouraged by the level of commitment that these have shown. Over 2,300 employers have now signed the employers agreement.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to help unemployed people over the age of 25 years from benefits into work. [34922]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for adults who have been unemployed for two years or more will start in June this year and will offer the opportunity to take up a subsidised job or to study towards a work-related qualification whilst remaining on benefit. In addition, we are making available an extra £100 million to pilot an extension to the type of approach used in the New Deal for the young unemployed; up to 70,000 unemployed people of 25 and over from November this year will be eligible. These pilots will provide individually tailored help and support for adults in the pilot areas who have been unemployed for 18 months or more and in some areas, for 12 months or more.

Lifelong Learning

34. Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the Government's policies for lifelong learning. [34929]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State set out his proposals for life-long learning in the Green Paper, The Learning Age, published on 25 February.

Job Security

36. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce greater job security; and if he will make a statement. [34931]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The best form of job security is knowing one can get another job if one has to. That is why we aim to deliver a successful economy with high and sustainable levels of employment and skilled and employable workers.

New Deal (Objectives)

37. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the objectives of the New Deal. [34932]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The overall objectives of the New Deal, which have been drawn up with the benefit of advice from the New Deal Task Force, are as follows: to help into jobs young and long term unemployed people and lone parents and disabled people who wish to work and to improve their prospect of staying in and progressing in employment, and to increase the long term employability of young and long term unemployed people, and of lone parents and disabled people who wish to work.

The New Deal will be evaluated fully. We intend to build a composite picture of how the New Deal is working, using a wide range of methodologies that together will help assess how far the objectives have been met.

Access Committee for England

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the level of grant provided to the Access Committee for England in the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [36331]

Mr. Alan Howarth: There were no grants made in the 1996–97 financial year. In 1997–98, the Department commissioned research into the settlement of disputes between disabled people and service providers and payment of £22,950 has been made. A further £2,501 will be payable, in 1998–99, upon completion of the project.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what education programmes in the past 18 years aiming to discourage smoking have resulted in a reduction in the use of tobacco; [36250]

(2) if he will list each anti-drug education programme in the past 18 years which he assesses to have resulted in measured reductions in drug use. [36254]

Ms Estelle Morris: It is for individual schools to decide on the content and organisation of their programmes and which approach to the subject best suits their needs and circumstances. There is, therefore, a wide range of approaches that school may choose to adopt.

One recent example of an education programme indicating some success was Project Charlie, where a recent evaluation paper suggests strongly that substantial and well delivered primary school drug education programmes can have a delaying effect on the onset of drug use.

The DfEE has supported a number of innovative drug education projects, set up and run by local education authorities under the GEST programme, in both 1995–96 and 1996–97. My Department plans to issue further guidance later this year, to support and underpin the new Government anti-drugs strategy, taking into account the lessons learned from the innovative projects and information from the reports published by the Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted).

Ofsted have issued two reports last year on Drug Education in Schools and the Contribution of the Youth Service to Drug Education, following their specific study of drug education during 1995–96. The reports highlight examples of effective practice.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the extra cost to (a) primary and (b) secondary schools of the changes to employers' national insurance contributions announced in the Budget. [36084]

Mr. Byers: The overall effect on schools of the changes to employers' national insurance contributions announced in the Budget should be broadly neutral. Within that, we estimate a decrease in costs for primary schools of about £5 million and an increase in costs for secondary schools of about £5 million.

Degree Students

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the principal reasons cited by students for failing to complete degree courses. [36179]

Dr. Howells: Research commissioned by the Higher Education Funding Council for England has found that students often have several reasons for failing to complete their degree courses, including: wrong choice of field of study; dissatisfaction with the institution's provision of facilities; personal problems; problems associated with finance; and failure in examination.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the future funding provisions for training and enterprise councils in England and Wales. [36178]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Funding for Training and Enterprise Councils is currently being reviewed as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer said last week that an announcement about the Review would take place in the summer.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Covent Garden

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what redundancy packages he has evaluated with reference to the disposal of the New Covent Garden Market; and if he will make a statement. [34984]

Dr. John Cunningham: None. There are no Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food employees attached to the Covent Garden Market Authority.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the letters of appointment given to the New Covent Garden Market's immediate past chairman and his successor. [34983]

Dr. John Cunningham: The initial appointment of Mr. William (Bill) Bowman, the retiring Chairman of the Covent Garden Market Authority, was announced in a MAFF News Release on 31 December 1987 (402/87). I do not have access to the letters of appointment which were the responsibility of the previous Administration. The appointment of Mr. Lief Mills as Chairman of the Authority, with effect from 1 April 1998, was announced in a MAFF News Release on 5 February 1998 (50/89). Copies of these News Releases and the letters of appointment of Mr. Mills have been placed in the Library.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for (a) the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science, (b) the Veterinary Laboratories Agency, (c) the Pesticides Safety Directorate, (d) the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, (e) the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency and (f) the Meat Hygiene Service (i) the location of the headquarters and (ii) other buildings used by it; what are the number of staff and its wage costs of the staff employed by each organisation at each site; and what are the estimated total receipts from MAFF for each organisation in the current financial year. [34782]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 18 March 1998]: The Information on the Executive Agencies requested by the hon. Member are the responsibility of their Chief Executives. I have asked them to reply to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. John Swinney, dated 26 March 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on the number and wage cost of staff at the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA), together with the estimated total receipts from MAFF in the current year.

VLA headquarters is located at the Central Veterinary Laboratory (CVL) in Addlestone. Smaller laboratories are located throughout England, Wales and Scotland. The attached table provides the individual locations of these laboratories together with details of the staff numbers and wage costs.

The total receipts from MAFF in 1997/98 is estimated at £38.97 million, this includes payments from other MAFF agencies.

With regard to the second part of your question, the estimated total receipts from MAFF for the current financial year amount to £21.9 million.

Letter from J. M. Rutter to Mr. John Swinney, dated 26 March 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about the location of the headquarters and other buildings, the number and cost of staff employed and the estimated receipts from MAFF for the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD).

The VMD's headquarters is located at New Haw, Addlestone, Surrey, and there are no other sites. The current number of staff employed is 112, and the forecast of pay costs, including superannuation for the current financial year is £3,079,000. The estimated receipts from MAFF in the current financial year is £2,688,000.

Letter from Michael Finnigan to Mr. John Swinney, dated 26 March 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply on behalf of the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency to your question about the location of this Agency's headquarters and other buildings, our staff numbers, and annual salary bill.

The Headquarters of the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency is Nobel House, 17 Smith Square, London. The annual salary bill of the 24 FRCA staff located in this building is £691,000.

The location of other buildings used by the Agency, with staff numbers and annual salary bill, is:

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. John Swinney, dated 26 March 1998:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question concerning the location, number of staff and wage costs of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD).

PSD is located on a single site at the address below. No other buildings are occupied.

Mallard House
Kings Pool

PSD employs 200 staff, with a wage cost of £4.9 million. The estimated total receipts from MAFF for policy work undertaken in 1997/98 will be £4.95 million.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. John Swinney, dated 26 March 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food enquiring about the location of the headquarters and other buildings of the MHS; the number of staff and wage costs of the staff employed at each site and the estimated total receipts from MAFF for the MHS in the current financial year.

All of the offices of the MHS are based in government buildings. The MHS "rents" its accommodation space from the government department concerned. The headquarters of the MHS are in York where the Chief Executive of the MHS and the supporting functions of Operations, Finance, Human Resources and Information Technology are based. MHS services are managed by six Regional Offices located in Edinburgh, York, Wolverhampton, Cambridge, Cardiff and Taunton.

The estimated number of staff and the estimated gross pay costs for the year as at 31 March 1998 for MHS Headquarters and each Regional Office are as follows:

£000

	HQ	North	Central	S&E	S&W	Wales	Scotland
Staff	68	360	267	260	223	197	183
Pay Costs	1,357	7,832	5,574	6,066	4,972	4,489	4,292

The MHS is responsible for enforcing meat hygiene, inspection and animal welfare at slaughter legislation in licensed fresh meat premises in Great Britain. The majority of MHS Regional staff are Official Veterinary Surgeons and Meat Hygiene Inspectors who are based at licensed premises. A small team of managerial and administrative staff manage operations from each Regional Office.

The MHS is required to cover the full costs of providing its inspection service from its customers. The Agency's major customers are industry, core-MAFF and the Intervention Board. The MHS charges plant operators for the cost of providing its meat hygiene and inspection and animal welfare service. However, the MHS also carries out various controls in premises on behalf of MAFF and the Intervention Board. For MAFF, these concern mainly the enforcement of Specified Risk Material controls in licensed premises, the costs of which are currently met by government. The MHS's estimated receipts from MAFF for 1997/98 are approximately £20 million.

Pigs

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he plans to take to enforce paragraph 20 of Part 1 of Schedule 3 to the Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994 in respect of indoor-housed pigs; and if he will make a statement. [35542]

Mr. Morley: The State Veterinary Service carries out welfare inspections to monitor compliance with all aspects of the Welfare of Livestock Regulations 1994, including paragraph 20 of Part 1 of Schedule 3 relating to the welfare of pigs.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the European Commission's Scientific Veterinary Committee in its 1997 report relating to the tail-docking of pigs; and if he will make a statememt. [35848]

Mr. Morley: The EU Scientific Veterinary Committee report is the first stage of the review of Directive 91/630 on the welfare of pigs. We are now awaiting the Commission's proposals, based on the Committee's advice, on how the Directive should be revised. All the Committee's recommendations, and the Commission proposals, will need careful study and discussion with other Member States, before decisions are taken. We are already taking steps to remind the pig sector of the current legal requirement that tail docking should not be carried out routinely.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state his projections for the average level of net income per farm holding for (a) hill farmers, (b) dairy farmers and (c) cereal farmers at 1996 prices over the next three years. [35380]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have made no such projections and believe it is not possible to do so without making a series of other assumptions.

Dry Stone Walls

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he plans to take to promote the use of dry stone walls on farms. [36058]

Mr. Morley: Dry stone walls in good condition are an effective means of managing livestock as well as an attractive feature of the landscape. The Department pays grant aid through our agri-environment schemes to encourage the restoration of dry stone walls and thus promote their use.

Goats

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts about amending the Sheep and Goatmeat Regime to enable farmers in the UK to claim support for the raising of cashmere goats; and if he will make a statement. [36036]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have held no such discussions, nor have they any intention to do so. The purpose of the CAP regime for sheepmeat and goatmeat is to support the incomes of farmers producing those meats. In the United Kingdom, cashmere goats are kept primarily not for their meat but for their wool, which the European Union classifies as an industrial, rather than an agricultural product, and is therefore ineligible for support under the CAP.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what quantity of goatmeat was imported from New Zealand in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [36034]

Mr. Rooker: A total of 707 kg of New Zealand goatmeat was imported into the United Kingdom during 1997.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the demand for goatmeat in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [36035]

Mr. Rooker: Because no financial support is provided to UK producers of goatmeat, the Government do not attempt to forecast or monitor the development of this market.

Fisheries

Mr. Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the European Court of Justice has overruled paragraph 26 of case C-246/89 Commission v United Kingdom. [35916]

Mr. Morley: Paragraph 26 of the judgment of the European Court of Justice in case C-246/89 quotes Article 52 of the Treaty. The question of the Court overruling Article 52 of the Treaty does not arise.

Pesticides

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to secure a reduction in the use of pesticide by (a) bulk, (b) concentration and (c) acreage covered; and if he will make a statement. [36364]

Mr. Rooker: The Government aim to minimise the impact of pesticides on the environment. In isolation, the bulk, concentration or acreage sprayed are not precise measures of the impact of pesticides, particularly as they do not take account of the relative toxicity of the many different chemicals used as agricultural pesticides. Instead we are developing a range of environmental indicators, including pesticide indicators which aim to provide a more realistic measure of the impact of pesticides. I plan to issue initial proposals for consultation shortly.

Quarantine Establishments

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many establishments are licensed for quarantine purposes for each species of animal; how many individual places they hold; and what was the throughput of each establishment in the last year for which information is held. [36392]

Mr. Rooker: The number of authorised quarantine premises in England together with the number of individual units they hold and the throughput of each premises in 1997 are set out in the table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many disability benefits claimants have had their benefits withdrawn following knowledge by the Benefits Agency of their smuggling and bootlegging of tobacco and alcohol activities; and how much money has been saved in each year since January 1993 and in each month in 1997 and 1998; [31518]

(2) how many claimants have had benefits stopped following knowledge by the Benefits Agency of their smuggling and bootlegging of tobacco and alcohol activities; and how much money has been saved in each year since January 1993 and in each month in 1997 and 1998. [31517]

Mr. Denham: Tackling fraud and abuse is a top priority for the Government. Questions on Benefit Agency operational matters are the responsibility of the Chief Executive, Peter Mathison. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Riggs to Mrs. Jacqui Lait, dated 25 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about how many disability benefits claimants have had their benefits withdrawn/stopped following knowledge by the Benefits Agency (BA) of their smuggling and bootlegging activities of tobacco and alcohol; and how much money has been saved in each year since January 1993 and in each month in 1997 and 1998. As Mr Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

The BA Ports Project in conjunction with HM Customs and Excise are becoming increasingly involved in tackling bootleggers at Dover and plan to deploy more staff into this developing area of work.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Agency routinely collates and reports performance across all benefit types. Performance since 1992/3 is shown on the attached table.

It is not possible to identify whether any claimants of any particular benefit have had their benefit or benefits stopped or withdrawn because of bootlegging or smuggling activities.

During 1996/97 you may interested to know, that the BA ports project made weekly benefit savings totalling £704,418.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits (Administration)

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average time taken for claimants to receive benefit; [35782]

(2) what is the average time taken for claimants to receive incapacity benefits. [35783]

Mr. Field: The administration of Social Security benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mrs. Ann Cryer, dated 25 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what is the average time taken for claimants to receive benefit and receive Incapacity Benefits.

The information is not available in the format requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information is available for the average actual clearance time for Social Security benefits which represents the average length of time from receipt of the application to the date of the decision. Such information as is available is shown in the attached table.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Pensions

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps she (a) has taken and (b) will take to ensure that changes to national insurance contributions contained in the Budget will not reduce the rebate for contracted out occupational pensions. [36359]

Mr. Denham: The changes to the structure of the National Insurance system announced in the Budget by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will ensure that it is simpler, fairer and more employment friendly.

It was recognised that the change to employer contributions could affect the rebates. At present, employers have a rebate on earnings above the lower earnings limit (LEL) up to the upper earnings limit (UEL). We will ensure that employers will still receive a rebate on those earnings even though they will not necessarily pay National Insurance Contributions (NICs) in respect of them.

For those with contracted-out occupational schemes, we will be putting down some minor amendments to the Pension Schemes Act 1993 in the Social Security Bill which is currently before Parliament. This will enable a rebate to be paid on earnings between the LEL and the new level at which employer contributions commence. The provisions will also allow employers to deduct this rebate from their overall NICs bill. This will ensure that, as far as the employer's rebate is concerned, the position remains unchanged.

There will be no change to the current arrangements for appropriate personal pensions. The rebate arrangements do not differentiate between employee and employer contributions. The rebate is paid on earnings between the LEL and the UEL and this will continue to be the case.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer made it clear that the benefit position of employees would be maintained and these proposals meet that commitment.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents have taken advantage to date of the maintenance bonus scheme on return to work; and how much has been spent on the scheme in each year for which it has been in operation. [36228]

Mr. Field: The receipt of reliable and realistic levels of child maintenance gives lone mothers additional help in moving off Income Support and into work. The Child Maintenance Bonus provides extra cash help towards the costs associated with starting work, thus giving lone mothers and their children direct benefit from the maintenance paid and contributing to the Government's welfare to work programme.

The Child Maintenance Bonus was introduced on the 7 April 1997. As at the end of February 1998, some 4,100 awards of the bonus had been made of which around 3,900 were to lone parents.

In total, around £500,000 was paid through the scheme between April 1997 and the end of February 1998.

Mental Health Act Commission

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will amend Regulation 171f of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 to enable those in receipt of incapacity benefit to serve without penalty on the Mental Health Act Commission. [36366]

Mr. Denham: The Government believe that work is the best form of welfare for people of working age. As part of the New Deal for Disabled People, we intend to test out a range of options to find out what are the most effective ways to help people with disabilities and long-term health problems to move back into full or part-time work. This will enable us to consider what changes are needed to the current system to help sick and disabled people who want to work to make the most of their abilities. We will consult fully on any proposals for national changes.

Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many of the dossiers examined by the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board since 1992 relate to people with a hearing impairment; [36224]

(2) how many studies commissioned for the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board related to the needs of severely and profoundly deaf people; and how many recommendations from these reports have been implemented by her Department; [36225]

(3) how many members of the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board are (a) deaf and (b) have a professional specialism in deafness. [36226]

Mr. Denham: Since 1992, the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board has examined over 5,000 cases covering a wide range of disabilities. No statistics are kept detailing the number of cases examined where hearing impairment was a disability.

To date, the Board has not undertaken any studies specifically related to the needs of severely and profoundly deaf people, although it has been commissioned to undertake a study on deafness in children and young adults. Work will start later this year.

A previous member of the Board had expertise in this area; at present, there are no members of the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board who are deaf and have a professional specialism in deafness. The Board will be running a recruitment exercise later this year to appoint a member with direct experience of deafness.

Child Support Agency

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when she intends to publish a new framework document for the Child Support Agency. [36829]

Mr. Denham: We expect the Child Support Agency to provide an efficient and effective service to all its clients throughout the child support assessment process. There are signs that the Agency's performance has improved since its early days, but there is still a long way to go. We are, therefore, looking for substantial and sustained operational improvements—in particular in getting more maintenance paid, reducing the backlog and improving customer service.

The Agency's current Framework Document expires at the end of this financial year. However we have been looking closely at all aspects of the Child Support Scheme to see where improvements can be made and we aim to bring forward a consultation paper on our proposals by the Summer. In the meantime, we have decided to roll forward the Agency's current Framework Document until the future direction of the Child Support scheme is clear—a revised version will then be published.

TREASURY

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35118]

Mr. Gordon Brown: The only major planned Ministerial hospitality in April or May is for the G7/8 Finance Ministers meeting which will be funded by the Cabinet Office.

Correspondence

Mr. Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters the Financial Secretary has sent to hon. Members during the last two months; and how many she has personally signed. [34892]

Dawn Primarolo: I have sent a total of 2,450 letters to hon. Members since 1 January. The number of replies I have signed personally is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Excess Votes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number of excess votes for each of the last 10 years, indicating the amount and the Department responsible in each case. [36168]

Mr. Darling: The table shows details of excess Votes in each of the last ten years. Further details on the reasons for the excesses can be found in the Statement of Excesses for each year available in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Civil Servants

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of Civil Service staff of grade 5 and above within her Department (a) have spent their entire civil service career within her Department, (b) have had secondments to (i) the private sector and (ii) other departments and (c) have come from other departments. [26037]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 28 January 1998]: The information for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments is as follows:

percentage

	Northern Ireland civil service staff	Home civil service staff
(a)	98	6
(b)(i)	1	0
(b)(ii)	0.5	44
(c)	0.5	50

[1] Figures for Northern Ireland civil service staff cover the last five years and could be provided for earlier years only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision her Department makes for child care facilities for staff; what subsidy is provided for (a) nursery places and (b) holiday play schemes; if she will list the organisations used by her Department for child care; and if child care vouchers are made available to staff. [30016]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 19 February 1998]: In the Northern Ireland Civil Service, current policy is that Departments can contribute to staff child care costs where this is justified on value for money grounds. The following subsidies are provided:

(a) The Department of the Environment provides a subsidy of 35% of the weekly fees, up to a maximum of £30 towards the cost of placing a child in a registered nursery of the employee's choice. The Child Support Agency also provide a subsidy of £30 per week for placement in a registered nursery. The Department of Education has been running an emergency child care subsidy scheme for a trial period of one year form May 1997. This provides for the actual cost of emergency child care by a registered provider for a maximum of 2 days on any one occasion, limited to 4 occasions in a year.

(b) The Department of Finance and Personnel provides a subsidy of 50% of accommodation costs and 40% of staff costs for 8 holiday play schemes.

In the Northern Ireland office a child care voucher scheme for London-based staff provides a contribution of £100 per month for pre-school child care costs. A similar scheme is being introduced for Belfast-based staff.

As part of the proposals for the National Child Care Strategy my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary has asked the Inter-Departmental Group on Early Years to consider the child care provision made by Government Departments in Northern Ireland for their staff.

NHS Administrative Practices

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total saving accrued since 1 May as a result of changes to administrative practices in the health service in (a) primary care, (b) secondary care and (c) the HSS Executive. [35696]

Mr. Worthington: The information requested is not available.

In accordance with the Government's commitment to reduce bureaucracy and abolish the internal market, guidance was issued by the HSS Executive to all HSS bodies, setting out immediate changes to be made to internal market arrangements to streamline cashflows and redirect resources to patient care. Although there are a number of examples of good practice which have been implemented throughout the HPSS, in compliance with this guidance, it is not possible at this time to quantify the level of savings resulting specifically from these changes.

However, savings of £2 million per annum resulting from a reduction in management costs from 1997–98 will amount to £10 million over the lifetime of this parliament and officials are currently considering further reductions in management cost.

The forthcoming consultation document on the future organisation of the HPSS, which is due to issue shortly, sets out proposals for the abolition of the internal market which will redirect additional resources, saved by abolishing wasteful management structures, towards patient care.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what has been the (a) revenue and (b) capital expenditure in each of the last five years in (i) cash and (ii) real terms on social services in Northern Ireland; [35733]

(2) what has been the (a) revenue and (b) capital expenditure in each of the last five years in (i) cash and (ii) real terms on health services in Northern Ireland. [35732]

Mr. Worthington: As health and personal social services (HPSS) are provided on an integrated basis in Northern Ireland, it is not possible to break HPSS expenditure figures down between spend on health and personal social services. Accordingly, in terms of total HPSS expenditure (excluding EC Peace Moneys) the information requested is as follows:

Year		Cash	Real Terms Cash
1992–93	Revenue	1,206,197	1,332,844
	Capital	49,186	54,350
1993–94	Revenue	1,286,162	1,381,069
	Capital	51,775	55,596
1994–95	Revenue	1,377,703	1,457,409
	Capital	44,834	47,428
1995–96	Revenue	1,479,179	1,522,510
	Capital	41,775	42,999
1996–97	Revenue	1,510,538	1,510,538
	Capital	40,647	40,647

Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what targets have been set for the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency during 1998–99. [37069]

Mr. Paul Murphy: For 1998–99, the following performance targets have been set:

	Target
Vehicle test appointments average waiting time	21 days
Driving test appointments average waiting time	31 days
Productivity (vehicle testing)	18.5 units per man per day
Productivity (driver testing)	7.98 units per man per day
Faulty inspections	Not to exceed 0.01% of tests conducted
Level of complaints about booking arrangements	Less than 0.15% of applications received
Level of complaints about the conduct of tests	Less than 0.15% of applications received
Level of customer satisfaction with booking arrangements	At least 85% plus or minus 2% within the range of sampling error
Level of customer satisfaction with test procedures	At least 92% plus or minus 2% within the range of sampling error
Level of compliance with Theory Test Service Standards	92%

Detainees

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she intends to publish Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's Fifth Annual report as Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres. [37070]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have today arranged for copies of Sir. Louis Blom-Cooper's Annual Report for 1997 to be placed in the Library.

I am grateful to the Commissioner and his Deputy, Dr. Bill Norris, for their Report. I note that for the fifth successive year they have found no cause for concern about the care and treatment of detainees held in the custody of uniformed officers of the RUC.

I shall study carefully the recommendations which Sir Louis Blom-Cooper has made.

Social Fund

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the Northern Ireland Social Fund discretionary budget will be for 1998–99. [37071]

Mr. Worthington: I am pleased to announce that the Social Fund gross discretionary budget for 1998/99 will be £40.55 million. £9.76 million will be allocated to grants; £30.69 million to loans and £0.1 million will be held as a contingency reserve. The new allocations represent an increase of £0.21 million over the gross budget set at April 1997.

Details of the individual District budget allocations, together with a note explaining the basis on which they have been made, have been placed in the Library today.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Regional Development Agencies Bill

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what environmental assessment his Department has made of the Regional Development Agencies Bill; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [35644]

Mr. Caborn: Chapter 8 of the White Paper "Building Partnerships for Prosperity" sets out the approach we intend regional development agencies to take to environment and sustainable development issues. The Regional Development Agencies Bill gives effect to this by providing the appropriate legislative framework.

English Partnerships

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the English Partnerships funding allocations, broken down by Government office region, have been each year since their inception. [35911]

Mr. Caborn: English Partnerships became fully operational from April 1994. Its total expenditure, in £ million, on its development programme, excluding expenditure on the Greenwich Peninsula, over the 3 years since its inception has been as follows:

£ million

Year	Expenditure
1994–95	225.4
1995–96	236.7
1996–97	235.0

English Partnerships' regional offices are not currently coterminous with those of the Government Offices for the Regions. Spend is therefore not recorded by Government Office Region.

English Partnerships expenditure by region, excluding Greenwich, is however recorded as follows:

£ million

Region	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
North-East	47.7	34.3	31.8
North-West	52.9	52.0	50.4
Yorks & Humber	43.8	55.0	40.5
Midlands	63.4	58.0	67.8
South-East	10.3	25.6	36.0
South-West	7.3	11.8	8.5
Total	225.4	236.7	235.0

Rural Development Commission

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the Rural Development Commission funding allocations have been for each year since 1988, broken down by Government office region. [35912]

Angela Eagle: Approved grant in aid provision for the Rural Development Commission (RDC) for the years 1988–89 to 1997–98 is set out in the table. The regional allocations made by the RDC cannot be broken down by Government Office region because the RDC's regional structure does not reflect the Government Office regional structure.

£000

Year	Approved grant in aid provision
1988–89	30,589
1989–90	31,237
1990–91	27,043
1991–92	16,267
1992–93	11,969
1993–94	21,342
1994–95	31,694
1995–96	38,980
1996–97	39,677
1997–98	40,064

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the future of the Rural Development Commission. [37148]

Mr. Prescott: The Rural Development Commission and the Countryside Commission are to be merged to form a new body that will play a central role in the Government's policy of developing a sustainable, living, countryside, while recognising the interdependence of urban and rural areas. The new body will pursue an integrated approach to conserving and enhancing the countryside as an essential resource for the benefit of this and future generations and meeting the distinctive needs of rural areas, those who live in, work in or visit them. The Chairman and Board members will be chosen for the contribution they can make to this.

The new organisation represents an initial outcome from the joint DETR/MAFF Comprehensive Spending Review of countryside and rural policy, underway since last summer. Further announcements covering the whole range of issues considered in the review will be made in due course. I am confident that this move towards integration will be welcomed by people and organisations with an interest in rural policy.

The new body will inherit some of its responsibilities from its predecessors, but will also have a fresh mandate. It will:

- give advice to Government, local authorities, the new Regional Development Agencies, and others on all matters relating to conservation and the sustainable development of the countryside for the benefit of all who live or work in it, visit or value it;
- give advice to Government on how to secure a rural dimension to its wider policies; take countrywide initiatives on, and promote the enhancement of, the natural beauty and amenity of the countryside and to encourage people's access to and enjoyment of it;
- take countrywide initiatives on, and promote a living and sustainable countryside to meet the economic and social needs of people living and working there.

The body's national advisory function will continue to be independent, and based on expertise and experience, informed and refined by research, top quality experimentation, local advisory work, programme delivery and pilot schemes. The countrywide initiatives and promotion work will be centred on building local and regional partnerships and delivering real benefits to the countryside and local rural communities, as well as providing for the needs of visitors. The work of the new body will be guided by the principles of sustainable development and the importance of an integrated approach to rural policy, against a background of moves towards an integrated rural policy across the EU.

Both Commissions support the concept of a new, merged organisation and are engaged in some initial analysis of how the particular strengths of each body could be retained and developed following the merger. This provisional work has already identified a number of complementary functions in the two bodies which could be strengthened and streamlined through the merger, including their respective work on: housing and transport in the countryside, farming and dissemination of information.

The new body will work closely with Local Authorities, the rural voluntary sector, the Regional Development Agencies—which are taking over the rural regeneration programmes of the Rural Development Commission—and with Government bodies responsible for historical heritage, agriculture, forestry, nature conservation, recreation, tourism, environmental protection and rural services to produce well thought out, integrated solutions to the problems raised in developing a living countryside. This is important because we recognise that the beauty of the English countryside is only one side of the coin. We must value this great resource and, at the same time, strengthen the rural economy and tackle social exclusion which can be hidden within it.

The able and dedicated staff of both the Countryside Commission and the Rural Development Commission will form the core of the new body, just as those staff transferring to the Regional Development Agencies with the responsibility for the rural regeneration programme will be a valuable asset to those bodies. The current Commissioners—like their predecessors—have wide ranging expertise and I hope that many of them will be prepared to make this available to the new organisation.

Rural England faces challenges of economic and social change and European developments such as reforms of the Common Agricultural Policy and Structural Funds, against the background of increased public demand for the protection of the countryside and wider access to it. I am confident that the new organisation, integrating both Commissions' existing responsibilities but with a refocused remit, will be an effective champion for rural England and the English Countryside.

Housing

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will require local authority housing services to include an empty homes strategy in their published housing strategies. [35894]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities are expected to produce a housing strategy covering all aspects of housing as they have responsibility towards their tenants and residents to make sure that the best use is made of all housing in their area. This strategy is used as part of the assessment on which the allocation of capital resources is based. Within this strategy local authorities should consider whether empty property in the local area can be brought back into use to meet local needs and set out how this will be achieved.

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he intends to promote the availability of low-cost houses for rent in appropriate numbers in rural areas. [36057]

Mr. Raynsford: Through the Capital Receipts Initiative we are making an extra £800 million available to local authorities in 1997/98 and 1998/99 which they will be investing in improvements to existing housing and the provision of new social lettings in both urban and rural areas in partnership with Registered Social Landlords.

Guidance issued by my Department to local authorities on the preparation of their housing strategies highlights the need to identify and prioritise rural housing needs alongside other housing needs in their areas. It is for local authorities to set priorities which guide the allocation of both the Housing Corporation's and their own funding for new social housing in their areas. However, for 1998/99 we have asked the Housing Corporation to aim for around 3.4% of the new social lettings approved under the Approved Development Programme to be in small rural villages with a population of 3,000 or less.

The rural "exceptions" policy enables local planning authorities to grant consent for sites which would not normally be released for development, to provide low-cost housing for local needs. In addition, our planning and affordable housing policy enables local planning authorities to seek the inclusion of an element of affordable housing in new housing developments. We have recently consulted on changes to the policy which will further assist the supply of affordable housing in rural areas.

The Rural Development Commission also plays a key role in promoting low-cost housing in rural areas. In particular their Rural Enablers scheme aims to bring together local communities, local authorities, housing associations, landowners and developers to facilitate the development of social housing.

Slaughterhouse Waste

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what regulations govern the disposal of slaughterhouse waste on agricultural land. [36063]

Angela Eagle: Activities involving the recovery or disposal of waste are subject to control under the amended EC Framework Directive on waste. The waste management licensing system established under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994 is the main means by which the requirements of the Framework Directive have been transposed into national law. Under this system, anyone who deposits, recovers or disposes of waste must do so in compliance with the conditions of a waste management licence or with the conditions of an exception from waste management licensing.

The speading of waste on land which results in benefit to agriculture or ecological improvement is classified as a waste recovery operation under the Directive and an exemption from licensing for certain types of waste has been provided in Regulation 17 and paragraph 7 of Schedule 3 to the 1994 Regulations. One of the types of waste covered by the exemption is blood and gut contents from abattoirs. We intend to review the exemption in the light of the findings of a research project which is due to be completed at the end of April. I indicated on 13 March 1998, Official Report, column 928, some of the issues I would like to see addressed in the review of the exemption.

The carcases of all BSE suspect cattle are directly incinerated. Commission Regulation No. 716/96 requires that cattle slaughtered under the Over Thirty Months/Scheme are either incinerated or rendered and destroyed. No blood from either group of cattle is being spread on land.

Departmental Employees (Scotland)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department; and where those staff are located. [36248]

Angela Eagle: At 1 March 1998, my Department employed 650 permanent staff in Scotland. The table gives the numbers of staff in each location.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan; [36646]

(2) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36658]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since the "Guide to Green Transport Plans" was circulated to all Departments in September last year, my Department has been working on a pilot project to prepare Green Transport Plans for three headquarters buildings. The first findings are due to be received shortly.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if the meetings of Green Ministers on (a) 30 July 1997 and (b) 18 December 1997 discussed the Green Transport Plan; and what conclusions were reached; [36633]

(2) what assessment he has made of the success of the Green Transport Plan in respect of the implementation of its recommendations by departments; [36634]

(3) what steps he is taking to secure implementation across Government of the recommendations in the Green Transport Plan; what monitoring of departments he has put in place; and if he will make a statement. [36635]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Green Transport Plans were discussed at the meetings of Green Ministers on 30 July and 18 December. All Departments were given copies of the "Guide to Green Transport Plans" in September last year and asked to prepare green transport plans. Discussions are proceeding on setting appropriate deadlines for producing these plans. Progress in drawing up and implementing plans is being monitored at meetings of Green Ministers.

Royal Ordnance, Chorley

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the suitability of the Royal Ordnance Factory site in Chorley as the location for the headquarters of the planned Regional Development Agency for the North West. [36515]

Mr. Caborn: Ministers have made no assessment of potential sites for the headquarters of the Regional Development Agency for the North West. This will be a matter for the RDA Board, when appointed later this year.

New Deal

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when information will be published about the location of the pathfinder areas for the New Deal for Communities; and if he will make a statement. [36502]

Angela Eagle: Detailed proposals for the New Deal for Communities are now being developed by the Deputy Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, working closely with other key Ministers and the Social Exclusion Unit. No decisions have yet been taken about the location of the pathfinder areas, or on the timing of any further announcements.

Radioactive Waste

Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans the Environment Agency has for the disposal of Amersham's radioactive waste generated at Harwell, following its decision not to transport it to Cardiff; and if he will make a statement. [36510]

Angela Eagle: I understand that on 24 March the Environment Agency granted authorisation for the transfer of intermediate-level radioactive waste from Amersham's Harwell site to the company's site at Cardiff.

Great Western Trains

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the performance of Great Western Trains in terms of (a) punctuality and (b) reliability in relation to its Charter targets in each year since it was awarded its franchise; and how much has been paid by Great Western in penalties, and on what occasions, for failing to meet such standards. [36732]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Great Western's performance details appear in the Franchising Director's quarterly bulletins which are in the Library of the House. Great Western have not paid any financial penalties for poor performance as there is no incentive regime in their Franchise Agreement. Following the offer by FirstGroup PLC to take over the franchise, the Franchising Director has agreed a regime of fixed penalties for Great Western in respect of cancellations and delays over 20 minutes.

Local Government Finance

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the consultation papers arising from the local government finance review will be published. [37050]

Ms Armstrong: Three consulting papers will be published on Monday 30 March: Improving local financial accountability, Business Rates, and Capital Finance.

Finance is the third element in the Government's programme to modernise local government. Many of the ideas floated in the finance papers draw on our earlier consultation papers on renewing local democracy and introducing best value. The finance papers include options for giving councils more discretion over local tax and spending decisions by ending crude and universal capping and providing a new power to set a local business rate.

Copies of the consultation papers will be sent to every MP and placed in the Library.

Challenge Fund

Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will make an announcement about the successful bids under Round Four of the Single Regeneration Budget Challenge Fund. [37051]

Mr. Caborn: The detailed list of successful bids under Round 4 of the SRB Challenge Fund will be published on Monday, 30 March. In addition, brief descriptions of the successful bids in their region will be sent to hon. Members. Full copies of the bid documents for successful bids will be held for inspection at Government Offices for the Regions.

I am today placing in the Library of the House summary information about Round 4, which operated under revised guidance issued by the Government in July 1997. Subject to finalising the details of the list of successful bids, to the availability of resources, and to the satisfactory agreement and implementation of Delivery Plans, the Government intend to make available financial support for some 120 successful bids, which include proposals to address key priorities such as social exclusion, education, employment and training, community safety and prevention of drug misuse.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 26 February 1998, Official Report, column 332, what further response he has had from London and Continental Railways in respect of revised financing proposals for the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [37147]

Mr. Prescott: I have received a progress report and further developed proposals from London and Continental Railways in conjunction with other companies, notably Railtrack, invited by the consortium to participate in trying to take forward the Channel Tunnel Rail Link under the existing Development Agreement. The parties' latest report on progress makes material inroads into the £1.2 billion additional subsidy which was sought by LCR in January, and which I rejected as unacceptable. LCR have proposed a transport operator to take responsibility for Eurostar services, and that the construction of the Rail Link be in two phases. These proposals do not yet meet the Government's requirements, a view which is accepted by LCR and by Railtrack. Both companies agree that further significant improvements can be achieved in each of three key areas: reducing the additional cost to the taxpayer; increasing the extent to which risk is retained in the private sector; and establishing an incentive sufficient to ensure the construction of the whole of the Rail Link.

I am satisfied that sufficient progress has been made, and is in prospect, for the cure period available under the CTRL Development Agreement to be extended to 29 May 1998, in order to conclude a satisfactory agreement if one is achievable.

PRIME MINISTER

Children Act 1989

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements he has made to transfer responsibility for day care policy under the Children Act 1989 from the Department of Health to the Department for Education and Employment. [37149]

The Prime Minister: The Government set out before the election their intention to transfer responsibility for policy and the regulation of day care under Sections 18 and 19 and Part X of the Children Act from the Department of Health to the Department for Education and Employment. I am able to announce today that this transfer will take place on 1 April 1998. We recognise that it is increasingly difficult to make a distinction between day care and education, and we must integrate the two if we are to meet fully the needs of young children and their parents. The Department of Health will retain responsibility for the provision of day care for children in need under Section 18(1) and 18(5) as part of family support services, as well as other social care duties, such as child protection, outside these parts of the Act. This transfer of responsibilities between central Government Departments does not directly affect the way local authorities may organise their functions. The responsibility for services and regulation through the Children Act remains a function of the Social Services Committee under existing statutory requirements but this may change as policy in this area develops.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Radiotherapy Injuries (Compensation)

Ms Perham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what have been the legal aid costs in the last three years arising from the cases of women seeking compensation for injuries caused by radiotherapy treatment after breast cancer. [35708]

Mr. Hoon: Over the last three years, a total of £1,727,812 has been paid in legal aid costs under a contract between the Legal Aid Board and the firm of solicitors representing women seeking compensation for injuries caused by radiotherapy treatment after breast cancer. The final costs will not be known until the cases are finished and the court's decision is known.

Small Claims

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases have been taken to the small claims courts in each of the last five years; how many judgments in favour of the claimants were made in each year as a result of these cases; and in how many cases in each year the orders have been successfully enforced. [36340]

Mr. Hoon: The figures requested are as follows:

Year	Cases heard	Judgment for plaintiff
1993	105,843	—
1994	87,885	—
1995	88,170	—
1996	94,050	[1]81,720
1997	97,813	[1]80,680

[1] Figures are derived from a three month sample.

Figures on judgments for plaintiffs before 1996 and on successfully enforced cases are not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36668]

Mr. Hoon: A publication date for the introduction of a green commuter plan has not yet been finalised. Raising staff awareness of the cost of the journey to work, and developing a package of measures to encourage the use of alternatives, forms part of our revised Environment Strategy and Green Transport Plan about which we are currently consulting.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan. [36639]

Mr. Hoon: No specific changes have been made to our transport arrangements, following receipt of the Guide to Green Transport Plan. The guide has assisted the Department to draft a Green Transport Plan about which we are currently consulting.

Magistrates

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 450, on magistrates courts, when he expects the Justices' Chief Executive for Derbyshire MCC to write to the hon. Member for West Derbyshire. [36733]

Mr. Hoon: I have been told that a letter will be sent today.

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases have been taken to immigration appeals tribunals in each of the last five years; and what has been the administrative cost of the appeal tribunals system in each of the last five years. [36341]

Mr. Hoon: The number of cases[1] which have been taken to the Immigration Appeal Tribunal in each of the last five years is:

1993–94	6,551
1994–95	[2]7,792
1995–96	8,549
1996–97	11,720
1997–98	[3]13,368

It is not possible to separate the administrative costs of the Immigration Appeal Tribunal alone but I can provide the following information for the Immigration Appellate Authority as a whole:

1994–95	6,965,344
1995–96	8,404,699
1996–97	11,388,311
1997–98	[3]12,513,282

[1] These figures relate to initial applications. Only a proportion of this figure will be allowed and will then proceed to full hearing as an 'appeal'.
[2] This is an estimate as accurate historical data are not available for this year.
[3] Projected figure.

Information for 1993–94 is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Conferences

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the conferences held by his Department since 1 May 1997, giving in each case the (a) purpose and (b) estimated cost. [27794]

Mr. Hoon: The conferences held by this Department since 1 May, or which we have funded or part funded, or have otherwise helped to organise are shown in the table.

Conference	Purpose	Estimated costs (£)
Anglo-German Judicial Conference on Family Law 18 to 20 May 1997. The conference was jointly organised by the Cardiff Law School, the President of the Family Division's International Committee, the German Federal Ministry of Justice and the Lord Chancellor's Department.	To improve mutual understanding of the operation of each country's legal system particularly in the area of child abduction and discussion of legal problems of mutual interest. There were 53 participants including judges, lawyers, academics and judges from both Germany and the UK.	2,700 (contribution)

Conference	Purpose	Estimated costs (£)
Fast Track Cost Conference 9 July 1997	To inform Sir Peter Middleton's Review of Civil Justice and Legal Aid Proposals	482
Anglo-German Judicial Exchange 22 to 25 September 1997	This is part of a series of conferences organised for senior judges to obtain an improved understanding and awareness of the laws, procedures and institutions of each country and to discuss the relevance of comparative law and comparative legal procedure to judicial work. Eight judges and three academics from each country participated in the conference. This conference follows one held in Germany in September 1993. Another conference is being organised in Germany for 1999. The host national pays all the conference costs.	14,000
International Conference on Administrative Justice 26–28 November 1997 Organised by the University of Bristol	To provide a forum for the discussion of the broad range of issues relevant to administrative justice	15,000 (contribution)
Minority Lawyers Conference-organised with the Bar and Law Society 29 November 1997	To promote equality of opportunity for ethnic minority lawyers and to discuss issues related to this.	No cost to the Department

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what date has been set for the release of the 1996 drug arrest and seizure statistics. [36482]

Mr. George Howarth: It is hoped to publish the Home Office "Statistics of Drug Seizures and Offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1996" during the first half of April 1998.

Young Offender Institutions

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the total resources allocated for education services to (b) the average population in and (c) the age range of those held in each young offender institution in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [35344]

Ms Quin: Male Young Offender Institutions hold offenders aged from 15 to 20 years of age. There will be some inmates in such institutions aged 21 who are waiting for transfer to adult establishments or who are nearing release so that transfer to an adult establishment is not worthwhile.

The average populations of each Young Offender Institution, and the total amounts spent through the education contract on the purchase of education services and education materials, in each of the last three years, are given in the table.

The Young Offender Institutions at Guys Marsh, Moorland, Prescoed and Reading are or were run jointly with adult establishments. Education expenditure on young offenders is not available as a separate figure.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted 15-year-olds were removed from young offenders' institutions to secure units after being reviewed under Paragraph 20 of the Prison Office Circular 38/92 in each of the last three years. [35607]

Ms Quin: This information is not recorded centrally. It is hoped that a new data system will be instituted to allow the production of this and similar information in the future.

Bristol Prison

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of HM Prison Bristol as a Category A prison; what assessment he has made of the impact of the prison on local residential neighbourhoods; and what consultation was carried out with local residents. [35750]

Ms Quin: On 15 January 1997, it was announced that Bristol prison would continue to have category A remand prisoners and would be one of eight prisons in England and Wales with improved security to be used for this purpose. This decision represented no change in the status of the prison and was not the subject of consultation with local residents. However, related building work was the subject of applications for planning clearance and the governor held an informal meeting with local councillors to explain these proposals before the applications were granted. Subsequently, concerns were raised by local residents and these have been addressed by the Prison Service through the governor by means of a public meeting, visits to the prison by residents, visits to residents in their homes and by consultation with the local residents' group and others. Modifications to the building work have been made as a result of this consultation, which continues.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what special arrangements are made at HM Prison Bristol in relation to its proximity to local schools; and if he will make a statement. [35751]

Ms Quin: There is a primary school which has been situated across the road from Bristol Prison since the turn of the century. An infants and a nursery school, under the same management, are situated a little further away. The prison staff have long maintained very close relations with the schools and senior staff meet regularly with the headmaster to discuss and resolve any problems that might arise. The prison has a "good neighbour" policy towards the schools and co-operates in a number of schemes for the pupils' benefit. At a recent public meeting, the headmaster praised the attitude of the prison towards his schools and emphasised the excellent rapport between them. The police have rescheduled court escort arrangements to avoid, whenever possible, times when schoolchildren might be on the local streets.

Women's Refuges

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what financial help has been given by his Department towards the establishment and running of women's refuges in the Greater London area in each of the last three years; [36146]

(2) if he will list the number of women's refuges in each London borough. [36152]

Mr. Michael: Information on the number of refuges is not routinely collected. However, in 1995 the then Department of the Environment commissioned Women's Aid Federation (England) to undertake a census and their information relating to the London Boroughs from this census is in the table.

Refuges are generally funded not from central Government but from rents, charitable sources, local authority housing and social services payments. In London, the London Boroughs Grants Unit may provide financial help and, where London Boroughs identify the development of refuges as a priority, Housing Corporation capital and revenue resources can contribute to building and housing management costs. The Home Office does not hold funds for the support of such refuges and no such grants have been made over the last three years.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan; [36648]

(2) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36665]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". The Home Office has started to consider how to respond to its recommendations.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the funding of complainant aid work by the Commission for Racial Equality. [36604]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have received five letters from individuals and one signed by twelve people, arguing that the funding should continue.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held recently with the Commission for Racial Equality regarding the funding of complainant aid work. [36605]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have held no discussions on this issue, which I understand is currently being looked at by the Commission.

Rape

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures exist for those falsely accused of rape to pursue compensation. [36421]

Mr. Michael: The Government are prepared under certain specified circumstances to pay compensation to those who have been wrongfully convicted of or charged with rape, or any other crime. There is no automatic entitlement to such compensation, but all applications are considered, first under the provisions of section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, and then, if those requirements are not met, under the ex-gratia arrangements announced by the then Home Secretary in his statement on 29 November 1985, Official Report, columns 689–90. My right hon. Friend announced on 17 June 1997, Official Report, column 99, that he would continue to be bound by those arrangements. In addition. In addition, persons who have grounds for an action for unlawful arrest or malicious prosecution have a remedy in the civil courts against the person or authority responsible.

Freemasonry

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his proposals require that police officers involved in a police complaints investigation must register membership of the Freemasons. [35926]

Mr. Michael: We will consider such detailed matters, in consultation with the police associations, as part of the work on implementing the policy on declaration and registration of membership of the freemasons by those serving in, or seeking appointment to, the relevant parts of the criminal justice system. My right hon. Friend announced this to the Home Affairs Committee on 17 February 1998.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will instruct the Lottery Regulator to investigate the ergonomic design of lottery ticket machines issuing lottery tickets to customers of Camelot, with particular reference to the absence of a visual display that can be seen by the customer at the point of sale; [36078]

(2) what assessment he has made of the means by which the numbers on lucky dip option tickets are selected; and if he will make a statement; [36080]

(3) if he will request the Lottery Regulator to investigate the method by which Camelot issues lucky dip tickets to customers, with special reference to allowing for verbal commission of tickets. [36079]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 24 March 1998]: I have asked the Acting Director-General of the National Lottery to consider the issues my hon. Friend has raised and to write to me. Once I have received his reply I will write to my hon. Friend and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the initiatives to be paid for from the New Opportunities Fund and the amounts they will receive during the lifetime of the current National Lottery operating licence; [36065]

(2) how much money from the New Opportunities Fund will be used to fund the national childcare strategy during the lifetime of the current National Lottery licence. [36066]

Mr. Chris Smith: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the National Lottery Bill, the first three initiatives to be supported by the New Opportunities Fund will be information and communications technology training for teachers and librarians, including creation of content, healthy living centres and out of school hours activities, including childcare. As my hon. Friend Lord McIntosh announced on Second Reading of the National Lottery Bill on 18 December 1997, Official Report, House of Lords, columns 729–37, funds will be allocated as follows:

£300 million for information and communications technology training for teachers and librarians, including £50 million for creation of content, by 2001;

£200 million for healthy living centres by 2001, with a further £100 million thereafter; and £300 million for out of school hours activities by 2001, with a further £100 million thereafter. Of this £400 million, £180 million will support out of school hours learning activities and, as part of the national childcare strategy, £200 million will support out of school childcare and £20 million will support integrated childcare and learning schemes.

Great Britain Sports Council

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the (a) location of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) number of staff based at the head office of the Great Britain Sports Council, the percentage of total staff based (i) at head office, (ii) in London and (iii) in Scotland and the percentage of salary and running costs incurred in (1) London and (2) Scotland. [36116]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 25 March 1998]: The United Kingdom Sports Council (UKSC) assumed the UK-wide responsibilities of the Great Britain Sports Council on 1 January 1997. The information requested is as follows: (a) London; (b) £0.991 million in 1997–98

(forecast outturn); (c) £1,037 million in 1997–98 (forecast outturn); and, (d) 33. All UKSC staff are based at the organisation's office in London.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the Great Britain Sports Council in Scotland. [36115]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 25 March 1998]: The responsibilities and functions of the GB Sports Council were transferred to the United Kingdom and the English Sports Councils from 1 January 1997. The United Kingdom Sports Council's (UKSC) responsibilities are under review as part of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review.

The UKSC is responsible for fostering, supporting and encouraging the development of sport and physical recreation, the achievement of excellence, and the provision of sporting facilities at a UK level. In addition, the UKSC takes a lead among the Sports Councils on issues which require strategic planning, co-ordination and representation where they are for the benefit of the UK as a whole.

The functions of the UKSC in respect of the whole United Kingdom are:

- to identify sporting policies that should have a UK-wide application;
- to identify areas of unnecessary duplication, overlap and waste in the way sport is administered in the UK;
- to consider with the Sports Councils of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland how grant programmes for sports bodies with a UK or Great Britain remit could best be administered, and to administer those programmes;
- to oversee policy on sports science, sports medicine, drug control, and coaching and other areas where there may be a need for the Home Country Sports Councils to deliver a consistent UK-wide policy;
- to co-ordinate policy for bringing major international sporting events to the UK; and,
- to represent the UK internationally and to increase the influence of the UK at international level.

The Home Country Sports Council are responsible for sports and facilities development, and for supporting our elite athletes in those sports in which we compete internationally on a Home Country basis.

Libraries

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the removal of books from the King's Library in the British Museum and their transfer to the new British Library in St. Pancras. [36385]

Mr. Chris Smith: In 1972, the British Library Act established the national library of the United Kingdom, incorporating the library of the British Museum and including the King's Library. The collections have remained at the British Museum until completion of their new home in the British Library building at St. Pancras. Separation of the King's Library from the rest of the Library's printed archive would be detrimental to the integrity and cohesiveness of the national collections. Plans for its move have been in the public domain for the past thirty years.

In the new building, the King's Library will be housed in the best possible conditions for access, preservation and use. It will stand in a specially designed glass tower at the physical heart of the library, making it more visible and accessible to the public. It will also be more secure and in an improved environment. The glass tower is fully air-conditioned to control temperature, humidity and atmospheric pollutants and the glass is especially constructed to provide fire protection and heat resistance.

Royal Parks

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the number of staff employed at the head office of the Royal Parks Agency; what percentage this represents of total staff; what the salary and running costs are of the head office; and what percentage of total salary and running costs this represents. [36144]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 26 March 1998]: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency under its Chief Executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Welch to Mr. John Swinney, dated 27 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking about the number and salary costs of the staff employed at the head office of the Royal Parks Agency.

The total number of staff employed at the Agency's head office is 34, which is 14 per cent. of the total staff. The estimated annual salary costs and running costs of the head office staff for 1997/98 are £877,611 and £368,151 respectively. This represents 15.7 per cent. of the Agency's total salary and running costs.

Historic Royal Palaces

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many staff are employed at the head office of the Historic Royal Palaces agency; what percentage this represents of total staff; what percentage of staff are based in the south-east of England; what are running costs of the head office; and what percentage of total salary and running costs this figure represents. [36145]

Mr. Tom Clarke: 100 staff are employed at head office which is 19.8 per cent. of the total staff, all of whom are based in the south-east of England. The running costs of the head office are expected to be £2.62 million in 1997–98 which is 22.9 per cent. of the total running costs. Head office comprises the Chief Executive's office,

Central Finance, and Personnel Services, and the Curatorial and Surveyor of the Fabric's Departments. Running costs comprise pay, recruitment, training, travel and expenses, consultancies and the employment of agency staff.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rural Areas

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish his Government's policy for rural areas. [36029]

Mr. Morley: The Government have made very clear their commitment to opportunity, fairness and prosperity for all, whether they live in country or city. Our policies are working to that end and will continue to do so. Our manifesto pledged to recognise the special needs of rural areas and we will continue to ensure that our policies take account of the rural dimension, where appropriate.

Animal Feed

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which year each member state of the EU banned the feeding of animal protein to (a) ruminants and (b) other meat animals. [36690]

Mr. Rooker: An EU-wide ban of the feeding of mammalian protein to ruminants was introduced by Commission Decision 94/381/EC on 27 June 1994. Some Member States introduced national provisions before the Commission Decision came into force. Those which we know about are as follows:

Member state	Date	Effect of legislation
Austria	December 1990	Feeding to ruminants of MBM, meat, bone, blood, liver and similar meals banned
Denmark	1990	Ban on ruminant derived feed being fed to ruminants
Finland	1990	Feeding of imported animal protein banned
France	1990	MBM banned from bovine feed
Italy	November 1989	Ban on import of ruminant MBM from UK and Republic of Ireland
Netherlands	August 1989	Ban on feeding ruminant MBM, meat meal, bonemeal and blood to ruminants
	1994	Ban extended to cover mammalian MBM fed to ruminants
Republic of Ireland	August 1990	Ban on feeding ruminants with protein derived from ruminants
Sweden	December 1990	Meat and bone products from ruminants banned from ruminant feed
	December 1993	Ban extended to all products from ruminants except fats, milk and milk products

We believe that Belgium, Germany, Greece, Luxembourg, Portugal and Spain had no national measures in places prior to the introduction of EU-wide measures.

We are not aware of any rules prohibiting the feeding of mammalian protein to non-ruminant livestock except for those in place in the UK.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tonnage of meat and bone meal was used in animal rations in each of the five years preceding its prohibition. [36691]

Mr. Rooker: The tonnages of meat and bone meal used by the Great Britain animal feed compound industry in the years preceding its prohibition were:

Year	Thousand tonnes
1991	Not readily available
1992	212
1993	211
1994	212
1995	209

Figures for usage by the Northern Ireland compound feed industry are available only from 1993 onwards and are as follows:

Year	Thousand tonnes
1993	23
1994	24
1995	26

These figures do not take account of any meat and bone meal which may be used directly by farmers for animal feed.

Cattle Tagging

Mr. Green: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the double ear tagging systems for cattle to be fully operational; and if he will make a statement. [36602]

Mr. Rooker: Double ear tagging of cattle became a requirement from 1 January 1998 as part of the measures included within Council Regulation (EC) No. 820/97. Insofar as ear tag supplies have allowed, it has been fully operational from that date.

Flood Defences

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he will take to ensure that the grant given to the Environment Agency for vital flood defence work will be made available for that purpose. [35942]

Mr. Morley: Grant payments to the Environment Agency by this Department for flood defence capital works are made in respect of specific approved schemes so can be used only for that purpose. For approval for grant aid schemes must meet technical, economic and environmental criteria, and achieve an appropriate priority score based on Ministerial priorities, urgency and benefit:cost ratio.

Beef Bones

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tonnage of beef bones are currently being imported into the United Kingdom; and from which countries. [36688]

Mr. Rooker: Beef bones are not separately identified in the Combined Nomenclature. Imports of greaves, flours and meals, of meat or meat offal (including tankage), unfit for human consumption, are shown in the table. The tonnages from each country for the last ten years of these exports are taken from the Official Overseas Trade Statistics.

The data will be subject to a degree of statistical error. The overall level of errors will be low, but these errors will have a much greater proportional effect on countries with small values or volumes of trade. Therefore great care is needed when interpreting the data in the table as the data will inevitably include a number of errors.

UK imports of flours, meals and pellets, of meat or meat offal (inc.tankage) unfit for human consumption: greave

Unit: tonnes

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Export Licences

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 257, on export licences, how many applications in each of the stated four week periods his Department recommended for refusal. [36738]

Mr. Fatchett: Licences to export strategic goods are issued by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, and the Export Control Organisation of the DTI is the licensing authority. All relevant individual licence applications are circulated by DTI to other Government departments with a policy interest. These include the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development. The advice that is given by these departments to DTI falls into the category of internal discussion and advice, the disclosure of which would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion and which is being withheld under exemption number 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Departmental Employees (Scotland)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36211]

Mr. Fatchett: There are no staff in this Department, or in executive agencies responsible to this Department, employed in Scotland.

EU Common Foreign and Security Policy

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 555, on EU Common Foreign and Security Policy if he will make it his policy to place in the Library the minutes of the working groups' meetings. [36085]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We are committed to ensuring more effective parliamentary scrutiny of, and greater openness in EU business, including Common Foreign and Security Policy. We have made proposals accordingly both in the EU and at a national level.

We do not, however, have discretion unilaterally to disclose documents that reveal the negotiating position of individual Member States or which could damage the conduct of our national relations. We do not therefore propose to place records of Common Foreign and Security Policy working group meetings in the Library.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 555–57, on EU Common Foreign and Security Policy, when the working groups on (a) armaments policy, (b) conventional arms exports, (c) human rights, (d) the Middle East/Gulf, (e) Middle East Peace Process and (f) nuclear non-proliferation, last met and what subjects were discussed. [36086]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Working Group on Armaments Policy last met on 9 March; the Conventional Arms Exports one on 26 March; the Human Rights one on 2 March; the Middle East/Gulf one on 12 March; the Middle East Peace Process one on 12 March; and the Nuclear Non-Proliferation one on 19 March.

On the matter of what was discussed at the meetings I refer the hon. and learned Member to my answer to his previous question (36085).

Israel

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 31, what was the purpose of the meeting of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, with the Ambassador of Israel on 18 March; and if he will make a statement on the meeting. [36734]

Mr. Fatchett: The meeting between my noble Friend Baroness Symons and Ambassador Zeigerman was a long-standing engagement. They discussed the Middle East Peace Process and bilateral relations.

Croatia

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he made to the foreign secretary of Croatia concerning recent speeches by President Tudjman. [36735]

Mr. Fatchett: We have made clear to the Croatian Government, bilaterally and in our capacity as Presidency of the European Union, that we deplore the tone and content of President Tudjman's recent speech to the HDZ National Congress. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has written to President Tudjman to say that Croatia will not move closer to the European Union without demonstrating a clear, long-term commitment to the Dayton and Erdut peace Agreements, a two-way refugee return process, ethnic reconciliation and democratic reform.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Appeals

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Attorney-General how many appeals against (a) sentence and (b) conviction were made to the Court of Appeal in each of the last three years; and how many of those were successful. [35717]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

The figures requested are as follows:

Year	Appeals against sentence made	Appeals against sentence allowed	Appeals against conviction made	Appeals against conviction allowed
1995	5,794	1,222	2,393	253
1996	6,436	1,379	2,288	250
1997	6,357	1,331	2,318	186

DEFENCE

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which scientific establishments are carrying out the research programme announced in July 1997 into the possible health effects of the combination of vaccines and NAPS tablets given to troops in the Gulf War to protect them against chemical and biological attack; when this work is expected to finish; when the results of this research are expected to be made public; and who has been appointed to the independent panel of experts to review the research. [33794]

Dr. Reid: Preliminary work on the programme of research to investigate the possible health effects of the combination of vaccines and NAPS tablets given to troops in the Gulf War has commenced at CBD Porton Down. However, only some elements of the overall programme will be carried out at CBD. The National Institute for Biological Standards and Control have also been invited to participate and it is intended that a number of other scientific and academic bodies will contribute to the research in due course.

It was originally estimated that the programme would take some two and a half years to complete. However, this was always subject to the advice of the Independent Panel which has been appointed to oversee the research. On the advice of the Independent Panel, additional work will now be carried out at the start of the programme to determine appropriate vaccine doses for use in animals in the subsequent studies. As a result, the programme as a whole is now expected to take some three and a half years to complete, although interim results will become available at various stages within this period. We expect that, subject to a number of factors, including Home Office approval for the necessary animal tests, it should be possible to publish results from the first phase of work at the end of 1998 or in early 1999.

The Independent Panel is chaired by Professor Harrison C. Spencer, Dean of The London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine. The other members of the Panel are: Professor J. E. Banatvala, St. Thomas's Hospital, London; Professor P. Beverley, The Edward Jenner Institute for Vaccine Research; Dr. J. Bird, Burden Neurological Hospital; Dr. A. Boylston, Molecular Medicine Unit, St. James's Hospital, Leeds; Dr. P. Fawcett, Department of Clinical Neurophysiology, Newcastle General Hospital; Professor A. Grossman, Department of Endocrinology, St. Bartholomew's Hospital; Professor M. Hooper, University of Sunderland; Dr. N. Jones, Royal British Legion, London; Professor S. Lightman, Department of Medicine, Bristol Royal Infirmary; Dr. C. Martyn, MRC Environmental Epidemiology Unit, Southampton; Dr. E. Miller, Communicable Diseases Surveillance Centre, Colindale; Dr. D. Ray, Centre for Mechanisms of Human Toxicity, University of Leicester; Professor Sedgwick, Wessex Neurological Centre, Southampton; Professor A. Silman, ARC Epidemiology Research Unit, Manchester University Medical School. Professor Hooper and Dr. Jones were nominated to the panel by Gulf veterans themselves acting through the Royal British Legion.

Dr. Geoffrey Schild, the Director of NIBSC, has also been invited to join the Panel, in view of his expertise in relation to vaccines. In order to avoid a conflict of interest, he will not be present at any discussions regarding NIBSC participation in the programme.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the green transport plan. [36650]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to him on Friday on 20 March 1998, Official Report, column 745. Guidance has been promulgated but Green Transport Plans have still to be formulated and introduced by my Department.

Green Commuting

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36666]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on Thursday 19 March 1998, Official Report, columns 722–23, and Friday 20 March 1998, Official Report, column 745. Transport plans have not yet been completed.

Infantry

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the latest manning figures for the infantry, listed by regiment and regional divisions. [36636]

Dr. Reid: The total trained officer and soldier Infantry strengths, broken down by regional Divisions, as at 1 February 1998, is detailed in the table:

	Strength
Regional Division
Household	3,522
Scottish	3,674

[1] The Battalions marked thus also have a Gurkha Reinforcement Company, comprising 100 Gurkhas, on their strength.

A similar breakdown for the 2,791 Infantry officers could not be provided without disproportionate cost as this information is not held centrally.

Plutonium Stocks

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the management of UK plutonium stocks. [36637]

Dr. Reid: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on Friday 13 March 1998, Official Report, columns 431–32.

Export Licences

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 195, on export licences, how many applications in each of the stated four week periods his Department recommended for refusal. [36737]

Mr. Spellar: Licences to export strategic goods are issued by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, and the Export Control Organisation of the DTI is the licensing authority. All relevant individual licence applications are circulated by DTI to other Government departments with an interest, as determined by them in line with their policy responsibilities. These include the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development. The advice given by these departments to the DTI falls into the category of internal discussion and advice, the disclosure of which would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion and which is being withheld under Exemption number 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are her plans for the implementation of the council tax benefit changes for people in properties in bands F, G and H from April 1998. [37186]

Mr. Keith Bradley: We gave a firm commitment to work in partnership with Local Government to monitor the implementation of the changes to Council Tax Benefit to be introduced from 1 April. During consultation with Local Government representatives we listened carefully to their concerns. In light of this we have decided that as an integral part of implementation existing Council Tax Benefit recipients should be protected so that there are no losers at the point of change.

Our proposals are that existing recipients of Council Tax Benefit will not be affected by the restriction and will continue to be unaffected as long as they remain in the same property and do not have a break in Council Tax Benefit entitlement of more than twelve weeks.

The proposals mean that some 65,000 recipients would not be subject to a reduction in benefit at the point of change.

We are consulting the Local Authority Associations urgently on proposals to achieve this. We plan to lay regulations very shortly.

Social Fund

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what gross budget will be set for the Discretionary Social Fund in 1998–99. [37190]

Mr. Denham: I am pleased to announce that the Social Fund gross discretionary budget for 1998–99 will be £501.2 million. £98 million will be allocated to Community Care Grants, £402.7 million to loans and £0.5 million will be set aside as a contingency reserve. The new allocation represents an increase of £33.7 million over the total gross budget for 1997–98.

On 3 March 1998, Official Report, column 609, I announced changes to the directions covering the payment of community care grants. As part of this allocation an additional £1 million has been included in the provision for community care grants to extend the help available nationally to homeless people setting up home as part of a planned programme of resettlement. This additional funding will help more of those leaving hostel accommodation to obtain grants from the Social Fund and prevent their return to an unsettled way of life.

The Social Security Bill 1998 contains proposed changes to budgeting loan decision making. Moving to a fact based budgeting loan system will be fairer for applicants, easier for them to understand and more cost effective to administer. It is an important step towards our goal of an Active Modern Service. We also aim to further improve the fairness of the scheme by allocating the loans budget increase to achieve greater consistency of outcomes for applicants across areas. The £32.7 million increase which I am announcing today represents a first step towards this aim by enabling more loan applicants to receive an award.

Details of individual District budget allocations will be placed in the Library on 27 March.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the numbers of incapacity benefit claimants within each three digit code diagnosis group of the International Classification of Diseases for the latest available period. [36180]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table titled "Incapacity Benefit Claimants by International Classification of Diseases Code at 31 August 1997" copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what date she plans to introduce a green commuting plan; [36662]

(2) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan. [36641]

Mr. Denham: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Department's in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". The Department has started to consider how to respond to its recommendations.

State Pension (Equalisation of Ages)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action she is taking concerning the present difference in the age that a man and a woman can claim a state pension. [35943]

Mr. Denham: Although currently the State pension age for men is 65 and for women is 60, from 2010 the State pension age for women will be gradually increased so that by 2020 the age is equalised at 65.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in the UK have annual incomes in excess of (a) £25,000, (b) £30,000 and (c) £40,000. [36512]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

Annual incomes of UK pensioners in 1997–98

Annual total income	Pensioners
Over £25,000	292,000
Over £30,000	186,000

Notes:
1. This estimate has been provided by Inland Revenue, based on the 1995/96 Survey of Personal Incomes projected forward to 1997/98 levels of earnings and prices.
2. Annual total income is defined as the sum of all income sources that are subject to tax. It excludes certain incomes that are paid gross such as some National Savings products.
3. Figures rounded to the nearest hundred.

Women

Ms Hewitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement about her plans to involve women in the development of Government policies and programmes. [34084]

Ms Ruddock: As Ministers for Women, we are taking forward several initiatives to ensure that women's voices are heard by Government.

We are pleased to announce that we have commissioned a feasibility study for an electronic interactive network to build links between Government and women's organisations.

We have also commissioned a new survey of women on the subject of family friendly employment and childcare.

We have commissioned two pilot women's juries; both juries will be asked the question "what should be done to improve the quality of life for working mothers?"

The results of these initiatives will feed into the policy making process, putting women's voices at the heart of Government. They will run alongside and will complement our ongoing discussions with women's organisations. We are reviewing our existing links with women's organisations in order to strengthen and enhance that dialogue.

We are revising guidance on policy appraisal to ensure that policy makers throughout Whitehall take women's interests into account at all stages of the policy making process.

We aim to ensure that all policy documents, all programmes, all action plans, and all legislative changes include an assessment of their impact on women.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Export Licences

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 9 March 1998, Official Report, columns 23–24, on export licences, how many applications in each of the stated four week periods, her Department recommended for refusal. [36736]

Clare Short: Licences to export strategic goods are issued by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, and the Export Control Organisation of the DTI is the licensing authority. All relevant individual licence applications are circulated by DTI to other Government departments with an interest, as determined by them in line with their policy responsibilities. These include the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development.

The advice that is given by these departments to DTI falls into the category of internal discussion and advice, the disclosure of which would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion and which is being withheld under exemption number 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Green Commuting

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what date she plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36657]

Mr. Foulkes: We have not at this stage fixed any firm target date for the introduction of such a plan. Changes in departmental practices aimed at discouraging the use of cars for commuting will have only a very limited impact. The Department for International Development maintains only 52 parking spaces in Central London.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan. [36652]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". However, this Department has no vehicle fleet management responsibilities. Nor does it make significant use of private vehicles for official purposes.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35116]

Mrs. Beckett: There are a variety of events planned for April and May, involving DTI Ministerial hospitality. These include a number of receptions and dinners associated with the promotion of the Powerhouse UK exhibition and ASEM II, as well as events covering differing industrial sectors and policy areas. It is not, however, possible to provide a comprehensive estimate for the total expenditure on Ministerial hospitality as the majority of events and meeting will not be finalised until nearer the time.

Foreign Investors

Dr. Starkey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what instances it is (a) permissible and (b) her policy for (i) the Government and (ii) local authorities to discriminate against a foreign investor. [35618]

Mrs. Roche: The UK has an open and liberal economy and welcomes foreign investment. However we reserve the right to discriminate on the grounds of the nationality of an investor in the limited circumstances where permitted by law and our treaty commitments, including in sectors such as defence, broadcasting, fishing, marine and air transport, and financial services. Discrimination on the grounds of the nationality of investors is not a factor in local authority decision-making.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the cost to the United Kingdom of the present proposals for reforming EU structural funds. [35327]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Draft regulations for reform of the EU Structural Funds were published by the Commission on 18 March. It is not possible at this early state to make detailed estimates of the financial consequences of the Commission's proposals for UK receipts from the Structural Funds, as the Commission has not yet published its plans for per capita receipts in difference regions and Member States under the various Objectives and the other measures it is proposing.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Prior: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the feasibility of the Severn Barrage scheme; and in what ways her Department plans to support its development. [36600]

Mr. Battle: Overall assessments summarising work across all technologies, including the prospects for tidal power technology and for the Severn Barrage, were last published in 1994 as Energy Technology Support Unit (ETSU) report R-82, "An Assessment of Renewable Energy for the UK" and Energy Paper 62, entitled "New and Renewable Energy Technology: Future Prospects for the UK", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

This Government propose to undertake a new and strong drive to develop renewable energy sources. DTI Ministers are engaged in reviewing policy, including considerations of what would be necessary and practicable to achieve 10% of UK electricity needs from renewables by the year 2010 and how renewables can make an effective contribution to meeting requirements for future greenhouse gas reduction commitments. Tidal power technology is being considered in that review, the outcome of which will be announced later this year. It is expected that a new overall assessment of the technologies will be published later this year.

Office of Manpower Economics

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of Office of Manpower Economics staff are based in London; what are the total (a) running and (b) salary costs of this body; and what is the total Government financial assistance provided. [36233]

Mrs. Beckett: The Office of Manpower Economics (OME), which provides the secretariat for the independent Pay Review Bodies, has 37.9 whole-time equivalent staff, all of whom are based in London. The running costs budget for the OME in 1997–98 is £1.581 million, which includes salary costs of £1.357 million. Total government funding for OME in 1997–98 is £2.85 million, including £1.27 million for research commissioned by the Pay Review Bodies.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many jobs the construction of the Millennium Dome has created to date; and how many jobs it will create when open. [31971]

Mr. Mandelson: As at the beginning of March 1998, 1,073 people have been employed on the construction of the Millennium Dome.

When the Millennium Experience is open and fully operational the New Millennium Experience Company forecast that it will create about 2,000 new full and part time jobs.

An independent report commissioned by the London Borough of Greenwich has estimated that a further 3,000 jobs relating to the Dome will be generated.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio when he plans to answer the question tabled by the hon. Member for North Shropshire on 25 February 1998 relating to the number of contracts signed for the Millennium Dome. [36607]

Mr. Mandelson: The question has been answered today.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister without Portfolio how many contracts have been signed relating to the building of the Millennium Dome. [32029]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 2 March 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 26 March 1998, Official Report, column 248.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Sixth Form Colleges

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those education authorities which provide sixth form education primarily through sixth form colleges. [33997]

Dr. Howells: The following list shows those local education authority areas where, in 1995/96, there were more full-time students in their first two years of post-compulsory education in sixth form colleges than in either state schools or other further education:

Croydon
Manchester
Salford
Solihull
Stockport
Tameside
Waltham Forest.

In addition, there were almost as many such students in sixth-form colleges (46 per cent.) in the former area of Hampshire LEA. Within that authority in 1995/96, it is estimated that over 60 per cent. of such students in the area of what is now the City of Southampton Council were in sixth-form colleges, while about 30 per cent. were in other further education.

Greenwich Judgment

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to legislate to reverse the Greenwich judgment. [34120]

Mr. Byers: We have no plans to legislate to reverse the Greenwich Judgment. The judgment opened up greater opportunities for parents by ensuring that the exercise of choice should not be artificially constrained by the fact of residing on one or other side of a LEA boundary. Under the new admission framework, set out in the School Standards and Framework Bill, we envisage admission authorities working closely with those in neighbouring LEA areas in the interest of all parents.

Free School Meals

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the secondary schools with up to 5 per cent. eligible for free school meals at (a) Key Stage 3 and (b) Key Stage 4. [34166]

Mr. Byers: Information on school meals for individual schools is not published centrally.

Ofsted

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals he has to review the work of Ofsted. [35059]

Mr. Byers: We are working with Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools to improve the quality, consistency and value for money of the school inspection system. Independent inspection has a crucial role to play in raising standards and we shall continue to discuss with OFSTED the vital part it plays.

Student Transport

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was (a) the total cost of home to college transport to local authorities in England and Wales for 16 years plus students in the year 1995–96 and (b) the cost of home to college transport to Essex County Council for 16 years plus students in the year 1995–96. [35242]

Mr. Byers: LEA expenditure in England on home to college transport was £36.9 million in 1995–96. The corresponding figure for Essex Local Education Authority was £3.1 million. These figures do not take account of parental contributions of £2.8 million and zero for England and for Essex respectively. The funding of home to college transport in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Bengali

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure the continuation of A level examinations in Bengali; and if he will make a statement. [35350]

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to preserve Bengali as a GCE A Level subject. [35924]

Dr. Howells: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) and the GCE Awarding Bodies agreed new cost-effective arrangements for safeguarding the provision of a range of small entry subjects at A level, including Bengali, on 23 March. I understand that these arrangements will ensure that qualifications presently available will continue to be offered without interruption.

Standard Assessment Tests

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what percentage of 11 year old (a) male, (b) female and (c) male and female pupils in maintained schools in each local education authority attained (i) Level 3 or better, (ii) Level 4 or better and (iii) Level 5 or better, in the 1997 Key Stage 2 tests in the (1) writing, (2) reading and (3) combined test for English; and what was the average level per pupil; [35353]

(2) for each local education authority what percentage of 11-year-old pupils in maintained schools were entered for the 1997 Key Stage 2 SAT tests in (a) writing, (b) reading and (c) both for English but were absent. [35354]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is shown in the tables.

School Inspections

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many primary schools with 11 year old pupils were inspected by OFSTED in the school year 1996–97; what percentages of each grade on OFSTED's scale 1 to 7 were awarded by inspectors in each of the 12 curriculum subjects; and what was the average grade awarded (i) for each of the 12 curriculum subjects and (ii) for all subjects together in these schools. [35355]

Mr. Byers: This is a matter for HM Chief Inspector of Schools. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Student Fees

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the annual cost of administering his proposed student fees regime. [35574]

Dr. Howells: There will be no extra costs to LEAs in paying the public contribution to tuition fees after income assessment. Our plans for 1998–99 assume that the costs to universities and colleges of collecting private fee contributions (and of any default) will be 5 per cent. of the income collected.

Science Examinations

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, in each of the five years before and each year since the introduction of the National Curriculum, how many girls and how many boys have taken at least one science subject at (a) GCSE and (b) A-level. [35371]

Dr. Howells: The information requested in respect of GCSE and GCE A level science is as follows:

European Social Fund

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the payment priority given to voluntary sector organisations running European Social Fund projects under (a) Objective 1, (b) Objective 2 and (c) Objective 3. [35393]

Mr. Andrew Smith: New funding arrangements introduced this year will enable this Department to pay European Social Fund (ESF) claims without waiting for funds from the European Commission. This arrangement will apply to ESF claims dating from 1997 to the second payment for 1999 and should lead to speedier payments for all sectors involved. The claims will have to be checked first and must be accurate and have appropriate supportive documentation. Accurate claims submitted by the voluntary sector will be given priority under all ESF programmes and paid first.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he proposes in order to speed up European Social Fund payments to voluntary sector organisations running Objective 3 projects. [35395]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Payments for accurate claims dating from 1997 to the second payment in 1999 will be made without waiting for funding to arrive from the European Commission. This arrangement should lead to speedier payments for all sectors. Claims received from the voluntary sector will be checked on a daily basis and once they are accurate will be given priority for processing.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the procedures the promoters of an approved ESF Objective 3 project run by a voluntary sector organisation must undertake before payment can be made by his Department. [35396]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Promoters should submit accurate, completed claim forms including the appropriate supportive documentation. Once the claims have been checked and are correct they can be processed for payment. We will not need to wait for funds to arrive from the European Commission before making payments for accurate claims dated from 1997 to the second payment in 1999.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the final claim payment dates for ESF Objective 3 voluntary sector projects for each year since the start of the current programme. [35397]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The current Objective 3 programme started in January 1997 and will finish in December 1999. The deadline for projects to submit their final claims for the 1997 programme to this Department's European Social Fund Unit was 13 March 1998. The Department's ESF Unit has so far received 1,170 of the expected 1,625 final claims.

The final claims are now being checked on a daily basis. Final claims received from the voluntary sector are given priority for processing. Final claim payments will be paid once they have been checked and are correct and we expect payments to begin sometime in April 1998.

School Admissions (Sheffield)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on Sheffield City Council's decisions on secondary school admissions for September 1998; and if he will make a statement. [35532]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have received several letters recently from local parents and others about secondary school admission arrangements in Sheffield, and in particular about the implications of the recent High Court judgment on the operation of admissions in Rotherham. The Department is discussing the issues raised by the judgment with Sheffield LEA and with other interested parties. We shall consider in the light of those discussions if the existing legislation gives admission authorities sufficient flexibility to respond to local needs and preferences.

New Deal

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many businesses in each parliamentary constituency have signed up to the New Deal; [35577]

(2) what measures he will take to ensure a consistent geographical spread of businesses signed up to the New Deal; [35578]

(3) what steps the Government will take to encourage businesses in areas of high unemployment to sign up for the New Deal. [35587]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Our strategy for marketing New Deal is designed to ensure that every local New Deal partnership, including those in areas of high unemployment, has the job vacancies it requires to meet the needs of its unemployed clients. The measures we are taking to achieve this include requiring local partnerships to cover marketing in their plans, (which have been approved by assessment panels, including private sector members) local marketing guides and toolkits, marketing training and planning support, and local radio and press advertising, as well as the national TV and press campaign. Additional measures for areas of particularly high unemployment include the establishment of employer coalitions by the New Deal Task Force and special workshops on marketing.

We are making encouraging progress in implementing our marketing strategy, with over 2,300 employer agreements signed across the country, with many more to come as marketing efforts are now underway in all local partnerships. 44 of these agreements are with leading national employers, offering jobs in a range of geographical locations. A breakdown of these figures by constituency is not available.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the (a) number and (b) percentage of persons on the New Deal who will require special attention at the Gateway, the (i) number and (ii) percentage who will require mentoring and the basis on which these estimates are made; from where he expects to recruit the mentors; and what estimate he has made of the amounts individual mentors will be paid and the total cost. [36155]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Every young person who enters the Gateway of the New Deal for 18–24 year olds will receive individually tailored help. In his Budget statement on 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–112, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced an additional £50 million boost to the help available in the Gateway.

In each unit of delivery a New Deal mentoring service will seek to recruit and train mentors who can offer the kind of independent, individual support some young people will need as they progress through the New Deal programme. We expect that suitable mentors will be drawn from all sections of local communities. Mentors will be unpaid trained volunteers, but will typically receive expenses under arrangements to be determined locally.

Each New Deal mentoring service will aim to provide a mentor for those young people identified as most likely to benefit from this extra support. Our planning assumption is that up to 100,000 young people will benefit over the life of this Parliament. On the basis of overall planning assumptions for New Deal, which are consistent with the Government's current unemployment assumptions, that would mean that about 10 per cent. of all Gateway entrants would benefit from New Deal mentoring. Units of delivery will be contracting for mentoring services over the coming months, and accurate estimates of total costs cannot be made in advance of the contracting process and some operational experience of New Deal mentoring. At this stage, our planning assumption is that mentoring might cost up to £40 million during this Parliament.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance those unemployed and aged over 25 years of age who are partners of unemployed people will receive through the New Deal; and if he will make a statement. [36503]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We announced in the Budget that the Government have set aside £60 million from the Windfall Tax Receipts to ensure that partners of the unemployed who are aged over 25 and are themselves out of work will have the option to receive the help they need to get back to work. Details of the New Deal for Partners and the type of assistance which partners over 25 might receive through this New Deal will be set out in due course.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the timescale for expenditure of the extra £50 million allocated to the Gateway period of the New Deal for the young unemployed in the Budget; and if he will make a statement. [36504]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Like all other allocations from the windfall tax to the New Deal for 18–24 year olds, the extra £50 million for the Gateway will help young people over the life of this Parliament.

The extra £50 million will fund a New Deal mentoring service, offering the support of trained volunteer mentors to up to 100,000 young people over the life of this Parliament. The extra money will also fund a significant enhancement of Gateway help to some of the more disadvantaged young people. There will be short basic skills courses available to every young person who could benefit; and we will also increase access to help from specialist agencies during the Gateway, to tackle such problems as homelessness, drug or alcohol dependency, or debt, at the same time as the young people are working to improve their employment prospects.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what criteria an unemployed individual aged over 25 years who is a partner of an unemployed person and is not in receipt of jobseeker's allowance will qualify for the New Deal; and if he will make a statement. [36506]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We announced in the Budget that the Government have set aside £60 million from the Windfall Tax Receipts to ensure that partners of the unemployed who are aged over 25 and are themselves out of work will have the option to receive the help they need to get back to work. Details of the New Deal for Partners and the criteria by which partners will be eligible for help will be set out in due course.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many individuals have given a commitment to provide mentoring support to young people through the New Deal to date; and if he will make a statement. [36507]

Mr. Andrew Smith: We have asked local New Deal partnerships to develop their mentoring services during 1998 and to make sure they are fully operational by December at the latest. Some partnerships have already made significant progress in planning and contracting for mentoring and should have provision in place shortly after the New Deal's national launch on 6 April. The first task for providers will be to recruit and train suitable volunteer mentors from all sections of the local community to offer independent, individual support to those young people entering the New Deal Gateway who are most likely to benefit from this extra help. Information about the numbers of New Deal mentors will start to be collected once mentoring services are in place.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance towards the needs of those aged over 50 years will be available through the New Deal; and if he will make a statement. [36508]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Two extensions of the New Deal over the coming year will include people aged 50 and over. From June, we will introduce the New Deal for all people aged 25 or over who have been unemployed for over 2 years. This will honour our manifesto pledge to introduce a £75 employer subsidy for employers who recruit people from this group. We will also provide new opportunities to train or study full time on JSA. Participants will also be eligible for help from existing provision, which includes training, help towards self-employment, and trial periods with employers. All participants will receive advisory help, to enable them to identify the best route into sustained employment.

Second, we will introduce, in November, pilots providing up to 70,000 places which will help those unemployed for at least 18 months, and, in some areas, those unemployed for 12 months. We will be consulting on the design of those pilots and, in particular, on the way in which they can best help those aged 50 and over. Our initial thinking is that they should contain key features of the New Deal approach: a gateway period to identify barriers to work; individually tailored provision which takes into account the special circumstances of each participant; and follow through support to help people stay in work.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment where the pilot schemes for the extension of the New Deal for those over 25 years of age will be located; and if he will make a statement. [36509]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The locations for the pilots that were announced in the Budget are yet to be decided. We will select areas which provide the best basis for reliable evaluation of the approach.

Grammar School Students

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the cost of administration of the 11 plus in (a) Kent and (b) the constituency of Sittingbourne and Sheppey. [35609]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how much money is currently spent on (a) coaches and (b) taxis in transporting (i) 11 to 16 and (ii) 16 to 18 year-olds from Sheppey to grammar schools off the island; [35610]

(2) how much money is currently spent on (a) coaches and (b) taxis to enable students in Sittingbourne and Faversham to attend the local grammar schools; [35611]

(3) if he will list grammar schools in England in order of places gained at Oxford and Cambridge for each year from 1987 to 1997; [35614]

(4) how many students at each grammar school in Sittingbourne left aged 16 years in each year since 1987. [35615]

Mr. Byers: This information is not collected centrally.

GCSE Results

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the GCSE pass rate average for (a) all comprehensive schools and (b) all grammar schools; and if he will make a statement. [35612]

Dr. Howells: The information requested in respect of GCSEs is (a) 93.5 per cent. and (b) 99.6 per cent.

Teachers

Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the projected average age of secondary school teachers in 10 years' time; and what assessment he has made of trends in the average age over the next 10 years; [35629]

(2) what is the average age of secondary school teachers in England and Wales. [35630]

Ms Estelle Morris: The average age of full and part-time secondary teachers in 1996 was 42 and it is expected to stay around this age for the next 10 years. We estimate that, following a slight decrease in 1997 and 1998 due to the increase in the numbers of premature retirements, there will be a gradual increase in the average age of secondary teachers over the next 10 years from just below 42 years to just above.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers in the Congleton constituency (a) applied for and (b) were granted early retirement owing to ill health during 1997. [35633]

Ms Estelle Morris: During the calendar year 1997, three teachers, whose last known employment was in a maintained school in the Congleton constituency, were granted early retirement on ill-health grounds. The number of applications for retirement on the grounds of ill-health by constituency cannot be identified centrally.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers voluntarily left the teaching profession before retirement age in the constituency of Congleton during 1997. [35634]

Ms Estelle Morris: The latest year for which information is available is 1995–96. Provisional data show that, of those recorded as in-service, whether full or part-time, in a maintained school in the Congleton constituency as at 31 March 1995, 24 were out of service one year later, excluding those who retired (on grounds of ill health, age, redundancy or efficiency), died or were barred.

Undergraduate Studies

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the participation in full-time and sandwich undergraduate study by (a) constituency and (b) socio-economic groups A and E in (i) 1985, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1995. [35723]

Dr. Howells: Data on participation in higher education by parliamentary constituency are not available centrally. The Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA) collects the home postcode of higher education students, which would enable individual constituencies to be identified, but at present no such analysis has been carried out.

The available data on participation by socio-economic group are given in the table:

Participation in higher education [1] by socio-economic group: young full-time undergraduates

Environmental Task Force

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans there are to increase the participation of the over-25 age group in the Environmental Task Force option of the New Deal. [35909]

Mr. Andrew Smith: As we announced in the Budget, 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1097–112, £100m will be made available from the Windfall Tax to offer up to 70,000 places on pilots which extend the New Deal approach to adults who have been unemployed for 18 months or, in some cases, a year. These pilots will include the opportunity for participants to work on projects of environmental benefit or in the voluntary sector, as well as job-related training, and employment, where appropriate with a £75 a week subsidy for six months, and opportunities for training towards self-employment.

Greystones School, Sheffield

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received concerning class sizes at Greystones primary school, Sheffield; and if he will make a statement. [36505]

Mr. Byers: None. We have provided Sheffield local education authority with a specific grant of £525,000 to reduce infant class sizes from September 1998. This will benefit an estimated 2,400 pupils.

School Closures (Kent)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has in respect of the closure of schools in Kent; and if he will make a statement. [36601]

Mr. Byers: None. The planning of school places in Kent is a matter for the Local Education Authority and, in the case of secondary provision, the Funding Agency for Schools. But the Government believe that LEAs should keep the supply of school places under review. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Grogan) on 26 February 1998, Official Report, column 364, in which I said that officials would write to all LEAs and to the FAS asking that they justify continuing to maintain schools with high levels of surplus particularly where performance is poor. But we recognise that authorities will want to take into account any particular local circumstances. Officials have now written to all authorities asking them to address this issue in their annual return to the Department, due by 1 June.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan. [36644]

Dr. Howells: The Guide to Green Transport Plans was distributed last September by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions. A number of developments have been taken forward with the help of the guidance contained in the document. Last year DfEE carried out a survey of staff travel drawing on the advice contained in the Guide. The information obtained from the survey will assist with drawing up the Department's Green Transport Policy document and Green Transport action plans for each of the Department's sites. DfEE's arrangements for providing vehicles for official travel have been reviewed and more stringent conditions introduced. The Department has also given extra emphasis to encouraging staff to cycle to work by supporting National Cycle Week, advertising the availability of loans for purchasing bicycles and providing additional facilities for cyclists at two sites.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36656]

Dr. Howells: The Guide to Green Transport Plans distributed last September by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions encouraged Departments to draw up Green Transport Plans tailored to each location. All DfEE's Headquarters sites and buildings will have operational Green Transport Action Plans in place by 31 October 1998 covering both commuting and official travel.

Cash Limits

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will announce changes to cash limits within his responsibility for 1997–98. [37146]

Dr. Howells: I announced on 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 109–11, that the cash limit for Class IX, Vote 1 Department for Education and Employment: programmes and central services would be increased by £34,653,000 from £9,505,077,000 to £9,539,730,000. The cash limit will now be increased by a further £262,798,000. This is as a result of a virement of £267,200,000 from section B of the Vote, which is non-cash limited, to section A, which is cash limited, offset by a reduction in the cash limit on the Vote of £4,402,000.

The increase in the cash limit is necessary because, following the ending of demand-led funding in the further education sector at the end of academic year 1996–97, it was not possible to estimate, in time for the publication of the Department's Main Estimates in March 1997, the value of outstanding demand-led claims likely to be made by colleges during the 1997–98 financial year. The extent of outstanding super-demand-led claims relating to the final term of academic year 1996–97 was not known with accuracy until late 1997, at which point financial provision was contained within a previously agreed total.

The Further Education Funding Council claim cash-limited and non-cash limited payments separately. Since the Department asked the Funding Council to end the system of super-demand-led funding at the end of academic year 1996–97, the Funding Council decided to end the arrangement whereby each unit of funding contained a notional demand-led component. Accordingly, the Funding Council has made claims for entire funding units against section A of the Estimate rather than section B, whose use it has subsequently restricted to claiming for the cost of outstanding super-demand-led claims from colleges.

The effect is that Funding Council claims for expenditure from section A will exceed provision by £267,200,000 while claims from section B will be correspondingly lower. The virement from section B to section A will enable the Department to meet Funding Council claims for expenditure within the overall level of funding provided to it.

The decrease in the cash limit of £4,402,000 will be used to offset an equivalent increase in the non-Voted DfEE/LACAP cash limit for local authority capital for school building projects. The DfEE/LACAP will increase from £72,107,000 to £76,509,000 as a result.

SCOTLAND

Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils and full-time equivalent teachers there were in Scottish (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) special schools in the state sector and in the last 10 sessions; how many there are in the current session; and what were the resultant teacher-pupil ratios in each year. [35842]

Mr. Wilson: The information is set out in the table.

Pupils, full-time equivalent (FTE) teachers and pupil-teacher ratios in Education Authority schools

[1] All 1997 figures provisional. The number of teachers in secondary schools includes estimates for 20 schools.
[2] Up to and including 1994, pupils and teachers based in special units in mainstream schools were included in the special school figures.

Scottish Parliament

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to take independent advice on the remuneration levels for members of the Scottish Parliament and members of the Scottish Executive. [37183]

Mr. McLeish: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has written to Sir Michael Perry CBE, Chairman of the Senior Salaries Review Body. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library. The letter invites the Senior Salaries Review Body to consider and make recommendations on pay, allowances and pensions of Members of the Scottish Parliament and Members of the Scottish Executive. It is expected that the Senior Salaries Review Body will make its initial recommendations on salary levels for Members of the Scottish Parliament this Autumn.

Agricultural Science Agency

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the performance of the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency against its targets for 1997–98 and the setting of targets for 1998–99. [37184]

Mr. Dewar: The Agency is on course to meet the Commons target for 1997–98 which were set out in my predecessor's answer of 20 May 1997, Official Report, columns 748–49.

For 1998–99 I have set the Agency the following key performance targets:

fulfilment of the Service Level Agreement with SOAEFD within the budget allocated for 1998–99;

continuation of the programme of consultation of all customers on the quality of the work done by the Agency; completion of 94 per cent. of all scientific test and analyses within the timescales set by customers; improvement in the unit cost of the scientific work of the Agency (cost per direct scientific hour); achievement of the target income of £50,000 from new work or new customers.

TREASURY

Government Expenditure

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the figures for general Government expenditure as forecast in the Budget of November 1996 for the years 1997–98 and 1998–99, revalued on the basis of the GDP deflator assumed in (a) the July 1997 Budget and (b) the March 1998 Budget. [35865]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 23 March 1998]: General Government Expenditure as forecast in the November 1996 Budget revalued on the July 1997 Budget deflators would be £310.5 billion for 1997–98 and £310.0 billion for 1998–99. Based on the March 1998 Budget deflators the figures would be £310.6 billion for 1997–98 and £309.7 billion for 1998–99. (Figures are given in 1996–97 prices).

Mozambique (Debt)

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of Mozambique in respect of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. [34645]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 25 March 1998]: The position after the Paris Club meeting in January was that Mozambique still required $100 million to ensure that its debt burden will be reduced to a sustainable level under the HIPC initiative. Last month, the Government announced that the UK would contribute an additional $10 million toward meeting that gap. Other countries have now begun to respond to our lead, and indicate their intention to contribute.

We hope that a decision on the level and timing of Mozambique's debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative will be reached soon.

"Financial Statement and Budget Report"

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about Tables B5, B8, B9 and B24 in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". [37189]

Dawn Primarolo: There were some minor errors in these tables. Corrected versions are printed in the following tables. A corrected copy of Chart B2 has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Ministerial Advisers

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to appoint new advisers for his Ministerial team in the period from April to June. [36715]

Mr. Gordon Brown: None.

WALES

Redundancies

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many ASSI Doman employees at the Castle Cement Site, Buckley, who were made redundant, have been found jobs; and if he will make a statement; [35740]

(2) how many Kimberley Clark employees at the Deeside Industrial Park who were scheduled for redundancy have been found jobs; and if he will make a statement. [35739]

Mr. Hain: A firm of consultants was employed by the company to find alternative employment for those people made redundant. However, information on those who have found jobs is not held centrally.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what his current estimate is of the percentage of the (a) male and (b) female population of working age currently in employment; and what the percentages are for each employment district and for each county and county borough in Wales; [35628]

(2) what his current estimate is of the percentage of the population of working age currently in employment; and what that percentage is for each employment service district and for each county or county borough in Wales. [35627]

Mr. Hain: In Autumn 1997, 68 per cent. of the working age population in Wales were in employment according to the Labour Force Survey. The equivalent figures for males and females were 72 per cent. and 64 per cent.

The latest data available for unitary authorities in Wales are for 1996, these are given in the table; data are unavailable for employment service districts.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the use of unemployment figures to determine regional eligibility for EU structural funds. [35625]

Mr. Hain: The Commission's proposals for Structural Funds and for other cohesion policies for the years 2000–2006, published on 18 March, suggest unemployment rates as the main criterion to determine eligible areas under the new Objective 2 of the Structural Funds.

The UK, like other Member States, has difficulties with certain aspects of the new draft regulations, for example unemployment. The UK tends to have lower unemployment rates compared to other EU Members in equally poor areas. During the forthcoming negotiations we will be working hard, with other Member States and the Commission, to improve these draft regulations and to reach a fair and affordable outcome.

Further Education

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of Wales-domiciled students studying on four-year courses at Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement. [36197]

Mr. Hain: The latest available figures as at December 1996, for the academic year 1996/97, show that there were 299 Welsh domiciled-students on higher education courses with the expected length of study being of four years duration at Scottish higher education institutions.

Social Work (Training and Regulation)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he plans to make following the recent review of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, for the regulation and training of the social services workforce in Wales. [37188]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The publication of a fundamental review of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW) was announced in the House on 22 December 1997, Official Report, column 553. Since then, I have been giving careful thought to the best arrangements for regulating the social services workforce in Wales, consistent with the Government's plans to establish the National Assembly for Wales. I have taken into account, too, the announcement that there is to be separate regulatory machinery for Scotland.

I have concluded that there should be a separate body for the regulation of the social services workforce in Wales. However, the Welsh body must have the closest possible alignment with similar machinery in the other countries of the UK, and officials will be working to ensure that effective links of this kind are put into place.

We also need to have coherent overall arrangements for developing and enforcing high standards of conduct and practice, and for ensuring that workforce and training strategies are directed towards the same standards.

I have, therefore, asked officials to explore how we can best bring together the work of the regulatory body and the work in Wales of any future National Training Organisation for the personal social services.

Children and adults who use the social services in Wales should be able to rely on a workforce that is properly trained, appropriately qualified and effectively regulated. We will be bringing forward more detailed legislative proposals for the new regulatory body in the social services White Paper already promised. I have asked the Chief Inspector of the Social Services Inspectorate for Wales to pave the way for this by starting discussions with key stakeholders within the next few days.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan; [36661]

(2) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan. [36643]

Mr. Ron Davies: My Department has already drawn up a Green Action Plan which addresses all aspects of our activities, including transport. We will be reviewing this in the context of the Governments forthcoming White Paper on Integrated Transport Policy with a view to producing a specific Green Transport Plan. This Plan will cover commuting by staff to and from work as well as their travel on official business.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will now extend legal aid to cover the cost of legal representation at appeal hearings for destitute asylum appellants ineligible for benefits on appeal against refusal of refugee status. [35906]

Mr. Hoon: Our proposed reforms of the legal aid scheme are designed to get legal aid expenditure under effective control and to ensure that it is directed to areas of greatest need. As part of the reform package, we will consider whether extending legal aid to cover representation at hearings before the immigration adjudicators and the Immigration Appeals Tribunal is the best way of meeting that need.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Human Rights

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the announcement of the membership of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights was made on 31 December 1997. [37163]

Marjorie Mowlam: The membership of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights was announced in a press notice on 30 December 1997 because I had appointed eight new members to the Commission.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of British-supplied equipment by the Indonesian Government during civil unrest in Surabaya, Indonesia, on 12 March. [36020]

Mr. Fatchett: We are monitoring closely reports of recent incidents of unrest in Indonesia.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the (a) Ministers appointed to and (b) those Ministers' interests within the new Indonesian Cabinet. [35910]

Mr. Fatchett: We have noted President Soeharto's appointments to the new Cabinet. We look forward to the new Government of Indonesia taking the appropriate action to solve the current economic difficulties.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the meeting between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Symons, and the members of the Lockerbie relatives group on Monday 16 March; and what undertakings were given about the appointment of a person to co-ordinate relevant aspects of the circumstances surrounding the disaster, and investigations of how it happened. [36495]

Mr. Fatchett: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State explained to the Lockerbie relatives the high priority which this Government attach to ending their ordeal by seeing justice done. She was grateful for the opportunity to hear their views. No new specific undertakings were given, but Baroness Symons has briefed the Foreign Secretary on the views of the relatives; he looks forward to addressing their concerns at a meeting on 8 April. The Prime Minister will be glad to meet them after the Foreign Secretary has reported to him.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan; [36664]

(2) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan. [36649]

Mr. Fatchett: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". My Department has started to consider how to respond to its recommendations.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his discussions with the Serbian Government regarding the situation in Kosovo. [36774]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Westbury (Mr. Faber) on 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 550. Since then, the Minister of State my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), as Special Representative of the Presidency, called on Serbian President Milutinovic and FRY Foreign Minister Jovanovic on 11 March to urge Belgrade to meet the international community's concerns. He made clear to both of them that we expect President Milosevic to engage with the Kosovar Albanian leadership in a process of meaningful dialogue without preconditions. Contact Group Foreign Ministers reaffirmed this message when they met in Bonn on 25 March.

Gibraltar

Mr. Howard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons he has made no representations to the Spanish Ambassador on the incident which took place on Thursday 13 March in which a Royal Gibraltar police launch was struck by a Spanish helicopter. [36782]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The British Ambassador in Madrid protested to the Director General for European and North American Affairs in the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs on 17 March over this incident. On 24 March, he handed over video and photographic evidence of dangerous flying by a Spanish coastguard helicopter during this incident.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Aer Lingus Crash

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will ensure that when the 30 year period following the crash of the Aer Lingus Viscount in the Irish Sea on 24 March 1968 has expired, all Government documents relating to this crash will be made public. [34810]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 17 March 1998]: The Air Accidents Investigation Branch file relating to this accident was reviewed by the Department of Transport in September 1994. It was not selected by the Public Record Office for permanent preservation in the National Archive and was destroyed at that time.

The Ministry of Defence has documentation relating to the search and rescue aspects in the immediate aftermath of the accident which will be made public in accordance with the 30 year rule.

"Planning for the Communities of the Future"

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if an environmental appraisal, using the guidance contained in "Policy Appraisal and the Environment", has been undertaken to assess the environmental implications of the "Planning for the Communities of the Future" White Paper; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [35645]

Mr. Raynsford: The strategy outlined in the "Planning for the Communities of the Future" policy document was arrived at after a process conducted broadly along the lines outlined in "Policy Appraisal and the Environment". There is no single appraisal document as such. As the guidance notes,

"the precise conduct of each appraisal will vary from case to case".

Road Traffic

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the use of increased journey times in urban areas as a means of discouraging travelling by private cars. [35639]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Results from a study of motorists in a report entitled "Responses to Congestion" have been used as the basis for Guidance on Induced and Suppressed Traffic, published in February 1997, in the Design Manual for Roads and Bridges. A brief description of that study is given in Volume 12.2.2 Annexe C of the Manual. That advice recommends using predicted changes to travel times by car and public transport as standard inputs to well established mode choice models, where complex changes to behaviour are expected.

A more recent study of the effects on the volume of road traffic when roads were closed or their capacity restricted for a variety of purposes did not report the effect on journey times.

Green Ministers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the next meeting of Green Ministers will take place. [35646]

Mr. Meacher: The meeting is currently being organised and an announcement will be made in due course.

Motorway Service Areas

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for the development of motorway service areas have been made since the 15 miles apart guidance was adopted; how many applications have been subject to a public inquiry; and how many of those were (a) approved and (b) refused. [36307]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The minimum spacing between motorway service areas (MSAs) was reduced from 30 miles to 15 in 1993. Since then, exactly 100 MSA planning applications have been referred to the Highways Agency by local planning authorities. 52 of them were subsequently the subject of public inquiries and, of those, 8 were granted planning permission and 44 refused.

Local Authority Rents

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Erith and Thamesmead (Mr. Austin) of 14 November 1997, Official Report, columns 698–99, if he will recalculate the figures on the gross cost of reducing local authority rents taking into account the benefit and tax changes made in the Budget. [36356]

Mr. Raynsford: Not yet. My previous reply was based on calculations derived from LAMOD, the Department's model for estimating the public expenditure effects of a change in guideline rent policy for local authorities. The model uses a Housing Benefit Ready Reckoner, which will be updated in due course to reflect the Chancellor of the Exchequer's proposals for tax and benefit changes. We would not expect these changes to have a significant effect on the figures in my previous reply.

Benson v Boyce (Private Hire Vehicles)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to make a decision on his consultative paper on the High Court judgment in the case of Benson v Boyce (Private Hire Vehicles); and if he will make a statement. [36419]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The results of the consultation process are under consideration. I hope to make an announcement shortly on how we intend to proceed.

Aggregates

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to revise the mineral planning guidance for the extraction of aggregates. [36436]

Mr. Raynsford: We propose to start the review of Minerals Planning Guidance Note 6 (MPG6): Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England, later this year.

Sewers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he has made of the environmental health impacts of infiltration into public and private sewers; and if he will make a statement; [36203]

(2) what assessment he has made of the environmental health impacts of the leakage of sewage into the ground from public and private sewers; and if he will make a statement. [36204]

Angela Eagle: I understand that experience within the water industry shows that the level of infiltration into sewers normally represents a very small proportion of the total flow a sewer can carry. Infiltration into sewers therefore has an insignificant bearing on such issues as sewage treatment, the operation of combined sewer overflows and flooding from sewers.

My Department held a meeting with the Sewer Renovation Federation at the end of last year to discuss a number of issues, including claims that leakage from sewers might be causing problems. The conclusion of that meeting was that there was no evidence that leakage is causing significant health or pollution problems at present.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what estimate he has made of the number of premises incorrectly connecting surface water drainage to foul only sewers; who has responsibility for securing remedial action by property owners in such circumstances; and if he will make a statement; [36205]

(2) what proportion of the public sewers in England and Wales are (a) combined foul and surface water, (b) foul water only and (c) surface water only; and if he will make a statement. [36202]

Angela Eagle: Information is not held centrally on the numbers of foul and surface water sewers or the numbers of illegal connections involving such drainage systems. I understand that sewerage undertakers normally require separate foul and surface water drainage systems where new sewers are to be adopted on completion. Sewerage undertakers are responsible for taking action under provisions in the Water Industry Act 1991 against illegal connections.

Drinking Water

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1997, Official Report, columns 349–50, if his Department classified those dwellings with water supplies with a lead concentration exceeding 50 µg/litre, on the basis of information up to 1995, as being unfit for human habitation; what assessment he has made of the public health implications of such lead concentrations; and if he will make a statement. [36199]

Angela Eagle: The current housing fitness standard requires a dwelling to have an adequate piped supply of wholesome water but does not specify concentrations of contaminants that may render a dwelling unfit for human habitation.

At sustained concentrations exceeding 50 µg/l, drinking water is likely to be the major source of lead intake. But is unlikely to contribute significantly to those exceptionally high levels of intake of lead which result in clinical lead poisoning. I understand that the lower levels of exposure which are experienced are associated, in epidemiological studies, with small subclinical changes, including decrements in neuropsychological development in children and increased blood pressure in adults.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1997, Official Report, columns 349–50, how and where he proposes to test drinking water for compliance with the proposed EC Drinking Water Directive; when he expects this Directive will come into effect; if standards will apply when water enters a property; what will be the impact of the directive on his Department's assessment of the future fitness of dwellings; and if he will make a statement. [36201]

Angela Eagle: The proposal for a revised Drinking Water Directive is at the stage of the Council having agreed a Common Position, and is being considered by the European Parliament. After their Second Reading, it will come back to Council for consideration of any amendments. We hope that the Directive will be adopted this autumn. Under the present draft, Member States will have 5 years from adoption to meet the interim standard for lead of 25 µg/l and 15 years from adoption to meet the standard of 10 µg/l.

The present draft of the Directive requires sampling at the tap, but provides that Member States will generally have fulfilled their obligations if it can be established that non-compliance with a parametric value is due to the domestic distribution system. This is defined as the part of the supply system that is not the responsibility of the water supplier. The draft Directive requires treatment measures to reduce the risk of non-compliance due to the domestic distribution system, and that the property owner is advised of possible remedial action that they could take.

It is too early to judge the impact of the Directive on the assessment of the future fitness of dwellings. We are currently reviewing the housing fitness standard. A consultation paper issued on 10 February 1998 invited comments on a number of proposals and options for change. A copy of the paper has been placed in the Library.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1997, Official Report, columns 349–50, if he will ensure that future English House Condition Surveys indicate that figures for unfitness from the survey do not take account of lead in water; and if he will make a statement. [36200]

Angela Eagle: Surveyors do not take samples to establish the quality of water in a property in the English House Condition Survey and its figures for unfitness do not take account of lead in water. The main Report of the 1996 Survey will be published within the next two months and will make this clear.

House Condition Survey

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects (a) the results of the 1996 English House Condition Survey and (b) the Energy Supplement to the 1996 English House Condition Survey will be published; and if he will make a statement. [36198]

Mr. Raynsford: The finding of the 1996 English House Condition Survey will be published as a detailed, priced report, together with a separate summary of findings available free of charge in mid May. We expect to publish detailed energy findings from the 1996 English House Condition Survey by Autumn 1998. However, some information on heating facilities and thermal insulation will be included in the main report of this survey.

Rents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tenants in England pay gross weekly rents in the ranges (a) £0 to £9.99, (b) £10 to £14.99, (c) £15 to £19.99, (d) £20 to £24.99, (e) £25 to £29.99, (f) £30 to £34.99, (g) £35 to £39.99, (h) £40 to £44.99, (i) £45 to £49.99, (j) £50 to £54.99, (k) £55 to £59.99, (l) £60 to £64.99, (m) £65 to £69.99, (n) £70 to £74.99, (o) £75 to £79.99, (p) £80 to £89.99, (q) £90 to £99.99, (r) £100 to £109.99, (s) £110 to £119.99, (t) £120 to £129.99 and (u) £130 or above, separately identifying figures for (i) local authority, (ii) housing association and (iii) private tenants and breaking (i) to (iii) down by standard region. [36318]

Mr. Raynsford: Estimates for 1996–97 from the Survey of English Housing are given below in as much detail as the sample sizes allow.

Correspondence

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to reply to the letter of 4 February from the hon. Member for Reigate on behalf of his constituent Mrs. A. M. Davidson. [36489]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have replied to the hon. Member today.

Canals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to promote the use of canals for transport in England. [36584]

Ms Glenda Jackson: This is one of the issues we are looking at in our review of transport policy. We expect to publish a white paper in the Spring.

Countryside Rights Association

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the Countryside Rights Association. [36575]

Angela Eagle: My Department has received no representations from the Countryside Rights Association.

Rights of Way Review Committee

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which (a) organisations and (b) individuals will be represented on the Rights of Way Review Committee. [36574]

Angela Eagle: The Rights of Way Review Committee is currently reviewing its membership and has consulted existing and potential members. The results of this consultation will be considered at the Committee's next meeting in June.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria govern the membership of the Rights of Way Review Committee. [36573]

Angela Eagle: Membership is by invitation of the Committee.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the terms of reference of the Rights of Way Review Committee. [36576]

Angela Eagle: The Rights of Way Review Committee is an informal, non-statutory committee whose terms of reference are

"to review matters relating to public rights of way in England and Wales with the aim of agreeing, by consensus, proposals for action".

Water Resources

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what percentage of reservoir capacity is currently full in each water company area; and what was the figure (a) six and (b) 12 months ago; [37003]

(2) what is the current percentage level of maximum groundwater in each water company area; and what was the figure (a) six and (b) 12 months ago; [37004]

(3) what assessment he has made of the likelihood of water shortages in 1998. [37005]

Angela Eagle: The Institute of Hydrology and the British Geological Survey publish jointly a monthly Hydrological summary for Great Britain. This contains full information on reservoir stocks and on groundwater levels at representative sites during the last 12 months. That for February 1998 states that reservoir stocks remain healthy, while groundwater levels are within the normal range throughout most of the country but remain very depressed in parts of the English lowlands.

The Environment Agency keeps my Department informed on a weekly basis of the water resources position in England and Wales. We expect water companies to maintain supplies at all times and we do not currently envisage them having any general difficulty in doing that, although exceptionally low groundwater levels in some areas will require careful resource management. At the beginning of February, we commissioned the Environment Agency to prepare a more detailed report on prospects for water supplies this year, to be based on the resources position at 31 March. We expect to receive that report towards the end of April.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the Government's percentage target for the reduction in emissions of greenhouse gases; and over what timescale this target applies. [36884]

Angela Eagle: The European Community agreed at Kyoto to a legally binding target of a 8% reduction in greenhouse gas emissions below 1990 levels over the period 2008–12. Reaching a decision on how to share out that target between Member States is a priority for Environment Council in June. Domestically our aim is to reduce emissions of CO_2 by 20% below 1990 levels by 2010, as set out in our Manifesto. We intend to issue a consultation paper in the summer, focusing largely on how we can ensure we meet our legally binding target, but also considering how we can move beyond that towards our 20% aim.

Bicycles (Trains)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with rail companies about reducing charges for carrying bicycles on trains. [36610]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Provision for the carriage of bicycles is an important issue which ministers have raised on a number of occasions with the train operating companies. Under their franchise agreements, train operators are required, so far as reasonably practicable and subject to the availability of appropriate space on their rolling stock, to ensure that facilities for the carriage of bicycles are made available, at reasonable charges (if any) to passengers wishing to use their services. The Objectives Instructions and Guidance (OIG), issued on behalf of the Secretary of State to the Franchising Director on 6 November 1997, require him to discuss with train operators who plan to order new rolling stock the provision of suitable space for accompanying bicycles on trains, and to encourage operators to provide suitable facilities for cyclists at the stations they manage.

Ordnance Survey

Liz Blackman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what performance targets have been set for the Ordnance Survey Department and Executive Agency in the year 1998–99. [37059]

Mr. Raynsford: The following performance targets have been set for Ordnance Survey in 1998–99:

1. To recover at least 90% of the costs incurred by the Agency.
2. To ensure that, by 31 March 1999, 98% of existing major detail is surveyed and available to customers in the National Topographic Database at any one time. The target will increase to 99% by the year 2002.
3. In order to provide a quality service to customers, to dispatch products in response to orders as follows:

   95% of all Land-Line digital map units within 5 working days; and 92% of small scale products within 5 working days.

4. To increase by 5% the annual revenue earned per member of staff employed.

These targets, some of which are being incrementally increased, are closely associated with the Corporate Aims of Ordnance Survey and demonstrate the Agency's continuing commitment to customers and to improved value for money for all its stakeholders.

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the financial management and policy review of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. [36885]

Angela Eagle: As part of the Government's programme of regular five-yearly financial management and policy reviews of non-departmental public bodies, my Department has conducted a thorough review of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. The resulting report is published today, and a copy has been placed in the Library of each House. In accordance with the guidance on such reviews, we have assessed the extent to which the Commission and Executive's functions are necessary for the achievement of the Government's policies, and whether there is scope for privatising, contracting out or transferring all or part of its functions to another body.

In carrying out the study, my Department has consulted widely with relevant organisations with an interest in the Commission and Executive's work, and held a public consultation. We are grateful for their contribution. The Review found that Government needs to take responsibility for setting health and safety standards and enforcing compliance with these standards. The public consultation endorsed the importance of the work of the Commission and Executive and the professionalism with which they carry it out. We considered HSC/E's approach to contracting out, looking in particular at their inspection and permissioning regimes, and concluded that it was not appropriate to ask them to change their current policy.

The Review found scope for further work in spreading best practice in consistency of enforcement by local authorities, and for considering extension of the range of work for which the Executive charges to the assessment of safety cases and the costs of inspection of those sites and installations which submit safety cases. It also made a number of minor recommendations. Work on these is being taken forward.

This Government attach great importance to maintaining and improving health and safety standards at the workplace. We fully support the vital work carried out by the Health and Safety Commission and Executive in setting and enforcing those standards and in underpinning employer's responsibilities to prevent accidents and ill-health at work. Because good standards of health and safety at the workplace are a higher priority for this Government, we have approved an extra £4.5 million for HSE's work in 1998/99. Funding for HSC/E's work in the longer term is being considered within the Comprehensive Spending Review for all the Department's activities. The creation of DETR has brought together a range of responsibilities for safety, particularly in the transport field, which will provide new opportunities to consider how best practice should be shared between the different modes. We are determined not to become complacent about health and safety, and will continue to work with the Commission to ensure that we are prepared for the health and safety challenges which will face us into the new millennium.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many visits to West Sussex have been made by (a) the Secretary of State and (b) Ministers responsible for planning matters (i) between 1 May 1997 and 8 December 1997 and (ii) since 8 December 1997. [36786]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions visited the County on 19 November 1997. No visits have been made by Ministers responsible for planning.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answers of 9 March 1998, Official Report, column 23, and 18 March 1998, Official Report, column 610, if he will define (a) a Government programme and (b) a Government initiative. [36324]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The hon. Member introduced the terms 'Government spending programme' and 'Government initiative' in his Questions and was answered accordingly. The answers of 9 and 18 March made clear that the Government's commitment to the principle of additionality means that we will not use the Lottery to support programmes or initiatives which should be funded from Government expenditure.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the National Lottery regulator in Scotland; [36133]

(2) if he will list the (a) location of, (b) running costs of and (c) salary costs of the head office of the Lottery Regulator; what percentage of total staff are based (a) at head office, (ii) in London and (iii) in Scotland; and what percentage of salary and running costs are incurred in (A) London and (B) Scotland; [36134]

(3) if he will list the (a) location, (b) running costs and (c) salary costs of the head office of the Office of the National Lottery; what percentage of total staff are based (i) at head office, (ii) in London and (iii) in Scotland; what percentage of salary and running costs are incurred in (A) London and (B) Scotland; and if he will make a statement on the office's responsibilities in Scotland. [36143]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 25 and 26 March 1998]: The responsibilities of the Director General of the National Lottery are the same in all parts of the United Kingdom. He must exercise his functions in the manner he considers is most likely to secure that the National Lottery is run, and every lottery that forms part of it is promoted, with all due propriety, and that the interests of every participant in a Lottery that forms part of the National Lottery are protected; and, subject to the foregoing he must seek to secure that the amount the National Lottery raises for good causes is as great as possible. He must also comply with any directions he is issued by the Secretary of State under section 11 of the National Lottery etc Act 1993;

The head office of the Office of the National Lottery (OFLOT) is located in central London. A further officer is located in Watford. OFLOT's total running costs (excluding salaries) for the current financial year are estimated at £880,000. The salary costs for the head office are estimated at £626,712, 96 per cent. of total salary costs; other salary costs relate to the office in Watford. 92 per cent. of staff are based at the head office in London. No staff are based in Scotland, although regulatory activities include visits to Scotland.

Policy Reviews

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many Ministerial policy reviews have been initiated within his Department since 1 May 1997; and when they are expected to report. [36072]

Mr. Chris Smith: In common with all other Government Departments, the Department for Culture Media and Sport has been undertaking a comprehensive spending review. This has looked at objectives, policies and spending priorities across all the Department's responsibilities.

The Department has also conducted a number of individual reviews alongside the spending review. These were:

- a review of the National Lottery resulted in the publication last July of a White Paper, "The People's Lottery" and the subsequent introduction of the National Lottery Bill now before the House;
- a review of the arrangements for celebrating the Millennium;
- a review of film policy, the outcome of which was published on 25 March;
- a review of the list of nationally important sporting events which must be made available to generally available free-to-air terrestrial TV channels.

Listed Sporting Events

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received from (a) Mr. Rupert Murdoch and (b) News International in respect of the listed sporting events. [37018]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have received no representations from Mr. Murdoch or News International on this subject. I consulted BSkyB, in which News International has 40% shareholding, along with other broadcasters and many other interested parties, on the criteria to be used in my current review of the list and on the events included on the list.

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who appointed the review committee on listed events; and what (a) geographical and (b) other criteria were used in making the appointments. [36822]

Mr. Chris Smith: I appointed the members of the Advisory Group on Listed Events. My main criterion in making the appointments was knowledge of the sporting, broadcasting and public policy issues involved in the review of the list. The members of the group, however, come from a variety of different backgrounds and from many different regions of the United Kingdom.

Broadcasting

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the Broadcasting Standards (a) Council and (b) Commission; if he will list the

(i) location of, (ii) running costs of, (iii) salary costs of and (iv) number of staff based at the head offices of these bodies; what percentage of total staff are based (A) at head office, (B) London and (C) Scotland; and what percentage of salary and running costs are incurred in (1) Scotland and (2) London. [36132]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 26 March 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 26 March 1998, Official Report, column 223.

Sport Governing Bodies

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 26 February 1998, Official Report, column 322, how much was spent on administration of each of the sports organisations listed in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will separately identify the costs relating to the governing bodies. [33541]

Mr. Banks: This information is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The United Kingdom Sports Council has advised me that to obtain this information it would need specifically to examine the annual accounts of each of the 414 governing bodies, and to assess against an agreed definition of administration the total amount expended by each body on administration.

Funding by the Sports Councils is for carefully targeted programmes, with agreed objectives. It may be used to contribute towards the administrative costs associated with these programmes but governing bodies are not required to identify separately the administrative costs in their grant agreements. Support is sometimes given for the appointment of key personnel at Chief Executive, Director of Finance, Coaching or Development level, and the administrative support staff for these officers, to ensure that a sport is well managed, particularly where it is in receipt of complementary funding from the National Lottery.

Libraries

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much money his Department has spent on the digitisation of educational material for libraries in each of the last three years. [36207]

Mr. Chris Smith: None. The management and development of the core public library service is the responsibility of local authorities. The Government have announced that the New Opportunities Fund, as part of its educational remit, will provide £50 million of Lottery money to support the digitisation of lifelong learning and educational material which is held to a great extent in public libraries. This will support the development of new IT-based services, additional to the existing core library services.

Departmental Employees

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of his core Departmental staff; and if he will list the (a) percentage of and (b) number of core staff based in London and the total salary bill and running costs for core staff. [36126]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The 1998 annual report, the first for the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, will be published on 3 April. It will set out the activities and responsibilities of the Department and its staff. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

The total number of core departmental staff is 370, of whom 368 (99.5%) are based in London. The estimated 1997–98 total paybill for core departmental staff is £10 million. The estimated 1997–98 gross running cost for the core department is £21 million.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Rwanda

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance her Department is currently giving to Rwanda; and if she will make a statement. [35747]

Clare Short: A £25 million support programme is being targeted at the rehabilitation priorities of the Government of Rwanda.

Technical support is helping the Ministry of Finance to address the key objective of increasing revenue; support for the Ministry of Gender and Social Affairs is helping to tackle problems faced by the large number of female-headed households and support for the Ministry of Education is helping to strengthen their planning and resource allocation capacity. We are providing financial support for the Government's efforts to establish an unarmed community police force and to demobilise members of the armed forces. We are the largest bilateral donor in the area of human rights monitoring and protection in Rwanda.

In addition to our rehabilitation support, we continue to respond to requests for humanitarian assistance and are providing financial support to NGO's involved in food security for vulnerable groups.

We are working closely with the World bank and the IMF. We have financed technical inputs to expert teams advising the Government of Rwanda on longer term economic strategies and are liaising closely with the Government and the International Financial Institutions (IFI) on initiatives being considered to address debt.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the projects for the improved provision of (a) primary and (b) adult basic education in Bosnia and Herzegovina funded by her Department. [36313]

Clare Short: My Department has no projects dealing directly with primary or adult basic education in Bosnia. As a single donor it is not possible for us to tackle every sector. Our contributions in selected sectors have been very large, and other donors have focused on other sectors such as education. That said, we have made substantial contributions to education through our community micro-projects. This has included repair and refurbishment of many primary and secondary schools and provision of materials and school equipment over a wide area of Western Bosnia, in both entities.

Following consultation with the authorities in Bosnia, the focus of our activities for the forthcoming year will be refugee return and reconciliation, health system reform, media training, development of the small and medium sized enterprise sector, regional development, management training, and institutional development. We shall also conclude activities in inter-entity electricity transmission reconstruction. In addition we expect to provide advice and support to the Government of Republika Srpska and we are considering how we might help further with demining.

China

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the programmes funded by her Department in China on (a) education, (b) health, (c) the environment and (d) economic and administrative reform, together with their costs for (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 1997–98. [36312]

Clare Short: The information requested is set out in the table. Figures for expenditure in 1997–98 are estimated. There are presently no projects in the health sector, but we are planning a mission to China to explore the possibilities for future involvement in this area.

Multilateral Agreement on Investment

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from non-Governmental organisations about the Multilateral Agreement on Investment; and if she will make a statement. [36980]

Clare Short: There have been ongoing consultations with NGOs by Government Ministers and officials on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI). My right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development met NGO representatives on Thursday 26 March to discuss the findings of the recently published report commissioned by the Department for International Development on the development implications of the MAI.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made to the OECD about the Multilateral Investment Agreement; and if she will make a statement. [36837]

Clare Short: The Government are engaged as a negotiating party in discussion of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) in the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), on which the Department of Trade and Industry leads. My Department is fully engaged in this process. The report commissioned by the Department for International Development on the development implications of the MAI, which has been placed in the libraries of both Houses, will be made available to our negotiating partners. I will be making a response for the Government shortly.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from business sources about the Multilateral Agreement on Investment; and if she will make a statement. [36836]

Clare Short: Consultation with business sources is part of the Government's ongoing process of consultations on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) with all interested parties. The Business and Industry Advisory Committee of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) has also been regularly consulted during the negotiations. My Department's particular concern is that the interests of developing countries should be protected and, if possible, enhanced by the MAI.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact multilateral investment agreements will have on poorer developing countries; and how that impact will be reflected in her Department's policies. [37006]

Clare Short: I have placed copies of the report that my Department commissioned on the development implications of the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) in the Libraries of both Houses. We welcome the conclusion that accession to the MAI could offer substantial opportunities for developing countries. The report contains a number of specific recommendations. We are now studying these and other issues raised in the report urgently.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has received from the TUC about the Multilateral Agreement on Investment; and if she will make a statement. [36838]

Clare Short: Consultation with the TUC is part of the Government's ongoing process of consultations on the Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI) with all interested parties. The Trade Union Advisory Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) has also been regularly consulted during the negotiations. My Department's particular concern is that the interests of developing countries should be protected and, if possible, enhanced by the MAI.

European Development Fund

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she expects the £1.08 billion committed by her Department to the European Development Fund will be disbursed; and if she will make a statement. [36843]

Clare Short: Disbursements from the eighth European Development Fund (EDF) can begin only after the ratification of the Mid-Term Review of the Lomé IV Convention by all EU Member States and at least two-thirds of the African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) States. Two Member States have yet to complete ratification of the Mid-Term Review but it is estimated that EDF VIII will enter into force later this Summer. I am very concerned by the delay in the ratification of the Mid-Term Review, which I hope can be completed as soon as possible.

Least-developed Countries

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list those countries which have acquired, or re-acquired LDC status as a result of currency parity changes in the last 12 months; and if she will indicate any resultant change in her Department's policy in respect of each country. [36842]

Clare Short: The UN, which is responsible, through its Committee on Development Planning, for maintaining and regularly reviewing the list of Least-developed Countries, takes a number of economic and other factors into account in determining whether countries warrant Least-developed Country status. The list of Least-developed Countries was last reviewed by the UN at the end of 1997. No countries were added to the list.

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Healey), 21 January 1998, Official Report, columns 568–71, and to the hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands), 9 June 1997, Official Report, columns 302–10, when each of the Cabinet committees listed was formed. [33121]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 March 1998]: Most of the committees were established shortly after the Government came to power, in May and June last year.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to establish a global database of information relating to millennium compliance; and if he will make a statement. [34507]

The Prime Minister: I do not believe it would be practical to develop a database covering the whole world. However, Action 2000 is working with the UK IT supply sector to develop a database of relevant information on operating systems, software, fixing tools and support services available in the UK. Action 2000 plans to make its information available to UK businesses through their publications material and web site.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Prime Minister what action he has taken to strengthen the central co-ordination of the Government's programme to tackle the millennium date change problem. [37150]

The Prime Minister: I have established a central unit to co-ordinate the government's work on the Millennium date change problem. The unit will be located in the Cabinet Office and will report directly to the President of the Board of Trade and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

I have also broadened the terms of reference of the Ministerial Group on the Millennium Date Change (MISC4), chaired by the President of the Board of Trade, to drive action across the whole of the public and private sectors, while continuing to give priority to preparing the national infrastructure for the Millennium date change. In parallel, I have also broadened the terms of reference of its Sub-Group (MISC4(P), chaired by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, to cover the whole of the public sector as well as Government Departments. This will provide a single focus for central Government and the wider public sector. Taken together, the changes will ensure that nothing is allowed to fall between the cracks.

The membership of each group reflects their wider roles, and ensures action is effectively tied in with that of other countries.

The revised terms of reference and membership are as follows:

Ministerial Group on the Millennium Date change (MISC4)

Composition

President of the Board of Trade and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Chair)

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster

Minister of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Paymaster General

Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office

Minister of State, Home Office

Minister of State, Ministry of Defence

Minister of State, Scottish Office

Minister of State, Department of Health

Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department for Education and Employment

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Trade and Industry

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Welsh Office

Other Ministers are invited to attend for items in which they have a departmental interest.

The Chairman of Action 2000 and the Prime Minister's Adviser on the Year 2000 problem are invited to attend.

Terms of Reference

The terms of reference are:

"To drive action in the public and private sectors, including the national infrastructure, to prevent damage from the failure of electronic systems related to the Year 2000 date change".

Ministerial Sub-Group on the Millennium Date Change (MISC4(P)

Composition

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (Chair)

Minister of State, Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Paymaster General

Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office

Minister of State, Home Office

Minister of State, Ministry of Defence

Minister of State, Scottish Office

Minister of State, Department of Health

Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department for Education and Employment

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Trade and Industry

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Social Security

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Welsh Office

Other Ministers are invited to attend for items in which they have a departmental interest.

The Prime Minister's Adviser on the Year 2000 problem is invited to attend.

Terms of Reference

The terms of reference are:

"To drive action across central governmental Departments, Agencies and the wider public sector to prevent damage from the failure of electronic systems related to the Year 2000 date change".

Defamation Proceedings

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if Ministers have to obtain agreement from him and from a law officer before issuing or threatening to issue proceedings for supposed defamatory allegations; [34865]

(2) if he will list the dates since 1 May on which Ministers received his permission to issue defamation proceedings, and the names of those Ministers. [34866]

The Prime Minister: Ministers are required under the Ministerial Code to consult the Law Officers before initiating defamation proceedings. There is no requirement for Ministers to seek my agreement before bringing such action.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister when the Deputy Prime Minister consulted him and the law officers in advance of the letter dated 3 March by Davenport Lyons to the editor of Punch. [34864]

The Prime Minister: On 9 March, having received a reply to the letter of 3 March from the solicitors acting on behalf of Punch, my right honourable Friend the Deputy Prime Minister approached the Law Officers for advice before making any decision on whether or not to issue proceedings, as required by the Ministerial Code.

Ministerial Accommodation

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Prime Minister what is the official valuation of the accommodation and furnishings provided to each Minister at public expense. [34707]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 March 1998]: In line with the practice of successive Administrations, no separate valuation of individual offices or the residential areas of buildings or of the furnishings in either of them is held. It could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bilderberg Group

Mr. Gill: To ask the Prime Minister which members of his Government have attended meetings of the Bilderberg Group. [34298]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 March 1998]: None.

Environmental Appraisal

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance is issued to Government departments on the need to conduct an environmental appraisal in respect of proposed legislation. [35641]

The Prime Minister: Details of current and proposed guidance to Government Departments on environmental appraisal are set out in the answer which my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment gave to the hon. Member on 16 February 1998, Official Report, columns 459–60. This guidance applies to proposed legislation as it does to other proposals for policies or programmes.

Iran

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what initiatives he proposes to develop relations with Iran during the British Presidency of the EU; and if he proposes a Presidency visit to Tehran at political director level. [35852]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 March 1998]: We, and our EU partners, are encouraged by positive political developments in Iran. As holders of the EU Presidency, we have initiated a review of EU policy towards Iran. At the 23 February General Affairs Council, EU Foreign Ministers agreed that the EU should increase the level of political contact with Iran and, as a first step, decided to lift the ban on official bilateral Ministerial visits which had been agreed by the April 1997 General Affairs Council. The Council also affirmed the importance of maintaining vigilance in the EU's longstanding areas of concern.

The EU is currently discussing how and at what level to enhance its political contacts with Iran, which may lead to some form of Presidency contact at senior official level.

Policing (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Prime Minister if discussions with the Irish Republic's Taioseach and officials from both the Northern Ireland Office and Dublin's Department of Foreign Affairs and Justice have taken place concerning the establishment of an international commission on policing in Northern Ireland. [35656]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 March 1998]: No such discussions have taken place. The Government are looking forward to further discussion of policing issues, including the option of establishing an independent Commission, with the Northern Ireland parties in Strand One of the Talks.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what are the specific functions of (a) Mr. Philip Bassett and (b) Mr. David Bradshaw within the Strategic Communications Unit. [35935]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 March 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 14 January 1998, Official Report, columns 233–34.

British Beef

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Prime Minister if he will ensure that British beef is offered at all meals served in connection with meetings of the Council of Ministers during the remainder of the UK Presidency. [36319]

The Prime Minister: Menus for official functions hosted by Ministers are based on seasonal foods from the UK including beef. The final choice of a menu depends on the dietary requirements of the guests, the nature of the occasion, the preference of the host and on other menus being used during a particular visit.

Beef was served most recently at the buffet supper given at York on 20 March by the Chancellor of the Exchequer for visiting EU Finance Ministers.

Bloody Sunday

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1998, Official Report, columns 279–80, if he will instruct those Government departments which may still have papers relating to the events of Bloody Sunday to make them available to the Saville Inquiry and the representatives of the relatives of those killed and injured on that date. [36501]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Government will give the Inquiry the fullest possible co-operation in carrying out its work and wherever possible will make available to the Inquiry all relevant material. It will be for the Inquiry to decide whether or not material should be published or made available to the representatives of the relatives of those killed or injured on Bloody Sunday.

Hospitality

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the newspaper proprietors who have received Government hospitality since 1 May 1997. [37038]

The Prime Minister: Such records are not held centrally and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rupert Murdoch

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received from Labour Members expressing concern about the extent of media ownership by Mr. Rupert Murdoch. [37047]

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister who initiated the recent telephone conversation between him and the Italian Premier, Romano Prodi; and what factors led him to discuss the proposed takeover of Mediaset by Rupert Murdoch. [36500]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 March 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer I gave to the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Collins) on 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 494.

Press Briefings (Anthrax)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what (a) press briefings and (b) other dissemination of information in respect of the threat of Iraqi use of anthrax originated from his office; at what time and on what day this occurred; which newspapers were briefed; and if he will make a statement. [37019]

The Prime Minister: My official spokesman gave some comments to The Sun newspaper during the afternoon on Monday 23 March after they had approached my office with their story. After publication of The Sun, all media who inquired were given comments by the duty press officer. In addition, my official spokesman replied to questions at the 11 am briefing for Lobby journalists on Tuesday 24 March.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan; [36670]

(2) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the green transport plan. [36638]

Dr. David Clark [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all departments in December last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". My Department has started to consider how to respond to its recommendations.

CABINET OFFICE

Broadcasters

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio, pursuant to his answer of 24 March 1998, Official Report, column 119, for what reason it is not his policy to say whether he has met (a) Mr. Rupert Murdoch and (b) representatives of News International since 1 January. [37033]

Mr. Mandelson: It is not a matter of policy, but of practicality. I meet representatives of broadcasters and other media organisations very regularly in the course of my ministerial duties. I have not met Rupert Murdoch in the course of those duties.

Open Government

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what open Government measures he has taken. [37034]

Mr. Mandelson: In common with my Ministerial colleagues I carry out all my duties in accordance with the principles of openness with Parliament and the public that are laid down by the Prime Minister in the Ministerial Code.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will list his responsibilities in respect of the Strategic Communications Unit. [37039]

Mr. Mandelson: The Strategic Communications Unit is based in Number 10 and answers to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, working through the Prime Minister's Chief Press Secretary. I have regular contact with the Unit in view of my responsibilities for the strategic implementation and presentation of Government policy.

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister without Portfolio if he will estimate the cost of the giant sculptures that will appear in the Millennium Dome. [31969]

Mr. Mandelson: The costs of individual zones within the Dome are still being finalised within the total budget for the Millennium Experience. The Corporate Plan of the New Millennium Experience Company, which is now being finalised, will contain budgets for the component parts of the Millennium Experience project covering the years 1997–98 (actual) and 1998–99 to 2000–01 (forecast).

SCOTLAND

Damp Housing

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of houses affected by dampness in Scotland. [35898]

Mr. Macdonald: I refer my hon. Friend to the report of the 1996 Scottish House Condition Survey, a copy of which is in the Library. The Survey estimated that some 177,000 dwellings in Scotland were affected by dampness, representing 8 per cent. of the total occupied housing stock.

Community Service Orders

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many community service orders were imposed in (a) Glasgow and (b) Scotland, in 1997. [35900]

Mr. McLeish: The number of persons given community service in 1996 by courts located in (a) Glasgow was 1,195 and (b) Scotland was 5,711. Information for 1997 is not yet available.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of vacant dwellings in Scotland. [35901]

Mr. Macdonald: I refer my hon. Friend to the report of the 1996 Scottish House Condition Survey, a copy of which is in the Library. The Survey estimated that there were some 109,000 vacant dwellings in Scotland, representing 5 per cent. of the total housing stock. Of these, 64,000 were estimated to be vacant temporarily while the property was being sold or re-let, 34,000 were estimated to be longer term vacant properties with the status of the remainder being unknown.

Inward Investment

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many manufacturing sector jobs Locate in Scotland has attracted in each of the years since it was established to the City of Glasgow council area. [36032]

Mr. Wilson: The number of jobs associated with manufacturing projects attracted to the City of Glasgow Council area by Locate in Scotland is as follows:

Year	New jobs	Safeguarded jobs	Total jobs
1981–82	176	1,717	1,893
1982–83	0	0	0
1983–84	0	0	0
1984–85	437	169	606
1985–86	403	531	934
1986–87	53	352	405
1987–88	346	46	392
1988–89	70	0	70
1989–90	451	68	519
1990–91	97	530	627
1991–92	101	126	227
1992–93	20	181	201
1993–94	459	200	659
1994–95	117	211	328
1995–96	94	669	763
1996–97	43	55	98
Total	2,867	4,855	7,722

Notes:

1. The above figures relate only to projects handled by Locate in Scotland (LIS) and The Scottish Office. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment decision and take no account of subsequent developments. A few projects may not have proceeded and others may have been reduced in scale as a result of changes in the commercial environment. Equally, however, some projects may have led to more investment and more jobs than originally anticipated; and the figures take no account of the substantial number of new jobs created indirectly in supplier companies. Experience over a number of years indicates that, on average, around two-thirds of planned direct jobs are created.
2. Figures for years prior to 1991–92 relate to projects with a Glasgow postcode and may therefore include a few projects outwith the City of Glasgow Council area.

World Cup

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many tickets to Scotland's matches in World Cup 1998 have been obtained by his Department; and to whom these tickets have been distributed. [36804]

Mr. Galbraith: Tickets have yet to be allocated, but it is hoped that it will be possible to secure one for each of Scotland's World Cup matches in France.

Autistic Children

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those councils which provide separate facilities for the secondary education of autistic children and in each case the number of (a) locations and (b) full-time teacher equivalents at each location. [36685]

Mr. Wilson: The annual School Census currently collects information on provision for special educational needs in a number of broad categories. Autistic pupils would be included under the category of "language of communication disorder". The format of the existing census form does not allow autism provision to be disaggregated.

Departmental Employees

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff are employed within Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36214]

Mr. Dewar: The numbers of staff employed in The Scottish Office (including its Executive Agencies), together with details of their location, are shown in the table.

Staff in the Scottish Office located within Scotland, by council area permanent and casual staff, position as at 1 March 1998

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost to public funds of local enterprise companies in Scotland in 1998. [36861]

Mr. Wilson: The Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise budgets for 1998–99 are £455.262 million and £77.992 million respectively. The allocation of local enterprise company budgets is an operational matter for the enterprise bodies. I will ask the Chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Pre-school Education

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the arrangements for funding pre-school education in school year 1998–99. [37185]

Mr. Wilson: Universal provision of education in the pre-school year is a key part of our drive to raise standards in education, to tackle social exclusion from the earliest age, and to provide integrated early years services to support working parents. It is also a crucial component of the Government's national childcare strategy.

Having considered the responses to the consultation paper on pre-school education which I issued last November, I now announce the detailed arrangements under which local authorities will lead the further expansion of pre-school education in the 1998–99 school session. Letters have been issued today to all local authorities and provider representative organisations explaining these arrangements in detail. The key points are as follows:

£46.6 million will be distributed as grant under the Education (Scotland) Act 1996 among local authorities for the first two terms of the 1998–99 school session, on the basis of the participation of eligible children in provision.

The latest GRO estimate of pre-school year children in 1998–99 stands at 61,371; and funding will be geared to cover this number of children. Estimated population figures for each authority, together with indicative grant figures, are today being issued to all authorities.

Local authorities will be funded at an enhanced rate of grant of £1,140 over the school year 1998–99 for every eligible child occupying a part-time education place of at least 412½ hours over the year, whether in their own centres or in a centre with which they are in partnership.

Local authorities and their prospective partners will be free to negotiate the price at which places will be purchased under partnership arrangements. The principles of 'best value', taking full account of quality as well as price, should obtain. As a guideline, and taking account of the need to ensure adequate remuneration for staff in partner centres, I suggest that a quality partnership place is unlikely to be obtained for less than £850 over the year, after allowing for the recharging of any quality support services. I intend to review in the autumn authorities' progress with partnerships.

I am introducing simplified eligibility rules for pre-school grant for ease of local authority administration. Greater latitude will be given to local authorities in the configuration of education hours, so that they may respond more fully to the needs of children and their parents.

I expect all authorities, and their partners, to strive to achieve fully loaded places of at least 412½ hours education by the end of the 1998–99 school session. Where places offer less education, grant will be proportionately reduced.

In some rural areas the cost of provision can be prohibitively high. I am keen to ensure that children from rural areas should have access to the same opportunities as other children and I am therefore making an additional, one-year grant of £4 million available to 24 authorities with gaps in provision in rural areas to assist them to complete provision in their area. These resources will be used to create new provision, taking account of the needs and preferences of children and their parents and ensuring so far as possible that existing provision in registered voluntary and private centres is not displaced or replicated.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Gray: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of businesses her Department anticipates will fail to be millennium compliant by 2000; and what assessment she has made of the impact of single currency demands on programmers on millennium compliance. [27530]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 5 March 1998]: Action 2000 aims to ensure that all businesses realise the need to take action on millennium compliance in time. Enterprises working towards millennium compliance will, of course, need to take account of other information technology developments, including any relating to the launch of the single currency. The nature and extent of other work will vary very significantly between businesses and will depend on decisions taken by those businesses.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she appointed a Green Transport co-ordinator; and on what date the appointment took effect. [32475]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Guide to Green Transport Plans circulated last September by my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London encouraged Departments to appoint green transport co-ordinators. Since then the role of my green transport co-ordinator has been undertaken by one of my officials in Environment Directorate who is responsible for liaising with colleagues in other relevant Directorates.

Home Shopping

Mr. Kidney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of (a) the impact of electronic home shopping on agency and direct sales, (b) the need for protection against unfair sales pressures in the homes of consumers in respect of home shopping and (c) future price movements in the home shopping market. [36317]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Consumers must be protected against unfair sales pressure, particularly in their homes. I consider that existing provisions could be improved, and plan to publish a consultation paper setting out proposals to strengthen the consumer protection provided by the Consumer Protection (Cancellation of Contracts Concluded away from Business Premises) Regulations 1987. I shall also be consulting on the implementation of two EU Directives which provide protection for consumers using mail order, telephone sales, electronic commerce and other methods of distance selling. These are the Distance Selling Directive, which covers all organised methods of selling where the consumer and trader do not meet, up to and including the conclusion of the contract and has to be implemented by June 2000, and the Telecoms Protection Directive which protects consumers against unsolicited telephone calls and faxes and will be implemented this October.

While my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has not carried out any studies of future price movements in the home shopping market, the development of electronic commerce seems likely to be an important competitive element in retailing in the future.

Joint Environmental Markets Unit

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the (a) running costs, (b) salary costs, (c) total Government assistance to and (d) location of the Joint Environmental Markets Unit. [36239]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 March 1998]: During 1997/98 the budgets for JEMU were as follows:

Staff (shared by DTI/DETR)	380,000
Core sponsorship and export promotion	200,000
Technology Partnership Initiative	250,000
Publicity	150,000
Travel	20,000
Total	1,000,000

JEMU is located at 151 Buckingham Palace Road, London SW1W 9SS.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which companies were involved in Joint Environmental Markets Unit outward missions in 1996–97. [36238]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 March 1998]: Although the Joint Environmental Markets Unit did not itself organise any outward missions in 1996–97, the Unit supported environmental industry involvement in missions organised by the Overseas Trade Desks and others.

Joint Export Promotion Directorate

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the (a) running costs and (b) salary costs in 1997–98 of the Joint Export Promotion Directorate. [36230]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 March 1998]: In 1997–98 the running costs and salary costs of the Joint Export Promotion Directorate (JEPD)—which is staffed by officials from my Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office—were £2,841,000 and £1,848,200 respectively.

British Overseas Trade Board

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the members of the Area Advisory Groups of the British Overseas Trade Board. [36231]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Employment Service

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of Employment Service Agency Standards Office staff are based in London; what percentage of (a) salary and (b) running costs are incurred in London; and what are the total (i) salary and (ii) running costs. [36232]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 March 1998]: 60 per cent. of Employment Agency Standards staff are based in Greater London. A running cost budget of £470,000 is allocated to the Inspectorate for 1997–98 of which £270,000 is for salaries. 68 per cent. of salary and running costs are incurred in London. Some staff within this area perform duties outside it whilst others based outside conduct work within. London costs include the national telephone helpline and certain expenditure, for example publicity, targeted across the country.

Export Development Counsellors

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the percentage of export development counsellors based in Scotland; and what are the running costs for this project for 1997–98. [36229]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The 8 Export Partnership Counsellors in Scotland represent just under 10 per cent. of the total number of export counsellors in England and Scotland. Running costs for Export Development Counsellors in England form part of the Local Competitiveness Budget for Business Links and are not separately identified. The running costs for the Export Partnership Counsellor project in Scotland in 1997/98 amount to £200,000.

Newspaper Pricing

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what controls exist to prevent predatory pricing of newspapers. [37016]

Mrs. Beckett: Under current UK competition law, controls may be imposed on conduct which may amount to predatory pricing if there has been an investigation under the Fair Trading Act 1973 or the Competition Act 1980, and the conduct has been found to be against the public interest. Both Acts apply to the newspaper industry.

Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service

Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she expects to receive the Annual report of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service. [37211]

Mrs. Beckett: The ACAS Report for 1997 is being laid before both Houses of Parliament today. Copies are available from the Vote Office.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Non-custodial Sentencing

15. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what pilot schemes (a) have been implemented and (b) are proposed to improve the delivery of non-custodial sentencing. [35166]

Ms Quin: A Community Sentence Demonstration Project has been set up in Teesside and Shropshire. Several measures contained in the Crime (Sentences) Act 1997 relating to community sentences are being piloted for 18 months in Greater Manchester and Norfolk. They will be extended to additional Greater Manchester courts on 1 April.

The Government have introduced provision for a drug treatment and testing order in the Crime and Disorder Bill, which we expect to be piloted in the autumn this year and under the Bill, we hope to begin piloting new orders including the reparation order and the action plan orders.

We have also recently announced our decision, in principle, to extend the availability of electronic monitoring.

Rural Policing

21. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the funding of police forces in rural areas in 1998–99. [35174]

Mr. Michael: Following the announcement of the provisional police revenue settlement for 1998–99, we received eight representations about the funding of police work in rural areas. Six argued in favour of additional resources for rural forces and two against.

31. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the proportion of resources devoted to policing in rural areas. [35184]

Mr. Michael: The allocation of resources to urban and rural areas within any police force area is an operational matter for the Chief Constable to decide in conformity with the policing plan agreed with the police authority.

Human Rights (Jersey)

22. Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for safeguarding human rights in Jersey. [35175]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Human rights in Jersey are a matter for the Insular Authorities, though Her Majesty's Government has overall responsibility for ensuring that those Authorities comply with the European Convention on Human Rights, which the United Kingdom has signed on behalf of Jersey.

Asylum Seekers

8. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to relax the criteria for admission to the United Kingdom as a refugee in order to speed up the processing of applications by asylum seekers. [35157]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We shall continue to apply the criteria for recognition as a refugee which are set out in the 1951 United Nations Convention relating to the Status of Refugees. We are considering a range of measures for speeding up the asylum process and will announce our conclusions in due course.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of those applying for asylum in 1997 who have not complied with the terms of their temporary admission and whom the Immigration Service has been unable to trace. [36517]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As at 28 February 1998, approximately 1,290 persons who had applied for asylum in 1997, excluding dependants, were recorded as having breached the conditions of their temporary admission, temporary release or restriction order, or having lost contact with the Home Office.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers of asylum seekers currently detained under Immigration Act powers by (a) nationality, (b) gender, (c) place of detention, (d) length of detention and (e) stage of application and immigration status at the time of detention. [36518]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information on those persons recorded as detained under Immigration Act powers as at 27 February 1998, and who had sought asylum at some stage, is given in tables 1 to 4.

Regrettably, a reliable breakdown by location of detention could be obtained only at disproportionate cost through the examination of individual case records.

Table 1: Number of people recorded as being detained [1,2] on 27 February 1998 who had sought asylum at some stage, by gender and immigration status

Drug Abuse

23. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in countering drug abuse; and if he will make a statement. [35176]

Mr. George Howarth: A new Treatment and Testing Order, included as one of the measures in the Crime and Disorder Bill, will give courts the power to require drug misusing offenders to undergo treatment. The new Order will be rigorously enforced and include the use of drug testing to enable the courts to monitor the progress of offenders at review hearings.

In addition, Ministers are considering proposals from Keith Hellawell—the United Kingdom Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator for a new anti-drugs strategy which will be launched in the next few weeks.

Family Support Measures

25. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to introduce in support of the family. [35178]

Mr. Michael: The Ministerial Group on the Family, which is chaired by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, is currently considering how best to increase the support available to families in a number of key areas, including improving the availability of parenting information and education and encouraging family-friendly employment policies.

Vulnerable Witnesses

26. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce further measures to protect (a) child witnesses and (b) vulnerable adults in the court system. [35179]

Mr. Michael: As I informed my hon. Friend when I met her and a constituent on 10 March, we intend to give greater protection to child witnesses and vulnerable adults. Our inter-departmental review of their needs is nearing completion. It is wide-ranging and is covering procedures from the investigation to the trial and beyond.

Prison Drug Tests

28. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the results of random drug test programmes in prisons. [35181]

Mr. George Howarth: Random mandatory drug test (MDT) results for April to December 1997 show a reduction from 19.9 per cent. to 17 per cent. testing positive for cannabis with a reduction from 5.4 per cent. to 4.1 per cent. positive for opiates. The Prison Service drug strategy review which incorporates research into MDT should provide a clearer picture on how these encouraging trends might be maintained.

Young Offenders' Institutions

29. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has in relation to young offenders' institutions in London and the south-east. [35182]

Ms Quin: The Government are currently reviewing the juvenile secure estate as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review. The Prison Service also hopes in the coming months to seek planning permission for a 600 place young offender institution in the London area to accommodate increased numbers and relieve pressure in existing institutions.

Police Recruitment (Essex)

30. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what money he has made available for the recruitment of extra police constables in Essex in 1997–98. [35183]

Mr. Michael: For 1997/98, Essex Police received £1.1 million in what was described by the previous Government as funding for extra officers. In fact, Ministers have no direct control over police numbers. Legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994 left it to individual chief constables to determine the number of officers in their force.

Young Offenders

32. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure young persons are not held within the adult prison system. [35185]

Ms Quin: Provisional figures indicate there were 2,559 young people aged under 18 in prison custody on 31 January 1998. Two thousand, four hundred and fifty-three of these were young men, of whom all but 277 were held in prison establishments for young offenders, not in adult prisons. Of the 277 young men held in adult prisons, all but two were held in accommodation separate from adult prisoners. The Government are currently reviewing the secure estate for juveniles as part of their Comprehensive Spending Review.

There are no young offender institutions for young women which are entirely separate from adult prisons. However, by April this year over 83 per cent. of young women in prison will be held in entirely separate accommodation, mother and baby units or in 'open' prison conditions.

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to ensure that support and guidance is given to the parents of young offenders. [35167]

Mr. Michael: As part of our radical reform of the youth justice system, we will introduce a parenting order to encourage parents to accept their responsibilities for their children's behaviour. It will allow courts to direct that parents exercise control over children and require parents to receive training and guidance.

Prison Work

33. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he is undertaking to encourage businesses to utilise the prison work force. [35186]

Ms Quin: The Prison Service is keen to encourage businesses to use the work force available in prisons because this will improve prison industrial and commercial practices, and will enhance the rehabilitative function of work in prisons.

It is developing prison industrial and commercial expertise by providing staff training on doing business in the private sector; and by helping prison workshops to attain BSI and ISO product and manufacturing quality accreditation.

It is seeking to develop the abilities of prisoners through the provision of a wide range of national vocational qualifications (NVQs) and construction industry training (last year prisoners were awarded 17,309 individual NVQ units and 1,800 full NVQs in 48 different skills; and 5.5 million vocational training and construction industry training places were provided); and through training for work through core educational curriculum.

It is supporting prisons' efforts to market themselves to businesses through the efforts of a central sales and marketing team and by offering enterprise partnerships in a variety of industrial, commercial and agricultural activities. The Service has at present 12 such partnerships in, or about to come into, operation.

Drug Addicts

34. Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of people arrested by the police in the last year for which figures are available were addicted to heroin and other opiates. [35187]

Mr. George Howarth: The information is not recorded in the format requested. We hope to publish within the next few weeks the results of research conducted for the Home Office by Cambridge University, of a study of drug use by samples of people arrested in various cities. The research shows a strong link between drug use, including heroin, and crime.

Community Sentences

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he plans to take to improve public confidence in community sentences. [35153]

Mr. Straw: The Crime and Disorder Bill contains proposals which will both increase the range of community sentences available to the courts and create a new framework for the effective supervision of community sentences for juvenile offenders. Confidence in community sentences will be further helped by implementing recommendations from Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Probation about supervision programmes which are effective in reducing repeat offending and via the existing Community Sentence Demonstration Projects.

Police Grant (Surrey)

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to increase the police grant to Surrey. [35177]

Mr. Michael: The Government's proposals on the amount of police grant to be paid to Surrey Police Authority in 1998–99 were set out in the Police Grant Report (England and Wales) 1998–99 (HC 492) which was approved by this House on 4 February.

Football Violence

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to prevent possible violent conduct by football supporters during the World Cup. [35180]

Mr. Michael: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary launched the United Kingdom Action Plan for the World Cup 1998 on 25 March, detailing the measures taken with police and football organisations and with French co-operation, to ensure that supporters with tickets enjoy a safe and secure World Cup.

Ms Samar Alami and Mr. Jawad Botmeh

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the (a) convictions, (b) length of sentences, (c) categorisation and (d) prison conditions for (i) Ms Samar Alami and (ii) Mr. Jawad Botmeh. [35716]

Ms Quin: Reviews of the convictions or sentences of Ms Alami and Mr. Botmeh are matters for the courts as I understand they have lodged appeals against their sentences.

Ms Alami and Mr. Botmeh are both category A prisoners and their security categorisation is subject to annual review by the Prison Service. They will next be reviewed in August.

Both prisoners are held in normal prison conditions appropriate to their security category. As with all sentenced prisoners, they are subject to incentives and earned privileges schemes under which their access to additional facilities are earned or lost according to their behaviour in prison.

Departmental Employees

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36217]

Mr. Straw: The numbers and locations of Home Office staff employed in Scotland are as follows:

Area	Number of staff	Unit	Location
Home Office (excluding the Agencies)[1]	1	Animals Inspectorate	Argyll House, Dundee
	6	Animals Inspectorate	Overgate House, Dundee
	1	Animals, Byelaws, Coroners Unit (ABCU)	Argyll House, Dundee
	3	National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS)	Osprey House, Paisley
	[2]292	Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (CICA)	Tay House, Glasgow
	9	Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority Panel (CICAP)	Tay House, Glasgow
	1	Gaming Board	Portcullis House, Glasgow
	3	After Entry & Appeals Directorate (Immigration and Nationality Department)	Farnborough House, Glasgow
	8	Immigration Service Ports Directorate	Aberdeen Airport
	8	Immigration Service Ports Directorate	Edinburgh Airport
	4	Immigration Service Ports Directorate	Glasgow
	33	Immigration Service Ports Directorate	Glasgow Airport
United Kingdom Passport Agency	375	United Kingdom Passport Agency, Glasgow	Milton Street, Glasgow

[1] The Prison Service, Forensic Science Service and Fire Service College have no staff employed in Scotland.
[2] This figure includes 282 staff seconded from the Scottish Office pool of employees.

Low Flying

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints were received by police forces relating to low-flying aircraft on 24 March 1997. [36403]

Mr. Michael: Information on complaints to the police of low-flying aircraft is not held centrally. I understand that on the evening of 24 March 1997, South Yorkshire Police received reports of a low-flying aircraft which was thought to have crashed. An investigation by the police and other authorities failed to find any trace of the aircraft.

Polygraph Machines

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to extend the use of polygraph machines in criminal cases; [36422]

(2) in how many cases polygraph machines have been used since 1992. [36423]

Mr. Michael: The Government have no plans to extend the use of polygraph machines in criminal cases. The admissibility of evidence in criminal proceedings is a matter for the courts. In the case of Fennel v Property Maintenance Limited 1986 [The Times, 26 November 1986], it was held that as a matter of principle, evidence adduced by the administration of a mechanical test on a witness is not admissible in courts in England and Wales to show the veracity or otherwise of the witness.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will increase in real terms the budget for research into alternatives to animal testing. [36427]

Mr. George Howarth: We have already increased the budget from £182,000 in 1997–98 to £259,000 in 1998–99—an increase of 42 per cent. No decisions about funding in future years have yet been taken.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reduce the use of primates for research. [36498]

Mr. George Howarth: We will continue to ensure that primates are used in scientific procedures only where this is fully justified and where the purposes of the programme of work cannot be achieved by methods not involving animals or by methods involving animals of other species.

Authority to use wild-caught primates will be given only where exceptional and specific justification can be established. Specific justification will also be required to use Old World (as opposed to New World) primates.

We announced in November that the use of Great Apes would not be authorised.

Most primate use in the United Kingdom is for safety testing of pharmaceuticals, not for research. We are encouraging regulators to review the need to use animals in regulatory safety testing.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cosmetic experiments were carried out in the United Kingdom on behalf of foreign companies during 1996. [36425]

Mr. George Howarth: This information is not collected.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will alter the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to allow publication of the names of companies commissioning cosmetic testing. [36426]

Mr. George Howarth: Section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 prevents the disclosure of information given in confidence. The Government have announced that they will be reviewing such statutory bars to decide whether they should remain or should be amended to bring them into line with the "substantial harm" and "public interest" tests proposed in the White Paper on Freedom of Information: "Your Right to Know" (Cm 3818). No decisions have yet been made concerning the 1986 Act.

Private Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many privately-run prisons there are in England and Wales; and if he will list them. [36580]

Ms Quin: There are seven privately-managed prisons in England and Wales:

Her Majesty's Prison Altcourse, Fazakerley, Liverpool.

Her Majesty's Prison Blakenhurst, Redditch, Worcestershire.

Her Majesty's Prison Buckley Hall, Rochdale, Lancashire.

Her Majesty's Prison Doncaster, South Yorkshire.

Her Majesty's Prison Lowdham Grange, Nottinghamshire.

Her Majesty's Prison Parc, Bridgend, Mid Glamorgan.

Her Majesty's Prison Wolds, Brough, North Humberside.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures are followed for the collation of the NCIS UK drugs prices list. [36483]

Mr. Michael: The information in the Drug Prices Guide was collated from material supplied by dedicated points in 16 police forces in England, Wales and Scotland and by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. The guide is intended to provide information that can be used by law enforcement officers who need to give expert witness in court on drug prices. It also provides general intelligence on price trends. As various factors are likely to affect prices locally, it should be seen only as a rough guide.

Blood Sports

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his the answer of 24 March 1998, Official Report, columns 118–19, if he will list the representations received by the Minister without Portfolio on blood sports and subsequently passed to him. [37036]

Mr. George Howarth: The Home Office has received in excess of 70,000 representations about hunting, both directly and via other Government offices, including the Office of Minister without Portfolio.

Records of individual letters for each addressee have not been kept.

Gaming Act

Mr. Singh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's plans to reform the Gaming Act 1968. [35295]

Mr. George Howarth: The present controls meet their primary purpose of keeping gaming crime-free, though the Government are aware of calls to modernise them. We have not ruled that out, but would need to consider the timing, scope and resource implications of such an exercise.

Fraud

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to modify extradition treaties to cover persons who commit major white collar fraud. [35152]

Mr. Michael: Most of the extradition arrangements define "an extradition crime" by the length of the sentence served, and white-collar crime needs no special provision. The most obvious exception is the 1976 United Kingdom/United States Treaty, which still relies on a list of extradition crimes. Amendments are necessary to the 1989 Extradition Act and longer-term, to the Treaty itself.

Tuberculosis

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases of TB have been identified in each of the last three years among (a) those seeking asylum in the UK and (b) those seeking permanent settlement in the UK; [36019]

(2) what levels of TB immunisation have been identified in (a) those seeking asylum in the UK and (b) those seeking permanent settlement in the UK in each of the last three years. [36018]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not routinely collected in the form requested. However, at Heathrow and Gatwick airports, where the majority of asylum seekers and immigrants arrive, and where facilities for the x-ray screening of new entrants are available, the following number of cases of active tuberculosis (TB) have been identified.

Year	Asylum seekers	Immigrants	Total
1995–96	30	4	34
1996–97	18	9	27
1997–98	20	25	[1]45

[1] Figures to mid-March only.

Immigrants from high prevalence areas for TB and asylum seekers are recognised as high risk groups for TB. We have a two pronged approach to prevention and control of TB in new immigrants to this country. The first is to screen those at highest risk at ports of entry, and the second is to offer more detailed screening, including skin testing, locally when they arrive at their destination. This second part of the procedure allows detection not only of active cases but also those who would benefit from the preventive measures such as chemoprophylaxis and those with negative skin tests to be protected by immunisation with Bacillus Calmette Guèrin. The Department and the Home Office are presently reviewing these procedures and looking at ways of improving screening for tuberculosis.

WALES

Smoke Alarms

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the advantages of making the installation of smoke alarms compulsory in local authority homes in Wales. [35583]

Mr. Win Griffiths: I believe the installation of smoke alarms in houses can be a major factor in reducing the risk of death or injury from fire. All local authorities in Wales are committed to fitting smoke alarms in all their housing stock. To date, 18 authorities have achieved this fully.

Of the remainder, two expect to complete by the end of the 1998–99 financial year; one by the end of 200–01; and one has a policy of installing smoke alarms during refurbishment works.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the future of acute and community NHS trusts in Wales. [37187]

Mr. Win Griffiths: There are currently 25 NHS trusts in Wales providing acute, community and mental health services.

I am announcing today proposals for a reduced number of NHS trusts in Wales and there will be consultation on these proposals later this year. I am writing to all hon. Members representing constituencies in Wales with a copy of my announcement and the related press release. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Northern Ireland All-party Talks

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, on his recent visit to the Northern Ireland All-Party Talks, he discussed the criteria and ground rules for a referendum on the outcome of the talks and the lessons which could be learned from the experience of the referendum in Wales in September 1997. [36785]

Mr. Ron Davies: No.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, on his recent visits to the Northern Ireland All-party Talks, he discussed (a) cross-border powers, (b) power-sharing, (c) weighted votes to protect minority interests and (d) parity of esteem for all traditions. [36784]

Mr. Ron Davies: No. The purpose of my visit was to explain Welsh devolution.

National Assembly

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will repay to Swansea the costs incurred by that city in bidding to be the location of the National Assembly for Wales. [36783]

Mr. Ron Davies: No.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 32, on the National Assembly, what consultations he has had with his departmental property management consultants concerning the continuation of the Crown & Co. contract for valuation, estates and property matters and as negotiating agents. [36793]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

Crickhowell House

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 733, on civil servants, what is the grade of the civil servant who was involved in both the acquisition of the lease on Crickhowell House and in the siting of the National Assembly; and if he will indicate how much of that civil servant's time was spent on the siting of the National Assembly compared with the other civil servants involved in the exercise. [36795]

Mr. Ron Davies: One Grade 7 Civil Servant has had some involvement with both matters. Together with more senior officials, he was involved in the process of acquiring the lease of Crickhowell House, particularly in respect of assessing the proposal submitted to the Welsh Office by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority, and advising Ministers upon it. Decisions on such issues are made by Ministers, not Civil Servants. He did not play any part in the direct lease negotiations.

This official, and a number of others, have spent most of their time recently dealing with issues related to the provision of accommodation for the Assembly.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 734, on Crickhowell House, when the defects period was originally set to expire; and if he will make a statement on previous negotiations to extend the defects liability. [36780]

Mr. Ron Davies: The defects liability period would have lasted for 12 months from the date of occupation. Extension has been by mutual agreement and remains in operation.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 734, on Crickhowell House, if he has to refer prospective assignees or sub-lessees under the privity of contract provisions of the lease, for approval to the landlords before assignment or sub-letting; and, if an assignee or sub-lessee becomes insolvent or otherwise breaks the terms of the assignment or sub-lease, to whom the responsibility reverts. [36775]

Mr. Ron Davies: The landlord's consent is required for assignments and certain sub-lettings but such consent is not to be unreasonably withheld. The Secretary of State retains responsibility to the landlord for default by assignees and sub-tenants.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 734, on Crickhowell House, if he will make a statement on the connection between the terms of his lease at Crickhowell House and the defects liability period; and what estimate he has made of the costs to his Department, if the defects liability period had expired (i) 12 months, (ii) 24 months, (iii) 36 months or (iv) 48 months after occupation of Crickhowell House. [36799]

Mr. Ron Davies: The provisions for a defect liability period are described in the original leases. There is no relation between the rent payable and extension of the period. No such estimates have been made.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 734, on Crickhowell House, if he will list the principal reasons for the discussions between his Department and the landlords at Crickhowell House to extend the defects liability period beyond 31 March. [36798]

Mr. Ron Davies: There has been no discussion of the defects liability period between the Department and the landlords of Crickhowell House. Responsibility for the management of the building is with the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. They have been in negotiation with the landlord concerning defects which have been in process of rectification since the building was occupied. The defects liability period has been extended to cover those defects still outstanding by mutual agreement between WHCSA and the landlord.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 734, on Crickhowell House, in what ways his privity of contract affects his ability to assign or sub-let the lease; if he will list the restrictions, contained in the lease, reducing his ability to sub-let to (a) other Government departments and (b) the private sector; and if he will make a statement. [36779]

Mr. Ron Davies: Generally there are no restrictions other than that it would be necessary to obtain the landlord's consent where occupation is by the Departments of Social Security or Education and Employment or the private sector.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, columns 732–33, what the total cost to the reserves of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority of the void office space at Crickhowell House has been in each of the financial years since significant void space commenced; what steps have been taken to provide the resources to the authority to maintain reserves at an appropriate level for the authority; and if he will make a statement. [36794]

Mr. Ron Davies: The building was fully occupied until 1995/96. Since then the cost of void space has been £120,000 for the year 1996/97 and estimated to be £1,005,000 for the year 1997/98. The Authority have been able to meet these costs from accumulated reserves without the need for any additional resource allocations.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, columns 733–34, on Cardiff Bay Development Corporation (1) how much of the £1.4 million has been committed to date; [36796]

(2) if he will place a copy of the Scott Harbour rental agreement in the Library; what information he has on expenditure incurred under the Scott Harbour rental agreement; if the minimum rent guaranteed under the rental agreement includes a profit element; and what arrangements he has for policing the agreement in operation. [36797]

Mr. Ron Davies: Details of the Scott Harbour rental agreement and related information are an operational matter for the Corporation and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply. A copy of his answer will be placed in the Library. Policing the rental agreement is a matter for the Corporation and its auditors. This is consistent with the Department's strategic approach to sponsorship of the Corporation.

Out-of-town Developments

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans his Department has to examine the impact of out of town shopping developments on town centres. [37035]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Retail development and the future of town centres are matters kept under review. Following consultation in 1997 revised planning policy guidance which will underline the Government's commitments to a thriving retail sector and to encouraging successful town centres is being prepared.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the nature and source of the statistical information used by his Department in preparing NUTS designations for Objective 1 European structural funding for Wales. [36875]

Mr. Hain: The Nomenclature of Units of Territorial Statistics (NUTS) was established by the statistical office of the European Commission (Eurostat) to provide a breakdown of territorial units for the production of regional statistics for the European Union. The criteria used in subdividing national territory into regions are set out in the Eurostat publication Regions, Nomenclature of Territorial Units for Statistics, a copy of which is in the Library.

A revision of the UK NUTS classification started at the end of 1995 to take account of the use of Government Office Regions for the presentation of statistical information and of the Local Government Review which resulted in the creation of unitary authorities. In June 1996 the Office for National Statistics issued a consultation document which included more information on the criteria and other aspects of the revision. A copy of this document Draft Proposals for the Nomenclature of Territorial Units (NUTS) is in the Library. The UK NUTS classification is currently being discussed by ONS and Eurostat.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the role of his Department in the European Structural Funds Review. [36874]

Mr. Hain: The Welsh Office is closely involved in all aspects of the Structural Funds Review. We participate fully in all policy formulation and will be represented on the UK delegation which will negotiate and agree the Structural Funds Regulations.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the timetable for preparation and submission of Welsh Office proposals relating to the European Structural Funds Review. [36876]

Mr. Hain: The draft Structural Funds Regulations for the period 2000–06 were published by the European Commission on 18 March. These will now be the subject of detailed negotiations with all 15 Member States before they are finally agreed. It is impossible at this stage to give any indication as to when the process will be completed. The Commission have proposed that the new map, which will result from criteria established in the Regulations, should be effective from 1 January 2000.

Local Government

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the GDP figures for each of the new Welsh unitary authorities. [36877]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Office for National Statistics (ONS) publishes GDP figures for Wales annually and for the former eight counties every two years. I understand that ONS are currently working to produce estimates of GDP for areas in Wales which are aggregations of Unitary Authorities but have no plans to produce estimates for individual Authority areas.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Voluntary Sector

Jacqui Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with the voluntary sector on their involvement in the delivery of the New Deal. [35161]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have had a number of discussions with the Voluntary sector on their involvement in development and delivery of New Deal. We have taken care to ensure that they have been represented both in national consultations on the design of New Deal and in local partnerships, which have planned and are now setting in place delivery arrangements. We value their support and will continue to work closely with them as New Deal is launched nationally.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the total overpayments identified by the National Audit Office from his Department to training and enterprise councils, in each of the last five years. [36611]

Dr. Howells: The National Audit Office reported the following estimated overpayments to Training and Enterprise Councils in England in each of the last five years:

Year	£ million
1992–93	14.9
1993–94	6.6
1994–95	7.9
1995–96	9.4
1996–97	14.6

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the cost to public funds of training and enterprise councils and chambers of commerce training and enterprise in England and Wales in each year of their existence. [36872]

Dr. Howells: The statutory accounts for the Training and Enterprise Councils and Chambers of Commerce Training and Enterprise in England and Wales show total income to be as follows:

	£ million
1990–91	437
1991–92	1,438
1992–93	1,544
1993–94	1,595
1994–95	1,563
1995–96	1,454
1996–97	1,608

Autistic Children

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the 1997 European Directive on Autistic Children; what plans he has for its implementation; what is the estimated cost of its implementation; and if he will make a statement. [36686]

Ms Estelle Morris: There is no Directive on Autistic Children. The European Written Declaration on the Rights of People with Autism was adopted by the European Parliament on 9 May 1996. This called on member states, through appropriate legislation, to enhance the right to accessible and appropriate education. Under the Education Act 1996 schools and local education authorities are under a duty to identify children with special educational needs, including those with autism, and to provide an appropriate education for the individual child which gives him or her access to a broad and balanced curriculum.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the need for separate secondary education facilities for autistic children; and what proposals he has to ensure that local education authorities provide that provision. [36687]

Ms Estelle Morris: Some organisations with an interest in autism have argued that there is a need for more specialist provision at both the primary and secondary phases. The Local Government Association has also discussed with the Department the issues facing local education authorities in providing for children with autism. The Department has consequently funded an urgent review of the research findings on educational programmes for children with autism, preparatory to research the Local Government Association will be commissioning on the comparative outcomes from these programmes. In the light of this work, we will consider what further guidance to offer on how best to meet the needs of children with a broad range of autistic disorders. We shall also be addressing this issue in the context of regional planning for SEN provision.

Training

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many trainees he estimates will take part in (a) national traineeships and (b) modern apprenticeship schemes in 1998. [36862]

Dr. Howells: Plans for England in 1998–99 are for about 125,000 people to enter National Traineeships and other work-based training for young people at NVQ level 2.

For Modern Apprenticeships, plans are for 72,500 young people to begin an apprenticeship in 1998–99; and for numbers to build up to an average of 136,000 in training.

In addition, some Modern Apprenticeship opportunities will be supported through the European Social Fund.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of the public money allocated for training and enterprise councils and to chambers of commerce training and enterprise in England and Wales will be spent on trainee allowances for people participating in training provided by an organisation other than the TEC or CCTE from which they receive their funding in the next 12 months. [36863]

Dr. Howells: The total budget for work-based training for adults in England for 1998–99 is £324.5 million of which £148.5 million (46 per cent.) is for trainee allowances.

For Work-based Training For Young People, we do not separately identify an allowances element within the budget. TECs and CCTEs are responsible for ensuring the cost of allowances and training can be met within the total resources available to them, including employer contributions. In most cases employer placement providers meet the cost of allowances.

Responsibility for training in Wales lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much he estimates would be raised by the introduction of a training levy equivalent to 2 per cent. of companies' pay roll in a 12 month period. [36864]

Dr. Howells: This information is not collected by the Department and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Transsexuals

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many responses were received to the Department for Education and Employment consultation paper, "Legislation Regarding Discrimination on Grounds of Transsexualism in Employment"; how many responses were (a) in favour and (b) opposed to the proposals; and if he will make a statement. [36865]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Nearly three hundred responses have been received by the Department. The responses are from a range of individuals and groups, and contain a large number of views, not all of which concern matters within the responsibility of the Department. Analysis of the responses is now underway, and I shall make a further statement in the light of that analysis.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mrs. McGuire: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available the latest report evaluated by his Department on bovine spongiform encephalopathy. [37057]

Dr. John Cunningham: A further Report on BSE in Great Britain was placed in the Library of the House today.

The report outlines the measures which have been taken to protect public health since June 1997, including the Government's announcements on the White Paper on proposals for a new Food Standards Agency and the Public Inquiry into BSE and nvCJD. It also outlines the measures which have been taken to protect public health during the period under report, including legislation on Beef Bones and Specified Risk Materials. It summarises the results of action to enforce existing public health measures, and outlines the action which has been taken to set up a cattle tracing system. An update on the number of cases of nvCJD is included.

The Epidemiology section shows that the epidemic of BSE in the UK continues to decline. The number of clinically suspect cases of BSE reported in Great Britain has continued to fall and for the six months to 31 December 1997 was 36 per cent. less than for the same period in 1996 and 68 per cent. less than for the same period in 1995. A continued improvement is expected for the future. The section shows that almost two thirds of UK herds with adult breeding cattle have never had a case of BSE. Furthermore 84 per cent. of beef suckler herds have never had a case of BSE. Reported incidence also shows that herds with more than four cases of BSE account for nearly three quarters of all BSE cases, but represent only just over 10 per cent. of all herds.

There is a section on the protection of animal health covering the controls on animal feed and the selective cull.

The European perspective is reported in a section covering progress towards lifting the export ban, the European Parliament Temporary Committee of Inquiry and Commission proposals on Specified Risk Materials.

Agricultural Shows

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for exhibitions to promote British farm produce at agricultural shows. [33911]

Mr. Rooker: Over the next twelve months, the Department will be exhibiting at a number of venues across the country. Programmes are still to be finalised. When they are, I will write to my hon. Friend. A wide range of subjects will be covered, including the promotion of specialist and regional foods.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the food science research projects for which the Microbiology Group of the Central Science Laboratory bid in 1997–98 and which were deemed by the Independent Appraisal Panel to be of sufficient quality to merit his Department's funding. [36037]

Mr. Rooker: Eight projects on food microbiology submitted in 1997–98 by the Central Science Laboratory were deemed by the Independent Appraisal Panel to be of sufficient quality to merit Departmental funding. One of these was commissioned, namely "Preparation of validation samples for use in the evaluation of microbial methods for the examination of foods". The Department does not reveal details of the projects which are not funded for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which specialists from the commercial sector were appointed to advise his Department on how best to achieve a secure future for the Central Science Laboratory; and if he will publish their advice. [35962]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: PA Consulting Group was commissioned, as part of the 1996 Prior Options review, to provide independent management consultancy advice on the future of the Central Science Laboratory. It would not be appropriate to publish this advice, which was provided on a confidential basis.

Over-thirty-months Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he has to lift the over thirty months scheme for cattle entering the food chain; [35946]

(2) what representations he has received requesting the lifting of the over thirty months scheme for cattle entering the food chain; and if he will make a statement. [35945]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have no plans to lift the Over Thirty Months Scheme (OTMS) for cattle entering the food chain. We have received a number of representations about the OTMS, including some from producers requesting its full or partial removal.

The OTMS is a public health measure which we could lift only once the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee has advised that it would be safe to lift the ban on the sale of beef from over thirty month animals. Furthermore, the effective operation of the OTMS is one of the conditions of the Florence Agreement for the lifting of the beef export ban.

Badgers

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of badger control methods conducted in Eire. [36430]

Mr. Rooker: We have carefully studied the published work relating to badger control in Ireland, and continue to liaise closely with colleagues there.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated cost of the proposed badger culling experiment, broken down to show each constituent element for (a) 1998 and (b) each subsequent year of the proposed experiment. [36431]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have indicated that we are disposed to accept the recommendations of the Krebs Report, subject to further consideration of public expenditure, legal and practical implications. We are currently considering the responses to the consultation exercise on the implementation of the recommendations and are awaiting the advice of the Expert Group on the design of the culling experiment. I am not able to estimate costs until we have decided how to proceed.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what records are maintained of the number of non-target species caught in snares set for badgers under his Department's tuberculosis control scheme. [36429]

Mr. Rooker: No animals from non-target species have been caught in snares set for badgers by the Department under the bovine tuberculosis control scheme.

Food Standards Agency

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library an organisational chart showing how different parts of the Food Standards Agency relate to each other. [36614]

Mr. Rooker: No decisions have yet been taken on the internal organisation of the Food Standards Agency, which cannot come into being until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much of the current spending on food safety by his Department will be transferred to the proposed Food Standards Agency; and if he will list those areas of work which will be transferred to the Food Standards Agency. [36617]

Mr. Rooker: The intention is that the work currently carried out in the MAFF/DH Joint Food Safety and Standards Group and the associated research, together with the Meat Hygiene Service, should transfer to the Agency. Final decisions on the precise responsibilities of the Agency will be taken in the light of the response to consultation on the White Paper The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change (CM3830).

The White Paper indicated that where responsibility transfers to the Agency, the associated budgetary resources will also transfer. However the White paper also made clear that the Government intend to consult on proposals for new charges which would allow a greater proportion of the costs of food safety work to be passed from the taxpayer to the food industry. Decisions on the amount of funds to be transferred by the Department to the new Agency will be taken after this further consultation exercise.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to modify his original proposals on the Food Standards Agency before the draft legislation is published; [36615]

(2) if he will publish a summary of his conclusions following the consultation exercise on the Food Standards Agency. [36616]

Mr. Rooker: Public consultation on the White Paper The Food Standards Agency: A Force for Change closed in mid-March. Around 950 responses have been received and are currently being analysed. The Government will report in due course on its conclusions, which will be reflected in the draft legislation.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) which Acts of Parliament will require amendment to accommodate the Food Standards Agency; [36612]

(2) which areas of the proposed Food Standards Agency will be defined in new (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation. [36613]

Mr. Rooker: The Government are currently considering what legislative provisions will be necessary to bring the proposed Food Standards Agency into being. A draft Bill will be published in due course for public consultation.

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what decisions were reached by the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes at its meeting on 19 March in respect of (a) herbicide resistant GM cotton seed and (b) peeled and comminuted GM tomato products; and if he will make a statement. [36878]

Mr. Rooker: When the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes (ACNFP) met on 19 March it considered that further information was required before it could complete its assessment of oil obtained from genetically modified (GM) herbicide tolerant cottonseed. The Committee was however satisfied as to the safety of peeled and comminuted GM tomato products and will be finalising its report to the EC Commission on these shortly. This will be published and a copy made available in the Library of the House.

Dairy Industry

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on farmers in North Staffordshire of the latest Milk Marque selling round; what estimate he has made of the impact of this round on milk prices in April; and if he will make a statement; [37044]

(2) what assessment he has made of the competitiveness of United Kingdom manufacturing capacity for butter powder relative to other EU member states; and if he will make a statement; [37046]

(3) if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's manufacturing capacity for butter powder. [37045]

Mr. Rooker: At the request of the Director General of Fair Trading, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are currently examining the supply of raw milk in Great Britain. Issues such as these may be considered in the course of that inquiry.

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the milk quota system. [37041]

Mr. Rooker: The Commission's Agenda 2000 proposals in the dairy sector include: the extension of milk quotas for a further 6 years until 2006; a reduction of 15 per cent. in support prices over 4 years; the introduction of a direct payment or dairy cow premium; and an average 2 per cent. increase in milk quota at Community level.

These proposals, which will be the subject of careful negotiation, would represent some improvement over current arrangements, but do not go far enough.

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he proposes to assist the United Kingdom dairy industry in export markets. [37042]

Mr. Rooker: Our noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary recently organised a cheese seminar attended by leading figures from the dairy industry to consider ways in which they could develop the United Kingdom's export potential.

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk was (a) produced and (b) consumed in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available. [37043]

Mr. Rooker: The figures for 1997 are:

United Kingdom milk production, supply and utilisation: 1997[1]

	Million litres
Gross production of milk from the dairy and beef herds[2]	14,415
Imports of raw milk[3]	131
Exports of raw milk[3]	267
Total supply	14,280
Utilisation by dairies for drinking milk[4]	6,749
Utilisation by dairies for manufacturing	7,113
Dairy wastage and stock change	112
Other uses[5]	306
Total domestic use	14,280

[1] Provisional

[2] Includes 7 million litres of milk from the beef herd. Excludes suckled milk.

[3] Milk imported or exported as packaged drinking milk is excluded.

[4] Represents consumption of drinking milk in the UK, as little is imported or exported. In 1997 imports of packaged drinking milk were 89 million litres, exports were 80 million litres.

[5] Includes farmhouse consumption, milk fed to stock and on farm waste. Excludes suckled milk.

Agriculture Prices

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the average price obtained by farmers in the United Kingdom for (a) lamb, (b) beef and (c) milk for each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [37040]

Mr. Rooker: The table gives the prices requested. Sheep prices are for Great Britain, cattle and milk prices are for the United Kingdom.

Annual average prices

Year	Finished cattle (p per kg liveweight) all clean cattle[1]	Finished sheep (p per kg estimated dressed carcase weight)[1]	Milk price (p per litre)[2]
1990	106.3	174.5	18.6
1991	106.9	148.2	19.5
1992	109.4	182.1	20.4
1993	127.9	219.0	21.9
1994	122.0	236.9	22.2
1995	122.8	236.4	25.0
1996	104.5	283.1	25.0
1997	95.4	256.0	22.0

[1] Based on prices collected weekly by the Meat and Livestock Commission.

[2] Until October 1994, data on milk prices were sourced from the Milk Marketing Boards.

From November 1994 for Great Britain and January 1995 for Northern Ireland, milk prices are derived from surveys conducted by MAFF, SOAEFD and DANI.

DEFENCE

MOD Police

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 January 1998, Official Report, column 185, on Ministry of Defence Police, if he will ensure that sufficient information about transfers of personnel is published in the Force Orders to satisfy requirements of openness and scrutiny without disclosing details that are private to the individual officers. [35917]

Dr. Reid: This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency. I have asked the Chief Constable to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Walter Boreham to Mr. David Kidney, dated 30 March 1998:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about Ministry of Defence Police Force Orders, as this falls into my area of responsibility as Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency.

I am satisfied that the publication in my weekly Force Orders of the names of officers posted, the Stations between which they are being moved and the dates of transfer, both respects the privacy of the individuals in personal matters and is open and subject to scrutiny.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the reforms to the police complaints and discipline procedures announced by the Secretary of State for the Home Office apply to the Ministry of Defence Police; and if he will make a statement. [36442]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The Ministry of Defence Police are a civilian police force, constituted under the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987. Their officers have the same powers and privileges in the Defence environment as their Home Department colleagues in the community at large.

The Ministry of Defence Police complaints and discipline procedures mirror those of Home Department Police Forces. I will consider the reforms announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department on 23 March 1998, Official Report, columns 21–37, and will discuss with the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Police the introduction of any necessary parallel changes to the Ministry of Defence Police regulations.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requirement is placed on the MoD police in Scotland, who demand items during the course of investigations of the homes of personnel, to supply a receipt for those items which they have taken into custody. [35133]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 19 March 1998]: The Ministry of Defence Police is a civilian police force constituted under statute by the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987. The Chief Constable is independent of Ministerial, Departmental and political influence in the exercise of his constabulary powers. In specific cases questions about procedural applications in the exercise of the constabulary responsibilities of the Ministry of Defence Police are a matter for the Chief Constable.

In England and Wales, police procedures in respect of property taken from others in the course of an investigation are controlled by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. Paragraph 6.8 of Code B of the Codes of Practice requires police, on request, to provide a list or description of the property within a reasonable time to the person who had control of it. Ministry of Defence Police use a 'best practice' policy and normally provide a list of property, so taken, at the time of seizure.

The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 does not apply within the Scottish legal system. There are no provisions or requirements within the Scottish legal system to provide a receipt to the owners of property taken into police possession. When operating in Scotland, Ministry of Defence Police are required to use the documentary systems and procedures adopted by all Scottish Police Forces. It would not, therefore, be appropriate for the Ministry of Defence Police to use the supporting forms which are used by them in England and Wales.

Departmental Art Collection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 542, where the 17 missing works of art were found and what are their current locations; if he will list the locations of the 21 works of art otherwise accounted for; and how many works of art remain unaccounted for. [36157]

Mr. Spellar: The following lists the works of art that have been found and those that have been otherwise accounted for.

The following Government Art Collection works of art, which were lost while on loan to my Department, were found and returned to the Government Art Collection.

GAC 1556 Encampment of English Forces, Portsmouth was found in Archway Block, Old Admiralty Building, Whitehall.

GAC 11683 Rydal Water was found in First Avenue House, London.

GAC 12881 Broadgate, Leicestershire

GAC 12896 New Park, Surrey

GAC 13707 Soho or King's Square were found in Main Building, Whitehall.

GAC 5634 Still Life with Thrush

GAC 5779 Platylobium

GAC 5780 La Dillenne

GAC 10898 Fishing Boats on Beach

GAC 10899 Fishing Boats were found in 14 Kingston House North, London.

The following works of art from my Department's collection were found and have since been allocated to new borrowers within my Department.

MOD 4872 House in New Street.

MOD 4873 Ruins of the Old Gun House were found in Main Building, Whitehall.

MOD 4197 View of Attack on Gibraltar by Land and Sea was found in St. George's Court, London.

MOD 10792 St. Michael's Mount was found in Victory Building, Portsmouth.

MOD 4332 Vice Admiral Sir Thomas Hardy was found in Metropole Building, Whitehall.

The following works of art from my Department's collection will remain in the locations where they were found until they are required elsewhere.

MOD 4107 T Class Submarine at Periscope was found in Medway Building, Gosport.

MOD 4276 Sir William Burnett was found in the Royal Navy Trophy Centre store.

The following works of art had been listed as missing and were accounted for as part of the process of looking for missing works of art.

GAC 4030 Scromerston

GAC 4033 Dilston Hall

GAC 4035 Langley Castle

GAC 4053 Langley Castle were found to be in the possession of their owners, Greenwich Hospital.

GAC 7959 Sir Charles Inigo Thomas had been returned to the lender's widow in 1985 and was listed as missing in error on the list of missing works provided to my Department by the Government Art Collection.

MOD 4430 Seascape has been identified as a work in the collection of the Hydrographic Agency which should not have been included in the list of missing works.

The following were included in the first issue of the memorandum on missing works in December 1994 but omitted from the second issue in September 1996 on the advice of the Government Art Collection.

GAC L349 Cromer a/pb

GAC 615 First Viscount Nelson

GAC 8236 Lithograph VII 13/75

GAC 8262 Two Horsemen

GAC 10980 Perspective View of the Admiralty Office

GAC 3238 London from Greenwich

GAC 789 Dover Castle

GAC 4034 Dilston Hall

GAC 8753 Admiralty House 1970

GAC 14788 The Tower from the West

GAC 12096 A Farmhouse near a River.

The following have been removed from the list of missing works of art by my works of art staff, on the grounds that the works of art to which these records refer should not have been included on my Department's inventory.

MOD 7606 Cartoon from the Sun

MOD 4274 Roll of Honour RN Medical Officers and Nursing Staff 1914–1920

MOD 4280 Crest Nil Illigitimi Carborundum

MOD 4115 Hat and Figure.

Since my reply to my hon. Friend's previous question, my works of art staff have removed one more record from the list of missing works, a print, MOD 4333 Admiral Dundas, which had been found in Metropole Building, Whitehall but was not positively identified until recently.

166 of the 204 works of art listed in the memorandum issued in December 1994 remain unaccounted for.

Future Infantry Soldier Technology

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency in developing the future infantry soldier technology; at which of his Department's establishments work on this project has been carried out; when this work started; how many reports on the progress of this project have been written; what are the security classifications of each report; and how much money has so far been spent on this project. [35361]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 30 March 1998:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the Future Infantry Soldier Technology as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency.

The Future Infantry System Technology (FIST) programme was established in Autumn 1994. DERA is highly focused to meeting the needs of its customer on what is a most demanding systems project. There are three main thrusts to the programme: research on technologies likely to benefit the individual soldier, development of the systems engineering approach to soldier modernisation, and operational analysis studies and trials to establish the operational requirement.

The initial aim of the FIST programme was to demonstrate the potential of technology to enhance soldier effectiveness. Experimental hardware was designed and developed by a small team within the Guns Department at DERA Fort Halstead, with extramural support from Pilkington Optronics, to determine the feasibility of possible sub-systems. Test and trials of this early equipment, many highly successful, were undertaken during 1995 and in the summer and autumn of 1996.

A Technical Demonstrator (TD) programme, in place since April 1997, has built on the success of earlier hardware trials. This is a jointly funded programme between MOD and a UK consortium led by Pilkington Optronics. Separate from the TD, a systems engineering approach, identified as necessary by DERA/MOD to underpin cost effective procurement, has been adopted for the FIST research programme. A research strategy has been developed, linking study methodologies to trials and other analysis.

The current FIST research programme covers operational modelling and field trials. The trials provide data for validation of the models being used to examine the operational need and identify capability deficiencies. Operational analysis supports the formulation of the Staff Target and will lead to cost effectiveness analysis to support the decisions of the Equipment Approval Committee. The FIST programme also includes work on human factors, which are particularly important in relation to the individual soldier's effectiveness on the battlefield.

This overall approach, now well advanced, has put the UK into a leading position in NATO. Industry will now be best placed to offer a real alternative to the Land Warrior programme (US). In addition, the UK (including a representative from DERA) is playing a leading role in NATO Land Group 3 Working Group III on Soldier Modernisation, which aims to produce a NATO approach to the issue. DERA is also an active participant in other international groups.

The cost of the FIST Technology Research Programme up to the end of FY96/97 was £1.9M. The cost for FY97/98, including the part funding of the TD, will be £3.3M. This cost is split between the Applied Research Programme (£2.3M) and the consortium (£1M). The operational analysis costs were £850K for trials for the period FY96/97 to FY97/98 and £1M for operational studies for the period FY94/95 to FY97/98.

Direction and tasking for the project is given to DERA by the Director of Operational Requirements (Land) through the medium of the Applied Research Package. Within DERA the project is led and managed by the Guns Department at DERA Fort Halstead. Support on operational analysis, including trials, is provided at DERA Fort Halstead and DERA Farnborough. Human factors support is provided at Farnborough. External support is provided by the Defence Clothing and Textile Agency at Colchester. The military team advising the project is based at Warminster (Infantry Trials and Development Unit and Headquarters Infantry). The programme maintains essential external links with the Defence Clothing and Textile Agency, Headquarters Infantry and the Infantry Trials and Development Unit.

Progress reports are issued on a quarterly basis, each report being classified UK RESTRICTED. Thirteen other reports have been issued on FIST—seven on the technical aspects, three on operational trials and three on operational analysis. All are classified UK RESTRICTED. Progress is also monitored by the Dismounted Close Combat Committee meetings, chaired by Director of Operational Requirements (Land) (two meetings per year) and previously the Research Strategy meeting which ran from 1995 until 1997, chaired by Director of Science (Land) (two meetings per year). Minutes of these meetings are classified UK RESTRICTED.

I hope this information is helpful.

Departmental Employees (Scotland)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36216]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested is given in the table:

Low Flying Training

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what complaints were received by the RAF concerning low-flying aircraft relating to 24 March 1997; [36407]

(2) if RAF/NATO military aircraft were engaged on an exercise over Northern England between 9.30 and 10.30 pm on 24 March 1997; [36404]

(3) for what reasons the RAF imposed an air exclusion zone around Howden reservoir on the morning of 25 March 1997; [36408]

(4) what reported sightings of UFOs were received from the (a) public and (b) police from the South Yorkshire/Derbyshire area on 24 and 25 March 1997. [36402]

Mr. Spellar: A number of military aircraft were booked to carry out low flying training in northern England on the evening of 24 March 1997. The Ministry of Defence received 13 complaints about aircraft activity for that date from locations across the UK. No reported sightings of "UFOs" on 24 or 25 March 1997 were received by my Department. A Temporary Danger Area was established on 25 March, centred on Howden Reservoir, to allow an RAF Search and Rescue helicopter, in response to a request for assistance from South Yorkshire Police, to carry out a search of the area without disturbance by other military aircraft. Such Danger Areas are routinely established for Search and Rescue operations.

Beyond Visual Range Air-to-air Missiles

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many BVRAAM Eurofighter EF2000 will carry in its active air superiority role; [35364]

(2) how many units of the beyond visual range air-to-air missiles (SR Air 1239) are to be purchased; and when it is expected to enter service. [35359]

Mr. Spellar: No decision has yet been taken on the quantity of Beyond Visual Range Air-to-Air Missiles, BVRAAM, to be procured, or when they will enter service. These decisions will be informed by the outcome of the current project definition and risk reduction phase. It is planned that Eurofighter will carry up to 6 BVRAAM in a variety of configurations.

Sonic Booms (Sheffield)

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if an RAF/NATO aircraft was responsible for the two sonic booms above Sheffield detected by Edinburgh University Seismology Unit at 21.52 and 22.06 on 24 March 1997. [36405]

Mr. Spellar: We have no record of sonic events being generated by RAF or NATO aircraft for the evening of 24 March 1997.

Private Schooling

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the private schools which educated service personnel's children at public cost and the number of such pupils and the cost per pupil at each school in the last year for which figures are available. [36693]

Dr. Reid: The names of boarding schools at which service children are educated at public expense are contained in the Ministry of Defence Admissible Schools List. The list includes both private schools and state maintained boarding schools, and a copy of the list was placed in the Library in November 1996. The list is currently being updated and a copy will be placed in the Library shortly. The average cost per pupil at each school is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, however the total cost to my Department of education allowances during financial year 1996–97, the last year for which figures are available, was £87.5m and the average number of children for who the allowance was claimed in the same year was 9,833. The overall average cost per pupil was £8,899.

Cadet Forces

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the (a) cost and (b) strength of each university OTC in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage of OTC members took commissions in the (i) regular and (ii) territorial forces in that year; [36692]

(2) how many young people are currently involved in university cadet forces; what is the average numbers of cadet units per university OTC; what was the cost of (a) Army, (b) Navy and (c) Air Force cadets in the last year for which figures are available; and what percentage of last year's intake became members of the regular forces. [36696]

Dr. Reid: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

[1] Evaluation is taken to mean the periodic review of the Agency, which involves a performance evaluation, the re-visiting of the Prior Options process, and the re-issue of the Framework Document. Initial Policy was this should take place at not more than 3 year intervals, but this was later extended to 5 years, with some specified exceptions. As the process takes a period of some months, only the year in which the review is expected to take place is given. Where the first review is described as "ongoing" the second review would normally be expected to take place 5 years after the re-issue of the Framework Document.

[2] The Date and column at which the Key Targets for FY1997–98 were published in the Official Report. For the sake of clarity and completeness this information has been included for all the Department's Agencies, although the hon. Member's questions did not ask this in all cases.

[3] Not published at the time of the original answer.

[4] Formerly Army Individual Training Organisation.

[5] Date of Launch as a Trading Fund; all were previously Agencies.

[6] The 1997–98 Key Targets for this Agency have not yet been published in the Official Report.

Note:

Although the review for this agency was begun in 1994, and the Evaluation and prior options papers completed, the revised Framework document has still not been issued.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Lone Parents

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if those lone parents currently claiming the lone parent rates of (a) family premium, (b) child benefit, (c) housing benefit and (d) council tax benefit will be paid the increases in these benefits announced in the Budget. [37022]

Mr. Field: Lone parents who are currently receiving the higher lone parent rates of family premium in Income Support, Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, and the higher rate of Child Benefit, will continue to receive the higher rates. Those current lone parents with children under 11 who are receiving any of the income-related benefits will also receive the £2.50 increase in the under 11 child allowance rate.

The increases in the family premium and Child Benefit announced in the Budget will be paid to lone parents who are not already receiving the higher lone parent rates, and to all couples with children. The Government believe it is right to increase support for all families with children, and the measures we announced in the Budget will help tackle child poverty. The increase in the under 11 child allowance will protect vulnerable families with young children. These families can face particular difficulties as the need to balance the dual responsibilities of parenting and working can restrict their opportunities to maximise income from work.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the average initial (a) salary and (b) weekly earnings for those lone parents who have obtained employment through the New Deal for Lone Parents on taking up work in each of the control areas. [37023]

Mr. Field: The full, independent evaluation of the New Deal for Lone Parents, which will report in autumn 1999, will contain information on the average earnings of lone parents who have participated in the programme and found jobs.

In the meantime, administrative data do not enable the calculation of robust average salaries or weekly earnings.

Welfare Reform

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Green Paper on Welfare Reform was delivered to the printers. [37021]

Mr. Field: It was delivered to the printers on 24 March 1998.

Social Security Appeals

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 530, on social security appeals, what is the average waiting time from the date the appeal is lodged for an appeal to be dealt with by the ITS; and how many appeals have currently been waiting for more than three months to be heard. [36608]

Mr. Denham: The Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) report that the current average waiting-time for an appeal to a Social Security Appeal Tribunal to be dealt with is approximately 28 weeks.

ITS advise that statistics are not currently available for the number of appeals that have been waiting for more than three months to be heard.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to her answer of 17 March 1998, Official Report, columns 536–38, how many life awards of disability living allowance were made in each quarter since May 1993 at the (a) higher, (b) middle, (c) lower rates of the care component and (d) higher and (e) lower rate of the mobility component. [36100]

Mr. Denham: The information is set out in the table.

National Insurance

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the cost of aligning the employee national insurance contribution lower earnings limit with the income tax personal allowance set out in paragraph 3.31 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report. [36310]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for Northavon (Mr. Webb) and for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 23 March 1998, Official Report, column 70.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect the changes announced in his Budget will have on the income of the National Insurance Fund for 1999–2000. [35922]

Mr. Denham: The proposed changes to employer's National Insurance contribution from April 1999 are revenue neutral for employers as a whole. The changes to employees' contributions will reduce contribution revenue to the National Insurance Fund by £1.2 billion in 1999–2000; a £1.4 billion full year effect.

Government Actuary's Department.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is her policy to maintain the contributory principle in the benefit system for the long term. [36022]

Mr. Denham: We are modernising National Insurance contributions to encourage employers to take on staff and to make work pay for employees. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a series of changes to promote these aims in the Budget on 17 March. Changes to the National Insurance scheme provide an opportunity to update the contributory principle. We will examine the link between paying contributions and earning entitlement to benefits with a view both to simplifying further the administration of the scheme for employers, and emphasising the link between work and earning benefit entitlement.

Benefit Integrity Project

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will review her policy in respect of the Benefit Integrity Project; and if she will make a statement. [35550]

Mr. Denham: It is right to ensure that people who are in receipt of benefit are entitled to it and that they remain so. The Benefit Integrity Project is designed to help ensure that payments of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) are correct.

Since taking office last year, we have made a number of improvements to the way in which the Project operates. Most recently, on 9 February, we introduced an extra safeguard to help ensure that we get decisions right and restore confidence.

At a meeting with the Disability Benefits Consortium on 23 March, it was agreed that people aged 65 or over would no longer be involved in the Project. In addition, we agreed to work together to look at ways of improving Project literature and staff training; and at extending the categories of people who need not be contacted directly as part of the Project.

This demonstrates our determination to be fair and be seen to be fair; and our commitment to keeping under review the way in which the Project operates.

Housing Benefit

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people (a) under 25 years old, (b) in receipt of other benefits and (c) in total were in receipt of housing benefit broken down by (i) rent allowances and (ii) rent rebates in each of the past 10 years; and if she will estimate the equivalent figures for the next three years. [35706]

Mr. Field: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

Focus Groups

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much her Department (a) has spent since 1 May and (b) is planning to spend on focus groups. [34970]

Mr. Field: The Department has commissioned £367,254 worth of focus group research since 1 May 1997 (including VAT) although not all this work is yet completed: Further such research will be conducted in future, but costs are not available until contracts are let.

Group 4

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on procedures by which a contract for security services in her Department was awarded to Group 4; and what assessment she made of the application of TUPE regulations to this contract. [36024]

Mr. Field: Under the previous administration's market testing programme 1992–95, the Department awarded two contracts to Group 4 for accommodation and office services, including security services. In both instances, the terms and conditions of the TUPE regulations applied.

From 1 April 1998, Group 4 will provide all security services to the Department under the PRIME contract. The PRIME contract, which will transfer the ownership and management of the Department's Estate, was awarded to PPM (Partnership Property Management), following a tender exercise in which they were fully evaluated in line with this Government's new strengthened criteria and concern for staff issues. In appointing Group 4 as their sub-contractor to deliver security services, PPM worked in close partnership with the Department to ensure our new criteria were fully met.

Staff transferring to Group 4 will not only have their employment rights fully protected by the TUPE regulations but, by virtue of arrangements made with PPM, will also be entitled to join a new pension arrangement which has been certified by the Government Actuary as being comparable with the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the mortgage interest payment arrangements are for people claiming benefits and paying an endowment mortgage; and if she will make a statement. [36075]

Mr. Field: Income Support and income based Jobseeker's Allowance payable to home-buyers include help with the interest payable on mortgages. No help is provided for capital repayments or, in the case of interest-only mortgages, with the investment vehicles such as endowment policies. Help is calculated using the standard interest rate.

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is her estimate of the number of pensioners who are entitled to income support but who do not take it up; and, of those, how many are (a) receiving either housing benefit or council tax benefit and (b) receiving neither housing benefit nor council tax benefit. [36023]

Mr. Denham: It is estimated that around 1 million pensioners are entitled to Income Support but do not take it up. Of these, it is estimated that:

a) around 540,000 (54 per cent.) are receiving Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit or both;

b) around 460,000 (46 per cent.) are receiving neither Housing Benefit nor Council Tax Benefit.

Postage

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of postage for her Department in each of the last 12 months. [36781]

Mr. Field: The information is set out in the table.

Total postage cost for each of the last 12 months

	Total
March 97	11,073,491.66
April 97	4,110,712.35
May 97	6,539,872.96

January 98	6,157,441.48
February 98	7,858,027.01
Total	77,992,066.17

Note:

The apparent unevenness of expenditure between August and September 97 is due to the timing of payments rather than any significant change in consumption.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many letters the Benefits Agency and the DSS have received from members of the public about the winter fuel payments scheme; [36511]

(2) how many calls the Winter Fuel Payments Telephone Hotline has received to the latest available date; [36513]

(3) if she will provide a breakdown of the nature of the calls received by the Winter Fuel Payments Hotline.[36514]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. A total of £400 million has been committed for this winter and next, to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay. This is the first time any Government have provided additional help with heating costs to all pensioners receiving a retirement pension or one of a number of other qualifying benefits.

The making of this winter's payments has been an enormous and unprecedented exercise. In order to establish all eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to correlate data in around 15 million computer records, involving 15 qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Overall, almost ten million payments will have been made to over seven million pensioner households by the end of March.

So far, within the Department's Headquarters, around 400 letters have been received direct from members of the public and a further 150 from hon. Members regarding the scheme.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Simon Burns, dated 27 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary questions asking how many letters the Benefits Agency (BA) and the DSS have received from members of the public about the winter fuel payments; how many calls the Winter Fuel Payments Telephone Hotline has received to the latest available date; and if she will provide a breakdown of the nature of the calls received by the Winter Fuel Payments Hotline.

The making of almost 10 million winter fuel payments to over seven million pensioner households before the end of March 1998 has been a challenging task for the Benefits Agency. This will have been achieved whilst maintaining normal benefit business.

Around one and a half million of the poorest pensioners, those receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, received their payment of £50 during January. Other eligible pensioners are entitled to a payment of £20 or £10. Where they live alone, are the only eligible pensioner in a household, or are of no fixed abode, they are entitled to £20; otherwise, they are entitled to £10.

The information requested relating to the number of letters received by the BA from members of the public about Winter Fuel Payments is not available at present. We are currently compiling statistics on the number of enquiries received about Winter Fuel Payments, in addition to the statistics collated by the Winter Fuel Helpline. As the payments exercise is still ongoing, it is anticipated that the information will be available some time after the end of April. I will provide the number of enquiries received once the information is available.

Between 5 January and 20 March 1998 the Winter Fuel Payment Helpline has received a total of 136,284 customer calls. Of these calls 116,273 relate to payment queries, 4,486 relate to non-payment queries and there have been 15,525 miscellaneous queries which relate to all other aspects of winter fuel help.

I hope you find this reply is helpful.

Housing Benefit (Fraud and Error)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are (a) the known costs to the social security housing benefit account of (i) established fraud, (ii) suspected fraud, (iii) claimant error and (iv) official error over the last five years and (b) the projected costs in these categories for the current year; and if she will make a statement. [35093]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

1. Included in "Housing Benefit Claimant Error".
2. Except where otherwise annotated, the figures in the table show the costs to the Department of Social Security of Housing Benefit payments made incorrectly by local authorities in Great Britain because of established fraud or error. The level of subsidy paid by the Department varies according to the category of incorrect payment.
3. Local authority audited final subsidy claims for the financial year 1996/97 are not yet available.

Source:

Local authority audited final subsidy claims.

The first Housing Benefit review, in 1995, estimated the overall cost of incorrectness in housing benefit to be around £1 billion: this estimate includes confirmed and suspected fraud, as well as claimant and official error. The Department is currently conducting a further review to update that estimate.

HEALTH

Community Hospitals

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many proposals for the closure of community hospitals have been referred to him since 1 May 1997; how many he has refused; and in which locations. [34444]

Mr. Milburn: [holding answer 13 March 1998]: Four community hospitals in Cornwall have been referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The hospitals concerned are located in Saltash, Fowey, St. Ives and Poltair. No decision has yet been taken on the future of these hospitals.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will make a decision on plans put forward by the Cornwall Health Authority to close community hospitals in Cornwall; what powers he has to vary or reject proposals put forward by health authorities to close community hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [36516]

Mr. Milburn: [holding answer 27 March 1998]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be taking a decision shortly on the proposals for service changes put forward by the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly Health Authority.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what his policy is for the provision of practical help to those who suffer from ME; [35874]

(2) what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated relating to the diagnosis and treatment of ME; and if he will carry out further research into this illness; [35876]

(3) what training programmes (a) have been carried out and (b) are planned to assist doctors in the diagnosis and treatment of ME. [35875]

Ms Jowell: Unfortunately, the causes of chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgic encephalomyelitis (CFS/ME) are not understood, nor is there a generally agreed method of treatment. Treatment to relieve the various symptoms is, therefore, a matter for individual doctors to decide in consultation with their patients. The National Health Service provides a wide range of services to which sufferers from CFS/ME have access, and such patients are seen within a wide range of hospital specialties. Patients can discuss the options available to them with their general practitioner, and they may also request an assessment of their needs by local authority social services departments.

The training of doctors is a matter for the medical schools in collaboration with the General Medical Council's Education Committee, the relevant Medical Royal Colleges (MRC) and, in the case of general practice, the Joint Committee on Postgraduate Training for General Practice. All of these have a vested interest in ensuring that doctors are equipped to deal with the problems they will encounter in practice—both in hospital and in general practice. It is not however practicable or desirable for the Government to prescribe the exact training that any individual doctor will receive.

A number of research projects into ME/CFS have been carried out or are currently underway. These are:

"The role of noradrenaline in the neuropsychological pathogenesis of the chronic fatigue syndrome (ME)", funded by the MRC and costing £37,000, is being undertaken by Dr. R. K. Morriss at the University of Manchester.

"Rehabilitation in the chronic fatigue syndrome (ME)—a controlled trial of cognitive-behavioural therapy", now completed and funded by the Department for £59,034.

"Should General Practitioners manage chronic fatigue syndrome (ME)? A controlled trial", an ongoing research project funded by the NHS Research and Development Programme for £64,433.

The Department has also funded a £65,000 project which considered whether a particular type of psychological treatment was effective in reducing disability in CFS/ME patients and a £60,000 project which is looking at whether general practitioners are best placed to manage CFS/ME patients.

In addition, the NHS Standing Group on Health Technology has recently identified the latest series of priority areas for which it anticipates commissioning primary research or systematic reviews. One of the topics identified is Management Strategies for chronic fatigue syndrome/ME.

Wheelchair Vouchers

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many wheelchair vouchers have been issued using the sums distributed to health authorities since April 1996; and what the target number of wheelchair vouchers for the four year programme is. [35920]

Mr. Boateng: The number of vouchers issued for wheelchair services from April 1997 to March 1998 is forecast to be 1,238, with 418 issued between April 1997 to December 1997. This information was not available before April 1997 because the voucher scheme has been phased in since 1996. No targets have been set for the uptake of vouchers over the four year period. Our objective is to extend choice to service users and uptake will therefore depend on how many wheelchair users choose the vouchers option.

Disabled People

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many disabled people currently receive direct payments from their local authority, by local authority area. [36353]

Mr. Boateng: The Department has carried out a survey of all English local authorities to monitor the implementation of the Direct Payments Act during its first year. Officials are analysing the responses to the survey. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library when it is available.

Tuberculosis

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what levels of immunisation against TB have been achieved in each of the last three years. [36017]

Ms Jowell: The number of Bacillus Calmett Guèrin vaccinations is given in the table:

000

Year	Number of BCG vaccinations
1994–95	[1]317
1995–96	576
1996–97	483

[1] The school BCG programme for 1994–95 was delayed as a result of the measles/rubella immunisation campaign.

BCG immunisation is given to school children between the ages of 10 and 14 years as part of the schools programme and at birth to children at higher risk from tuberculosis as part of the selective neonatal programme and opportunistically. It is not, therefore, possible to give an exact figure for the percentage of children immunised.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of (a) TB and (b) drug resistant TB have been reported in the UK in each of the last three years. [36014]

Ms Jowell: The numbers of notifications of tuberculosis (TB) in the United Kingdom are published in the Annual Abstract of Statistics. Data on TB that is resistant to one or more of the antibiotics normally used to treat TB (drug resistant TB) and on multi-drug resistant TB, i.e. TB that is resistant to isoniazid and rifampicin, the two most effective drugs for treating TB, are collated by the Public Health Laboratory Service on behalf of the United Kingdom Mycobacterial Resistance Network. Information for the years 1994 to 1997 is given in the table.

Notifications of Infectious Diseases database, held within Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre

Notifications of TB in England and Wales fell from 49,358 cases in 1950 to their lowest level of 5,085 in 1987. There was a small increase in cases in the early 1990s, but figures have now levelled out. This success is against a worldwide resurgence in TB which is having a small but important impact on trends in the United Kingdom. The UK has an excellent record of TB control and we are determined this should remain the case.

Vaccinations

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to make students pay the full cost of vaccinations required for overseas visits. [35893]

Ms Jowell: Currently some vaccines against infectious disease are provided free for travellers as a matter of public health policy, others are not. Broadly speaking, those vaccines provided free offer protection against diseases which might be spread on return to the United Kingdom. Immunisation in these cases benefits not only the recipient but also the community at large, since each individual immunisation contributes to the general control of disease. We recognise that inconsistencies and ambiguities have arisen over the years in the arrangements for travel vaccines and the way they are interpreted and are seeking to resolve these anomalies as part of an ongoing, internal review. It would be wrong to pre-empt any recommendations the review might make but it will take into consideration data from a number of sources and bear in mind advice we receive from a wide cross-section of interest groups, including the views expressed by student unions.

Alcohol Consumption

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the evidence submitted to the Sensible Drinking Review has been published. [36195]

Ms Jowell: No. Details of the persons and organisations who submitted written evidence to the review, as well as those of the experts who gave oral evidence to the Inter-Departmental Working Group, can be found in the report "Sensible Drinking", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations were involved in the consultation process for unit labelling of alcoholic products; and if he will separately identify those involved in the format and design of the labels. [36206]

Ms Jowell: The announcement in October 1997 by some of the United Kingdom's largest drinks companies that they would be introducing a voluntary scheme of unit labelling on their packaged products explicitly to support the Government's Sensible Drinking message was an initiative taken by the companies themselves. The companies involved in the scheme are: Seagram, Allied Domecq, Whitbread, Diageo and Bacardi-Martini.

Children in Care

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the number of children in the care of local authorities who have been refused as patients by general practitioners. [36308]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available centrally.

Child Minders

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered child minders there are at the present time. [36138]

Mr. Boateng: There were 102,600 registered child minders in England at 31 March 1996 (the latest date for which figures are available). It is intended to publish figures for 1997 in May this year.

Departmental Staff (Scotland)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36627]

Ms Jowell: No staff of the Department or its agencies are employed in Scotland.

Private Health Care

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement in the role of the section within the Department of Health which deals with the independent health sector. [36469]

Mr. Milburn: This section acts as a liaison point between the Department and the independent health sector. It holds information on the sector and provides briefing to Ministers when required. It has responsibility for matters relating to the registration and inspection of independent hospitals and clinics.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the expenditure on acute care in the private sector in each of the last three years. [36465]

Mr. Milburn: "Laing's Review of Private Healthcare 1997" estimates that the value of the private acute healthcare market in the United Kingdom was £2,009 million in 1994, £2,153 million in 1995 and £2,350 million in 1996.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on encouraging more people to take out private medical insurance. [36476]

Mr. Milburn: We have no plans to encourage more people to take out private medical insurance.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current total number of man-months of patient waiting time on NHS waiting lists. [36606]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 27 March 1998]: On 31 December 1997 1,262,000 patients were awaiting admission to National Health Service hospitals in England with an average waiting time of 4.6 months. This implies an estimated total of 5,802,000 months waited by patients.

Health Service Budget

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the percentage change in the real budget for the National Health Service in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99. [36371]

Mr. Milburn: The real growth in National Health Service total net spending is estimated to be 2.2 per cent. in 1997–98 and 2.3 per cent. in 1998–99.

Northern and Yorkshire NHS Executive

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct the Regional Director of the Northern and Yorkshire NHS Executive to respond to the letters of 11 September and 9 January by the hon. Member for Wakefield on behalf of a constituent. [36981]

Mr. Milburn: The Regional Office are unable to trace the original correspondence and have contacted my hon. Friend's office to resolve the matter.

Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on Professor Phillip Jones's membership of COMA. [36982]

Ms Jowell: Professor Philip James of the Rowett Institute, Aberdeen was appointed as a member of Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy on 31 December 1989. His term of appointment is due to end on 31 December 1998.

TREASURY

Environmental Assessments

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish his environmental assessments of Budget measures which were not included in Table 5.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". [36048]

Dawn Primarolo: Table 5.3 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" incorporates an assessment of the environmental impact of the Budget measures, where these have been identified as significant. The non-inclusion of a measure will generally reflect the fact that the environmental impact is considered to be small.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the methods by which working families tax credit will be assessed, indicating who will carry out each stage of this task; what estimate he has made of (a) how long this will take in each case and (b) how much extra cost will fall on the employer in each case. [35891]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The detailed design of the Working Families Tax Credit—and plans for its implementation—will be developed in the next few months. Those involving payment through the wage packet will be the subject of consultations with organisations representing employers and other appropriate bodies. A regulatory assessment will be published when detailed administrative arrangements have been settled.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what methods he will employ to maximise take-up of the working families tax credit; and what level of take-up he is aiming to achieve once the system is established. [35770]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 1998]: We will seek to ensure that as many families as are entitled receive the credit and we are considering how best to achieve this.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the working families tax credit will make any distinction between married and cohabiting couples. [35769]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 1998]: When the Working Families Tax Credit is introduced in October 1999, it will build on Family Credit which does not currently distinguish between married and unmarried couples.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his estimate of the extra expenditure which will stem from the working families tax credit takes account of the consequential reductions in applications for housing benefit and council tax benefits; and if he will make a statement. [35936]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Estimates of the Exchequer cost of the new Working Families Tax Credit appeared in line 1 of table C.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" (HC 620). These represent the net cost of replacing Family Credit with the WFTC. They therefore take into account consequential changes to entitlement to Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if couples will be able to opt to receive child care tax credits paid direct by the Inland Revenue to the non-employed mother. [36358]

Dawn Primarolo: The child care tax credit will be one of the elements comprising the Working Families Tax Credit, and couples will be able to choose which of them is to receive the WFTC.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how payments made by the Inland Revenue under the working families tax credit scheme will be classified for public accounting purposes; how they will be classified for the purpose of calculating the PSBR and the control total; and if he will make a statement on the rationale and analysis behind the proposed classification. [36247]

Dawn Primarolo: The treatment of the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) in the national accounts is for the ONS who will be able to classify it once details are settled.

For the purposes of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" (FSBR), in calculating General Government Expenditure and Receipts the scoring of the WFTC has been assumed to follow that of MIRAS, a scheme similar in some key aspects bearing on classification. Under this treatment, tax credit payments in excess of an individual's income tax liability are treated as part of General Government Expenditure. Regardless of their classification in the national accounts, WFTC payments will count to the PSBR.

The Control Total treatment of the WFTC has yet to be decided and the FSBR treatment should not be taken as an indication of future Control Total treatment. The projections of the Control Total in the FSBR implicitly include WFTC up to the level of the family credit expenditure that it replaces.

In Table B8 of the FSBR, WFTC is classified as an income tax credit and is deducted from gross income tax receipts in calculating net taxes and social security contributions. A corrected version of this table was published in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 27 March 1998, Official Report, column 348.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the child care tax credit will be accounted for as (a) tax forgone or (b) public expenditure. [36309]

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the amount paid by the Inland Revenue to couples who opt to receive working families tax credit paid direct to the non-employed mother will be classified in the public accounts as (a) public expenditure and (b) negative taxation. [36365]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: All payments of Working Families Tax Credits (WFTC) have been classified as income tax credits in Table B8 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" (FSBR), and deducted from gross income tax receipts in calculating net taxes and social security contributions.

The treatment of the WFTC in the national accounts is for the ONS who will be able to classify it once details are settled.

For the purposes of the FSBR, in calculating General Government Expenditure and Receipts the scoring of the WFTC has been assumed to follow that of MIRAS, a scheme similar in some key aspects bearing on classification. Under this treatment, tax credit payments in excess of an individual's income tax liability are treated as part of General Government Expenditure. Most payments to couples who opt to receive WFTC paid direct to the non-employed mother are likely to be treated in this way.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate in each year to 2001–02 the total value of payments of working family tax credits and child care tax credits which will be classified as negative taxation in the public accounts. [36368]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: Payments of Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) are classified in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" (FSBR) as income tax credits and are deducted from gross income tax receipts in calculating net taxes and social security contributions. Unfortunately, the figures for income tax credits were shown incorrectly in table B8 published in the FSBR. A corrected version was shown in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for East Ham (Mr. Timms) on 27 March 1998 Official Report, column 348. The sums included for WFTC in the income tax credits line in the corrected version are (£ billion):

Up to 1998–99	0
1999–2000	2.0
2000–2001	5.0
2001–2002	5.6

The treatment of the WFTC in the national accounts is for the ONS, who will be able to classify it once details are settled.

For the purposes of the FSBR, the national accounts scoring of the WFTC has been assumed to follow that of MIRAS, a scheme similar in some key aspects bearing on classification. Under this treatment, tax credit payments in excess of an individual's income tax liability are treated as part of General Government Expenditure. The FSBR projections assume that around 80 per cent. of WFTC will score in this way.

The childcare tax credit is an integral part of the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) and so has been included in the numbers above.

Earnings Top-up

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the earnings top-up system operating in particular areas of low income will be reviewed in consequence of the introduction of the working families tax credit. [35937]

Mr. Field [holding answer 24 March 1998]: I have been asked to reply.

Earnings Top-up is a pilot scheme running in eight areas. It is aimed at helping people without dependent children enter and remain in work. The pilots were introduced in October 1996 and are due to conclude in October 1999.

The pilots will be evaluated and a decision on the future of Earnings Top-up will be taken in the light of the evaluation evidence and the circumstances of the time.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional cost to public funds of implementing the public sector pay awards in full in April in each of (a) 1996, (b) 1997 and (c) 1998, (i) in the NHS alone and (ii) across all public services affected. [36625]

Mr. Darling: For groups covered by the pay review bodies, the information is as follows.

£ million

Year	Additional cost of implementing in full
	NHS	Total
1996	37	149
1997	115	263
1998	205	413

Earnings

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people earn over £450 per week and what proportion this represents of the United Kingdom workforce; and what proportion of those earning over £450 per week earn (a) under £500, (b) under £550, (c) under £600, (d) under £650, (e) under £700, (f) under £750, (g) under £800 and (h) over £800. [36361]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Iain Duncan-Smith, dated 30 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on weekly earnings.

The latest information, from the New Earnings Survey 1997, is contained in the attached table.

Employees on adult rates, whose pay for the survey pay-period was unaffected by absence—Great Britain—April 1997

Gross weekly earnings, per cent. earning

	Full-time	Part-time	All
Greater than £450	23.3	1.1	18.3
Less than £500	27.0	29.4	27.0
Less than £550	45.9	51.1	46.0
Less than £600	49.4	63.6	59.4
Less than £650	68.1	72.3	68.2
Less than £700	75.0	77.4	75.0
Less than £750	79.8	80.8	79.9
Less than £800	83.4	83.1	83.4
Greater than/equal to £800	16.6	16.9	16.6

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many possible rates of capital gains tax will apply following the changes proposed in the Budget. [36322]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 26 March 1998]: As at present, there will be three possible rates of capital gains tax: 20 per cent., 23 per cent. and 40 per cent.

Child Care (Grandparents)

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make grandparents looking after grandchildren subject to the same tax treatment as child minders. [36752]

Dawn Primarolo: All people providing child-minding services for payment are liable to income tax on the profits from that activity. Thus grandparents who are paid to look after their grandchildren will be taxable on their profits in the same way as other childminders.

Public Opinion Research

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the contracts for public opinion research his Department has awarded since 10 February indicating (a) the name of the firms, (b) the purposes, (c) the cost and value, (d) the duration and (e) the names of other firms which bid for each contract. [36714]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 27 March 1998]: Since 10 February contracts have been awarded to Fishburn Hedges to advise on presentational aspects of the individual savings account, and to Ogilvy & Mather for similar work on the Working Families Tax Credit. The cost of both projects was approximately £40,000 each. The contracts were let on 26 February following a competitive tender and all work was completed by March 16. The names of companies who bid unsuccessfully for the contracts are covered by commercial confidentiality.

Savings Ratio

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on consumer spending of a 2 per cent. fall in the savings ratio. [36713]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 27 March 1998]: A 2 percentage point fall in the saving ratio would imply that consumer spending would rise around 2 per cent. more than personal disposable income over the period during which the fall in the saving ratio occurred.

Contingency Reserve

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the planned size of the contingency reserve in 1997–98 and 1998–99; and if he will make a statement. [36452]

Mr. Darling: The latest figures for the Reserve were published on Budget day in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", table B18: Control Total by Department.

New Development (Brownfield Land)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which measures in the Budget were intended to promote the Government's policy to encourage 60 per cent. of new development to take place on brownfield land. [36787]

Mr. Darling: The Government's approach to reducing the need for development to spread into the countryside was set out in the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 21–25. The use of economic instruments in planning policy is being explored as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Christian Aid Jubilee 2000 Campaign

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost of administering the Christian Aid Jubilee 2000 campaign. [36379]

Mrs. Liddell: The cost to date of dealing with the Christian Aid Postcard Campaign has been around £6,000.

EU Budget Rebates

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from other member states of the European Union concerning the current system of budget rebates for the United Kingdom and the date when the current period of that arrangement expires. [37212]

Mrs. Liddell: My right hon. Friend has not received any formal representations on this subject from any other Member State, though we understand that a number of other countries have asked the Commission to propose a rebate system which would also apply to them.

The UK's abatement remains in force indefinitely. The unanimous agreement of Member States including the UK would be required to amend the legislation governing our abatement. As the Government have frequently made clear, the UK abatement remains fully justified. We cannot see circumstances in which it would not continue to be warranted in its present form.

Fuel Tax (Charities)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will extend the fuel tax rebate to charitable organisations offering door-to-door transport services to people with extra mobility needs, operating under section 19 licences. [36592]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

There are no current plans to extend the scope of Fuel Duty Rebate beyond registered local bus services.

Mail Order Sales

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for 1997 the gross (a) total United Kingdom mail order sales, (b) United Kingdom mail order sales split between agency sales and direct sales and (c) United Kingdom electronic home shopping market sales, expressing the gross figures in each case as a percentage of total non-food sales. [36304]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Kidney, dated 30 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on mail order sales in the United Kingdom.

The latest information available, from the annual inquiry into retail trades, is for 1996 and shows that in the United Kingdom, the total retail turnover generated by mail order sales was £7,700 million. This represents 7% of total non-food sales.

There is no equivalent information on the mail order split between agency sales and direct sales or on electronic home shopping sales.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what performance targets have been set for the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency for 1998–99. [37359]

Dr. Reid: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Armed Forces Personnel Administration Agency for the financial year 1998–99. The targets build upon progress made by the Agency since it formed on 1 April 1997 and are as follows:

1. Pay, allowances and pensions payments

   Whilst making 100% of payments of pay, allowances and pensions by the due date, the number of errors per 1,000 payments not to exceed 5.

2. Accuracy of personnel records and liabilities data

   Establish a plan with customers to validate the completeness and accuracy of the record of service data, to assist in the further development of unit based systems and introduce sampling methods to assess future accuracy by December 1998.

3. Currency of personnel records and liabilities data

   Update all personnel records and liabilities data within 3 days of valid input.

4. Responsiveness

   Resolve 85% of inquiries, written or through official help desks, within 10 working days, across all services, where information and/or authority is within AFPAA's control.

5. Customer satisfaction

   To set measures for customer satisfaction by December 1998.

6. Efficiency.

   To reduce the average unit costs to deliver AFPAA services by 3% this year.

Racial Equality

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he is taking to promote greater racial equality in the armed forces following the decision of the Commission for Racial Equality to abandon legal action against the Household Cavalry. [37360]

Dr. Reid: The decision by the Commission for Racial Equality on 25 March 1998 to abandon altogether the question of legal action against the Household Cavalry was most welcome. It reflects, quite rightly, the considerable efforts which have been made over the last two years, across all three Armed Services and including the Household Cavalry, following general criticisms of racial equality policies. To achieve this progress has required considerable determination which Sir Herman Ouseley, the CRE's Chairman has described as a 'model of leadership in action'. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and I are delighted with the excellent progress which has now enabled the Commission to recognise the Armed Forces' willingness to make real, permanent progress; I congratulate the Services for what has been achieved.

It is essential that the commitment to change is maintained. For this reason we have agreed a five year "Partnership Agreement" with the Commission and I am placing a copy in the Library. The Agreement is comprehensive and reflects the considerable challenges which lie ahead for the Armed Forces as they seek to put in place and develop, through the strong leadership now being demonstrated, robust racial equality policies. The Agreement, which includes meeting challenging ethnic minority recruitment targets and developing monitoring and evaluation of personnel policies, will require rigorous application. We will be looking to build upon the constructive cooperation we have had with the CRE. We know that the Services are determined to address the Partnership Agreement with vigour and we shall be fully supportive of their efforts.

RNAD Trecwn

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1998, Official Report, column 325, what area of land at RNAD Trecwn, Pembroke, was disposed of; how much was received for it; in which publications its sale was advertised; how many bids were received for its purchase; and which bidder was successful. [36768]

Mr. Spellar: The area of land sold at RNAD Trecwn, Pembrokeshire was 431 hectares. Advertisements were placed in the Estates Gazette, Leisure Week, the Irish Times, Cork Examiner, Western Mail, Property Week, and the Financial Times. Ten bids were received and a preferred purchaser was identified. When the purchaser subsequently withdrew in September 1997, the site was re-offered to the underbidders by formal tender. These bids were submitted and the successful bidder was Omega Pacific Limited. The sale was completed on 21 January 1998.

I am withholding details of the bid received under exemption 14 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Arms Exports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the value of exports to (a) Bahrain, (b) Kuwait, (c) the United Arab Emirates, (d) Qatar and (e) Oman of (i) land systems and equipment; (ii) air systems and equipment, (iii) naval systems and equipment and (iv) services and consulting in each of the last five years. [34758]

Mr. Spellar: The information requested relates to the procurement of defence equipment and services by foreign governments. Details have been provided to the Ministry of Defence either directly by those governments or voluntarily by British companies under commercial confidentiality constraints.

Officials are currently reviewing whether the information may be released under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as that review has been completed. A copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

In the interim, I can advise that the UK reports the annual export of major weapons systems to the United Nations Register of Conventional Arms which was established in 1992. This information is provided voluntarily by industry on the understanding that, by virtue of its inclusion in the UN Arms Register, it will be made public. The table shows the UK's return for the countries specified according to UN Register category. Categories I, II and III are land systems, category IV and V and VII are air systems and category VI is a naval system. The UK's 1997 return to the Register will be available in May.

Low Flying

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the pattern of military low flying activity in the United Kingdom during 1997. [37361]

Mr. Spellar: Military low flying training continues to be a necessary contribution to our defence capabilities. The amount carried out in 1997 was about 5 per cent. lower than in 1996, measured in terms of hours booked, reflecting current requirements and commitments. The distribution across the country has not changed significantly. We try to spread the activity as widely as possible, but a variety of operational, geographic and climatic constraints inevitably mean that some areas continue to see a greater intensity than others.

I have today placed in the Library of the House a paper giving a detailed account of the pattern of activity. Further copies can be obtained from the following address:

Jaguar Aircraft (Italy)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the re-deployment of the Royal Air Force aircraft at Gioia del Colle in Italy; and if he will make a statement. [37510]

Mr. George Robertson: The six RAF Jaguars currently based at Gioia del Colle in Italy and their supporting RAF Tristar tanker based at Ancona will be redeployed to the UK on 6 April. This results from our assessment that it is no longer necessary to have the Jaguars based in Italy on a full time basis given the improving situation in Bosnia. The Jaguars will, however, remain on short notice to resume participation in operations over Bosnia if required.

TREASURY

NHS Funding

Mr. Maples: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the basis on which (a) the £300 million for winter pressures in the NHS and (b) the £500 million additional NHS funding announced in the Budget were allocated between England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. [36149]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 25 March 1998]: £190 million of the £300 million allocated for winter pressures in the NHS was divided up according to the long standing Barnett formula. A further £80 million was allocated directly to the Department of Health to meet specific pressures in England. The remainder was found by the Department of Health through administrative savings.

All of the £500 million additional NHS funding announced in the Budget was divided up in accordance with the Barnett formula.

These amounts are in addition to the £1.2 billion that the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his Budget in July 1997 which were also allocated in accordance with the Barnett formula.

Road Fuel Duty

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the actual and estimated yield from duty on road fuel for the years (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000; and what the figure would be if the duty increased had been in line with the RPI. [35866]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The latest estimates of revenue from road fuel duties are £18.9 billion in 1997–98 and £21.2 billion in 1998–99.

If the duty rates had increased in July 1997 and March 1998 in line with the 12 month RPI for September 1997 and September 1998 respectively, the estimates would have been £18.4 billion in 1997–98 and £19.6 billion in 1998–99.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what additional amount the retail prices index has risen since 1992 as a result of the imposition of petrol and diesel fuel excise duty increases compared with the increase that would have occurred if the duty increases had been limited to the RPI. [35512]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise estimate that the cumulative increase in the RPI as a result of increases in petrol and diesel duty rates since 1992 (including the 1992 increase) has been 1.36 per cent. Had the duty increases been limited to increases in RPI, the cumulative impact would have been 0.58 per cent. The additional amount is therefore 0.78 per cent.

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish (a) the number of places on each of his Department's non-departmental public bodies, (b) the number of places that are currently unfilled on each non-departmental public body, (c) the total number of members that have resigned since 1 May 1997, (d) the total number that have retired since 1 May 1997, (e) the total number that have not had their contracts renewed since 1 May 1997, (f) the total number that have remained in place since 1 May 1997 and (g) the total number that have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [35272]

Taxation

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) pursuant to Table 3.3, Effects of Budget on number of families with high marginal deduction rates, in his Financial Statement and Budget report (HC620), if he will publish equivalent figures for families facing marginal deduction rates of (a) 50 per cent. or more and (b) 40 per cent. or more; [35528]

(2) pursuant to Table 3.3 of the Red Book, how many people have a marginal deduction rate of 68.5 per cent. or more on current arrangements; and how many will have a deduction rate of 68.5 per cent. or more under his proposals. [35862]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many families will face a marginal deduction rate of between 50 per cent. and 60 per cent. (a) before and (b) after the introduction of working families tax credit. [36101]

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families under the working families tax credit will have a marginal deduction rate of 50 per cent. or more; and how many currently have marginal deduction rates of 50 per cent. or more. [36416]

Dawn Primarolo: [holding answers 20, 23, 24 and 26 March 1998]: The data requested are given in the table. It shows that the Budget has taken an important step towards tackling the unemployment and poverty traps. In-work incomes have increased, and the level at which families with 2 children start to pay effective income tax has risen from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. of average earnings. The number of families facing very high marginal deduction rates has been reduced significantly. In those cases where families may face a higher MDR, they will still be better off.

Effect of Budget on number of families with marginal deduction rates of 40 per cent. or more[1]

(000)

Marginal deduction rate	Before Budget	After Budget
100 per cent. or more	5	0
90 per cent. or more	130	20
80 per cent. or more	300	200
70 per cent. or more	740	260
68.5 per cent. or more	760	810
60 per cent. or more	760	1,010

Effect of Budget on number of families with marginal deduction rates of 40 per cent. or more[1]

(000)

Marginal deduction rate	Before Budget	After Budget
50 per cent. or more	760	1,080
40 per cent. or more	800	1,120

[1] Figures are for families in receipt of income-related benefits or the WFTC where at least one partner works 16 hours or more, and are based on 1997–98 caseload and take-up rates.

The figures do not take account of changes to National Insurance contributions, which will reduce MDRs for those just below the Lower Earnings Limit.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36215]

Mrs. Liddell: The Treasury, the Office for National Statistics and the Royal Mint employ no staff in Scotland. The numbers and location within Scotland of the staff of Customs and Excise, the Inland Revenue, the Valuation Office and National Savings on 1 March 1998 are given in the table.

European Central Banks

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each member state of the European Union (a) the current functions performed in whole or in part by their central bank, (b) for each function, those bodies or persons responsible for decisions in respect of each and (c) to whom such bodies or persons are currently accountable. [37215]

Mrs. Liddell: The EMI convergence report, published in March 1998 in accordance with Article 109j(1) of the EC Treaty, provides a detailed account of the statutory duties of member states' national central banks and the extent of legal convergence with the Treaty.

Debt Management

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made in transferring debt management responsibilities to the Treasury; and if he will make a statement. [37451]

Mrs. Liddell: The United Kingdom Debt Management Office (DMO) will be launched as an Executive Agency on 1 April 1998. From that date it will take over as the Government's agent for operations in the gilts market. Copies of the DMO Framework Document have been placed in the libraries of both Houses.

I have set the following targets for the DMO for 1998–99:

1. To ensure full compliance with the Government's remit for the issuance of debt to finance the Central Government Borrowing Requirement as set out in the Debt Management Report, published on 19 March, within the tolerances and subject to the review triggers notified separately to the Office.

2. To reduce the maximum time taken to issue the results of conventional gilt auctions from 45 minutes to 40 minutes whilst achieving complete accuracy.

3. To establish the system for managing the Exchequer's aggregate cash position which achieves cost-effective financing and is error free, properly conducted, legally sound and subject to minimal credit risk (to the satisfaction of an external assessor) by January 1999.

4. To achieve complete accuracy, within agreed accounting tolerances, in the recording of transactions, the money delivered to the NLF and the reports of the Debt Management Account.

5. To acknowledge all letters from the public within two weeks and for at least 95 per cent. to be sent a substantive reply within four weeks.

6. To achieve less than 12 breaches of the operational market notice (excluding any breaches which the Treasury accept were beyond the control of the office).

7. To ensure that the qualifications that the NAO have made in respect of the Gilt-Edged Official Operations Account are satisfactorily addressed in the running and presentation of the Debt Management Account.

Pensioners (Medical Insurance)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners currently hold private medical insurance policies; and what the figure was in April 1997. [37049]

Mrs. Liddell: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Chief Executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Tim Loughton, dated 31 March 1998:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question requesting figures for the number of pensioners holding private medical insurance policies.

The most recent estimate available is from the 1996–97 Family Expenditure Survey, which is based on information collected from April 1996 to March 1997. This shows that among those households headed by a pensioner, seven per cent. included one or more people who made payments into a private medical insurance scheme.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Inland Revenue takes in circumstances where (a) a husband and wife cannot agree who should receive the working families tax credit and (b) one spouse claims the other is receiving the tax credit but keeping it to him or herself. [34887]

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer where both members of a couple request that the working families tax credit be paid directly to them, which party's wishes will take precedence. [36093]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who will receive the working families tax credit in the event that a couple cannot agree on which of them should receive it. [36039]

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances couples who are unable to agree as to how working families tax credit should be paid will receive the credit (a) via the pay packet of the person in paid employment and (b) paid direct to the non-employed mother. [36363]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17, 24 and 26 March 1998]: From April 2000 the Working Families Tax Credit will generally be paid through the wage packet. Couples will be able to choose which partner should receive the credit. The details of the new scheme, including the rules for dealing with particular situations, such as disagreements between partners, will be developed by the Inland Revenue over the coming months. Although the resolution of particular disagreements would, of course, depend on the specific facts of the case, the present presumption is that, where the couple disagree about which of them is to receive the credit, it would normally be paid to the partner who mainly cared for the children.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Peace Process

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she intends to agree to a political settlement involving those parties with paramilitary links without those parties and the paramilitary organisations with which they are linked being committed to the Mitchell Principles and demonstrable progress being made along the parallel track which deals with disarmament. [35657]

Marjorie Mowlam [holding answer 23 March 1998]: All parties involved in the talks process have affirmed their total and absolute commitment to the Mitchell Principles. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear on 15 September 1997 in a joint statement with the Taoiseach both Governments would like to see the decommissioning of some paramilitary arms during the negotiations and believe this could be a major contribution to confidence-building and momentum towards agreement. There is no legal or technical obstacle to decommissioning. It should commence now.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

British Amateur Rugby League Association

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will review the appropriateness of Government support for the British Amateur Rugby League Association, with particular reference to the association's rules on out of district transfers. [36609]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Central Government support for sport is channelled through the UK and English Sports Councils. As independent bodies established by Royal Charter, it is for the sports councils to determine what funding they make available to sports governing bodies.

I have no power to intervene in the day-to-day affairs of properly constituted governing bodies of sport. I recognise that regional boundary areas can cause some problems, but it is for British Amateur Rugby League Association (BARLA) to establish and implement rules and regulations which they consider to be in the best interests, both for individual players and for the game as a whole.

Sport Governing Bodies

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 26 February 1998, Official Report, column 322, what was the level of public funding to each of the sports organisations in the last year for which figures are available. [33544]

Mr. Banks: I am placing copies of this information in the Libraries of the House.

Holidays

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many days' holiday he estimates were taken in the United Kingdom by UK residents in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [36859]

Mr. Tom Clarke: According to the United Kingdom Tourist Survey, UK residents spent 302.1 million nights away from home on holiday in the United Kingdom during 1995, and 295.8 million nights in 1996. Information for 1997 is not yet available.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will state the (a) percentage and (b) total amount of grant in aid awarded to museums and galleries in (i) London, (ii) England and (iii) Scotland. [36130]

Mr. Fisher [holding answer 26 March 1998]: Information for 1997–98 is in the following table. These figures exclude spending on museums and galleries by local authorities and universities and do not therefore reflect the true geographic balance of public resources.

	Grant-in-aid in 1997–98 (£ million)	Percentage of total
London[1]	185.20	77.5
of which:
DCMS[2]	184.70
MGC[3]	0.50
England (excluding London)	21.40	9.0
of which:
DCMS[2]	15.30
MGC[3]	6.10
Scotland	32.30	13.50
of which:
MGC[3]	0.02
SO[4]	32.30
Total	238.9	100.0

[1] The data for London include the national museums and galleries situated there.
[2] Department for Culture, Media and Sport (excluding MGC).
[3] Museums and Galleries Commission (grant-in-aid from DCMS). This figure is not yet final.
[4] Scottish Office.

The picture is somewhat distorted as most national museums and galleries are in London, accounting for £175.8 million (73.4 per cent. of the total). This is inevitable as London is our capital city. Removing this figure from the calculation results in a more even distribution of funding.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many meetings have been requested with his Department's Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members; and how many meetings have been granted in each category. [31297]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department does not maintain a record of meetings requested by hon. Members, although it is overwhelmingly our general policy to accede to them. I and my ministerial colleagues have had a number of formal meetings with hon. Members, individually and collectively, from all sides of the House. We also make ourselves available for informal discussions in the House and at the Department, personally and by telephone.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to promote awareness of tourism careers in schools. [36977]

Mr. Tom Clarke: It is important that students, careers advisers and parents are aware of the range of career opportunities there are in tourism. With that in mind, I was very pleased recently to launch Springboard UK, which is receiving pump-priming funding through the Government's Sector Challenge competition. Springboard will provide a national network of one-stop shop careers advice centres, and will work through schools, colleges and universities to ensure that students, teachers and career advisers have access to up-to-date information about the career opportunities in this fast growing sector.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the change in the total number of jobs in tourism-related industries in the year to December 1997 in (a) London and (b) the north-west of England. [36853]

Mr. Tom Clarke: The total number of employees in employment in tourism related industries fell between December 1996 and December 1997 by (a) 5.5% in London and (b) 6.4% in the north-west of England. This compares with a fall of 1.3% in Great Britain overall.

Party Conferences

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what evaluation he has made of the impact on the tourism industry of the hosting of annual party conferences in Blackpool. [36963]

Mr. Tom Clarke: None. However, the Government fully recognise the importance of the contribution which the business and conference sector makes to the wider tourism and hospitality industry. An industry-led working group is looking at what action might be taken to enhance that contribution. Its findings will inform my Department's forthcoming strategy for the sustainable growth of tourism.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Development Awareness Working Group

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the purpose is of the Development Awareness Working Group; and if she will list the members. [37167]

Clare Short: As set out in their recent White Paper on International Development, the Government attach great importance to increasing Development Awareness in the United Kingdom, and have now established a Development Awareness Working Group, chaired by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for International Development. This will hold its first meeting today. The Group will advise DFID on the planning and implementation of its strategy on development awareness.

The initial membership of the Group will be:

Tany Alexander, One World Week

Douglas Bourn, Development Education Association

Tim Brighouse, Chief Education Officer, Birmingham City Council

Paddy Coulter, International Broadcasting Trust

Liz Cumberbatch, Workers' Education Association

Bisi Adeleye Fayemi, Akina Mama Wa Afrika

John Fisher, Transport and General Workers Union

Jaya Graves, Southern Voices

Lisbeth Grundy, Council for Environmental Education

Judith Hemery, Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges

Phil Hope, MP

Dr. Kim Howells MP, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, DfEE

Elenid Jones, Christian Aid, Cardiff

Robin Lloyd-Jones, Scottish Forum for Development Education in Schools

Stephen MacCloskey, Coalition of Aid and Development Agencies, Belfast

Jane Nelson, The Prince of Wales Business Leaders Forum

Ashok Ohri, Organisation and Social Development Consultants Ltd.

Dan Rees, Voluntary Service Overseas

Tony Robinson

Scot Sinclair, Development Education Centre, Birmingham

Jon Snow

John Sutton, CBE, General Secretary, Secondary Heads Association

Derek Walker, Worldaware

Tom Wylie, National Youth Agency.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish the Development Awareness Working Group Strategy document. [37107]

Mr. Foulkes: The first meeting of the Development Awareness Working Group will consider an outline strategy paper which details our initial thinking at this stage. The paper will be developed in the light of the advice of the Group. Copies of the outline paper are however being placed this week in the libraries of both Houses as well as on the Department for International Development's internet site.

Know How Fund

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the amount her Department will spend in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 through the Know How Fund; and which countries will receive such funding. [36846]

Mr. Foulkes: Expenditure through the Know How Fund in 1997–98 is estimated to be £90 million.

In 1998–99 expenditure is expected to be in the region of £80 million.

The Know How Fund provides support to the following countries:

Latvia

Lithuania

Estonia

Bulgaria

Hungary

Poland

Romania

Czech Republic

Slovak Republic

Albania

Macedonia

Slovenia

Croatia

Bosnia

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Kazakhstan

Belarus

Georgia

Armenia

Ukraine

Russian Federation

Azerbaijan

Moldova

Turkmenistan

Uzbekistan

Tajikstan

Kyrgyzstan.

Strategy Papers

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when her Department's Country Strategy Papers will be made publicly available. [37081]

Mr. Foulkes: Existing Country Strategy Papers (CSPs) are available now. However, following the White Paper on International Development new papers are being prepared for all those bilateral country programmes over £10 million and other significant development programmes. These will be prepared over the next year and they will become publicly available as they are finalised. The first papers will be available in the Summer.

Departmental Employees

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff are employed in Scotland by her Department, or executive agencies responsible to her Department; and where those staff are located. [36210]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department currently employs 406 permanent and pensionable staff and 21 casual staff in Scotland. All these staff are located at the Department for International Development, East Kilbride.

Asia Europe Meeting

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what subjects she proposes to raise at the Second Asia Europe Meeting. [36845]

Mr. Fatchett: I have been asked to reply.

The agenda of the Second Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM 2) will be finalised by the Leaders themselves on the eve of the Summit. We expect ASEM 2 to have a wide-ranging political dialogue. The Asian financial crisis will be a priority in our economic discussions. The Summit will also produce outcomes in areas that matter to the peoples of our two regions, particularly education, child welfare and environment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Hans Koschnik

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of Mr. Hans Koschnik in the European Commission; what budget he has been allocated; and to which Directorate General he has been allocated. [36975]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I understand that Mr. Hans Koschnik is not employed by the European Commission.

Land Mines

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government intend to complete the ratification of the Ottawa Treaty on the banning of land mines. [36835]

Mr. Fatchett: We intend to ratify the Ottawa Convention as soon as the Parliamentary schedule allows for the passage of the necessary legislation.

EU Presidency (Children)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) of 13 March 1998, Official Report, column 402, what discussions he held with the Department for Education and Employment on the use of schoolchildren to promote the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Union prior to launch; and what subsequent representations he has received from that department. [37007]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As I said in my answer to the hon. Member the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 13 March 1998, Official Report, column 402, the intention behind the activities for young people which we have organised is not to use children to promote the Presidency, but to encourage them to become involved.

We have worked closely with the Department for Education and Employment from the outset in considering how to involve young people in the Presidency. Our two Departments, for example, jointly produced the schools pack—Partners In Europe. There was also a joint launch of various activities and competitions for young people during the Presidency, notably the DfEE's "Celebrating Europe" and the FCO's "Ambassador for a Day" competitions. We remain in close touch with the Department for Education and Employment about these activities.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of children to launch events commemorating the UK Presidency of the European Union in British embassies in EU countries. [36976]

Mr. Doug Henderson: One British embassy in another EU country invited children to an event marking the start of our Presidency of the EU. Our Embassy in Stockholm organised a tea-party to which the Ambassador invited his EU colleagues, asking them to bring a child who would like to "represent" the younger generation of their country. The children were not used to launch the event, but were invited to attend and meet their ambassadors and one other.

Other than this specific event, many of our embassies in the EU regularly involve local school children in debates, competitions, open days and so on, to help increase their understanding of modern Britain and to explain where Britain stands on a range of issues. At the moment, these obviously include the Presidency.

In addition, all our EU embassies are finding attachments for the prize winners in the FCO's Ambassador for a Day competition.

Kashmir

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards territorial issues in Kashmir; and what steps he has taken to resolve disputes in this area. [36999]

Mr. Fatchett: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) and for Luton, North (Mr. Hopkins) on 28 October 1997, Official Report, columns 795–96. We shall continue to encourage the governments of India and Pakistan in their dialogue.

Algeria

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in respect of human rights abuses in Algeria from (a) non-Governmental organisations and (b) members of the public; and if he will make a statement. [36855]

Mr. Fatchett: I met representatives of the United Nations Association, Amnesty International, the Refugee Council and the Medical Foundation for the Victims of Torture on 25 February to discuss their concerns about the human rights situation in Algeria. I will meet them again today (31 March) along with a representative of Human Rights Watch. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I receive a large number of letters from members of the public about Algeria which reflect similar concerns.

We continue to be concerned about allegations of human rights violations in Algeria, and raise these concerns as part of our ongoing dialogue with the Algerian Government.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has initiated as President of the EU Foreign Affairs Council in respect of human rights in Algeria; and if he will make a statement. [36973]

Mr. Fatchett: In January 1998, I led an EU troika to Algeria. During that visit and subsequently, we have continued to encourage the Algerians to accept a visit by UN Special Rapporteurs to Algeria as well as allow greater access for the international media.

We continue to be concerned about the allegations of human rights violations in Algeria, and raise these concerns as part of our ongoing dialogue with the Algerian Government.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Attorney-General how many people are currently employed by the Crown Prosecution Service, broken down to show the number of (a) lawyers and (b) civil servants, by grade. [36305]

The Attorney-General: As at 28 February 1998, the Crown Prosecution Service employed 2,094 lawyers and 3,995 administrative staff. By level, these staff are broken down as:

Staff	People in post	Full time equivalent
Lawyers level
Senior civil service	40	40
Level E	125	124
Level D	221	214.5
Level C	1,675	1,542.5
Legal trainees	33	32
Total	2,094	1,953
Administrators level
Senior civil service	6	6
Level E	20	20
Level D	31	31
Level B	1,535	2,247
Level A	2,403	1,426
Total	3,995	3,730

SCOTLAND

Car Parking

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has (a) to reduce the number of car parking spaces available for use by staff and (b) to introduce charges for staff using workplace car parking spaces. [32461]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 3 March 1998]: Car parking for use by staff of my Department is kept under regular review. In the last 12 months, 82 car parking spaces in Edinburgh city centre have been given up.

Our proposals for a sustainable, effective and workable transport policy appropriate to the needs of Scotland will be set out in the forthcoming UK and Scottish Integrated Transport White Papers. Against that background, my Department is considering how best to develop Green Transport Plans for its key office buildings. We will consider in that context whether to review the feasibility and appropriateness of any further reductions in workplace car parking spaces and the introduction of charges for their use by staff.

Teachers

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the measures relating to the work of secondary teachers in Scotland which his Department has implemented in the last 10 years. [35838]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 27 March 1998]: Over the last 10 years, numerous statements of policy on school education and substantial guidance have been issued to education authorities and schools. It is not possible, without disproportionate cost, to identify all measures which may have related, to a greater or lesser extent, to the work of secondary teachers. Scottish Office Education Department Circular No. 5/1995 covering guidance on education provision following local government reorganisation is already in the Library. I have today arranged for a supplementary list of school education circulars, covering the period for 1995 to the present date, to also be placed in the Library.

Boundary Walls

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action the Government propose to take in response to the Scottish Law Commission report on Boundary Walls (HC584); and if he will make a statement. [37341]

Mr. Dewar: The Government have decided to accept the recommendations contained in the Scottish Law Commission Report on Boundary Walls. The Commission have concluded that the existing law is clear and seems widely accepted since there has been no recent case law and little pressure for change. The law provides for the maintenance of a boundary wall as a whole while at the same time allowing each owner to make full use of this own section of the wall. The Commission have therefore recommended that there is no need for legislation to either re-state or amend the present law.

GPs (Deprivation Payments)

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the criteria for deprivation payments to GPs, with particular reference to the criteria used to decide the percentage of a GP's list attracting deprivation payments; and what reviews he has undertaken or plans of the criteria relating to that percentage. [36716]

Mr. Galbraith: For the purposes of the deprivation payments scheme in Scotland, the Jarman Index is applied to enumeration districts. Scotland uses 7 variables of the index: unemployment; numbers of elderly people living alone; household overcrowding; under 5s; single parent households; residents in ethnic minority households; and numbers who have moved house. The application of the index results in a score being given for each enumeration district which are then classified as areas of high, medium or low deprivation. A score of 50 or more indicates an area of high deprivation, 40 or more an area of medium deprivation and 30 or more an area of low deprivation. Each Health Board when calculating deprivation payments looks at each patient on a GP's medical list and pays the GP the relevant amount for the enumeration district in which the patient lives.

There are no plans to review the deprivation payment scheme in Scotland at present.

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of deprivation payments to GPs; and what increases in that level are planned. [36717]

Mr. Galbraith: The estimated amount payable in respect of deprivation payments in Scotland for the financial year ending 31 March 1998 is £4.976 million. The estimated amount payable for the financial year 1998–99 is approximately £5.1 million.

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums will be paid as deprivation payments to GPs in the (a) West Fife, (b) Central Fife and (c) North-east Fife localities in the forthcoming financial year. [36718]

Mr. Galbraith: The information requested is shown in the table.

Projected deprivation payments (£s)[1] to GPs in Fife Health Board in financial year ending 31 March 1999, by locality

	Total Payment	Payment by level of deprivation
		High	Medium	Low
Fife Health Board	257,738	66,369	74,166	117,203
West Fife	97,724	29,286	25,413	43,025
Central Fife	136,923	32,646	41,254	63,023
North-East Fife	23,091	4,438	7,499	11,154

[1] Payments have been estimated using the number of patients as at 1 April 1997 in areas classified as deprived and the appropriate fees for 1998/99.

Cairngorms Partnership

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 March 1998, Official Report, column 576, for what reasons the Cairngorms Partnership stipulates that members of its advisory board appointed by local authorities should be the convenor of the local authority. [37108]

Mr. Macdonald: The Chairman of the Cairngorms Partnership has invited representatives at the highest level from those agencies with a key role to play in implementation of the Management Strategy, including the Convenors of the relevant local authorities, to form an Advisory Board. Membership of the Board is a matter for the Chairman of the partnership.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Executive Agencies

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are the key performance targets for Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office, the Public Trust Office and the Court Service executive agencies for 1998–99. [37453]

Mr. Hoon: The following tables set out the key performance targets that the Lord Chancellor has set for Her Majesty's Land Registry, the Public Record Office, the Public Trust Office and the Court Service for 1998–99.

HM Land Registry Key performance indicators and targets 1998–99

The inflation factor for the cost per unit in cash terms is derived from the GDP indices announced by HM Treasury in March 1998.

Public Record Office Key performance indicators and targets 1998–99

Indicator	Target
Efficiency
Unit costs of key activities:
(a) selecting and preserving the public records	Reduce to £101.53 per metre
(b) giving access to records	Reduce to £7.83 per information transaction
Backlog of records in departments reported as being over 30 years old and awaiting review	Reduce from 2070 metres (assessed in January 1998) to 1340 metres
Provision of acceptable storage conditions i.e. meeting the preservation and environmental standards recommended by BS 5454:1989 Recommendations for storage and exhibition of documents (BSI 1989)	Increase the proportion of records stored to the standards from 88.12% to 88.29%
Management efficiency in running support services and projects	Reduce the running costs of the Office's support services as a proportion of overall running costs from 8.46% to 8.37%
Quality of Service
The achievement of Charter Standards
(a) Charter Standard targets for answering letters, delivering documents to users and reprographic services	Achieve 98.5% against the targets
(b) User satisfaction survey	Achieve assessment of excellent on 56% of survey forms returned
Effectiveness
Performance in achieving specified milestones towards strategic objectives in the light of emerging government policies	(a) Implement the recommendations of the Scoping Study of records management in government to the timetable established (b) Increase revenue by 3.3% against the 1997–98 target (c) Produce a new edition of the Public Record Office Guide

Fuller details of the agency's targets are given in its Business Plan, which is available from the Public Record Office.

Public Trust Office Key performance indicators and targets 1998–99

Indicator	Target
1. To carry out accounting transactions within target times	To bring to account at least 99% of receipts and payments transactions within turnaround targets by volume weighted performance
2. To achieve investment targets	(a) To pay interest on the special rate account at an annual rate at or above the average of the agreed comparator, and to pay at least 75% of that rate on basic rate accounts. (b) To ensure that 90% of all funds which have a Dedicated Investment Portfolio[1] have a formal investment review[2] at least once a year
3. To achieve Charter Standards	To achieve 98% of Charter Standards
4. To meet the unit cost target	To operate within a unit cost of £195.09
5. Percentage of full costs recovered	To ensure that 100% of full costs are recovered

[1] A Dedicated Investment Portfolio is one which has been constructed to accommodate the specific requirements of the client and has a sufficiency of funds and duration to allow it to be adjusted in line with stockmarket or client circumstances. The two investment KPIs cover around 80% of total funds held by the Public Trust Office.
[2] The investment review is complemented by the Public Trust Office policies of unitising smaller funds, and benchmarking larger portfolios against stock exchange models.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Phoenix Data Quality

Mr. Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the Police Research Group's report, Phoenix Data Quality. [37335]

Mr. Straw: Yes. I am placing a copy of the report in the Library today.

Animal Procedures Committee

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will appoint new members to the Animal Procedures Committee. [37336]

Mr. George Howarth: I am pleased to announce the appointment of four new members with effect from 1 April:

Dr. David Clark, head of Unilever's Environmental Safety Laboratory;

Dr. Maggy Jennings, head of the Research Animals Department at the Royal Society for the Protection of Cruelty to Animals;

Dr. Gill Langley, scientific adviser to the Dr. Hadwen Trust for Humane Research; and Professor John Martin, Professor of Cardiovascular Medicine at University College London.

I expect to make further appointments later in the year.

Home Detention Curfew

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisoners will be released on home detention curfew. [37337]

Ms Quin: Most prisoners serving sentences of between three months and four years will be eligible for consideration for release on home detention curfew. To be released, they must first pass a risk assessment and have a suitable release address.

The detail of the risk assessment is still being worked out and will need to balance properly any potential risk posed by the prisoner's release on home detention curfew against the risks involved in retaining prisoners in custody until their automatic release date when the curfew is not available.

Prisoners will be assessed on the basis of their potential threat to the public and the probability of their reoffending or failing to comply with their conditions of curfew. Prisoners who have demonstrated a successful record of temporary release would normally be expected to be suitable for release on home detention curfew. The risk assessment will also make clear, however, that prisoners convicted of offences to which Part I of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 applies will not be released upon home detention curfew, save where there are exceptional circumstances, as this group of prisoners present a particular type of risk. We will, of course, keep this policy under review.

Police Information Technology Organisation

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the arrangements for responding to parliamentary questions and correspondence from hon. Members relating to the work of the Police Information Technology Organisation following its change in status on 1 April. [37338]

Mr. Michael: With the implementation, on 1 April 1998, of the remaining provisions of Part IV of the Police Act 1997, the Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO), hitherto part of the Home Office, will become an executive Non-Departmental Public Body (NDPB). As an NDPB, PITO will henceforth be independent of the Home Office although, as the responsible Minister, my right hon. Friend will be accountable to Parliament for the overall efficiency and effectiveness with which the Organisation carries out its statutory functions.

In recognition of PITO's new independent status, hon. Members are invited to write direct to the Organisation's Chairman, Sir Trefor Morris, if they have any questions or concerns about the information technology or procurement activities undertaken by PITO on behalf of the police service or other customers, or about its administration. Sir Trefor's address is: Police Information Technology Organisation, Room 504, Horseferry House, Dean Ryle Street, London SW1P 2AW.

My right hon. Friend and I will naturally continue to be responsible for answering Parliamentary Questions, unless they relate solely to PITO's activities in Scotland, in which case the Secretary of State for Scotland would be responsible. Advice on the administration and/or activities of PITO may be sought from the Organisation in order to answer Parliamentary Questions. Where an hon. Member asks a Parliamentary Question on matters concerning the day-to-day operation of the Organisation, my right hon. Friend or I will usually reply to the effect that the Chairman will write direct to the hon. Member concerned.

Turning to Ministerial correspondence, if either my right hon. Friend or our Scottish Office counterparts, receive correspondence from hon. Members about matters which fall within PITO's area of responsibilities, we will normally reply to the effect that the correspondence has been forwarded to the Chairman with a request that he replies personally to the hon. Member concerned. Hon. Members will continue to receive a full Ministerial reply where the correspondence involves wider policy consideration.

I will write to all hon. Members setting out these arrangements. A copy of my letter will be placed in the Library.

Police and Fire Service Pension Schemes

Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to publish proposals for modernising the Police and Fire Service pension schemes. [37339]

Mr. Straw: Consultation documents on the two pension schemes have been published today. I have placed copies in the Library. Copies are also being sent to police forces and fire services, police and fire authorities, the police staff associations and the fire service unions in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. They have been invited to comment by 31 July 1998.

The current police and fire service pension schemes were established to reflect the special nature of police and firefighting work. Of course, we continue to take this fully into account. But these schemes are very expensive, both for police officers, firefighters and the relevant authorities and are not necessarily in tune with current circumstances.

Authorities, in particular, are faced with large annual increases to pension costs, consuming an increasingly large proportion of their total budget and thus eating into the resources available to run the services themselves.

The consultation documents have two main objectives: to stimulate debate for modernised pension schemes for future police officers and firefighters, which bring pensions more in line with other public service pensions and make them more affordable; to reform aspects of the current arrangements for retirement on medical grounds.

In considering options for a new pension scheme, the unique nature of police and firefighting work will be recognised. There is no intention of reducing the pension benefits which serving or retired police officers or firefighters are entitled to as members of their pension schemes. Any changes to such benefits would apply only to new entrants to the police or fire service.

The level of early retirements on medical grounds in the police and fire service is unacceptably high and in many cases cannot be justified. Wide variations across the country between forces and brigades support this argument. Good management of ill-health retirement is crucial. The consultation documents suggest options for change which depend on better practice and, in the case of the police, on amending current legislation. I have separately announced changes in regulations and practice to deal with those situations where officers seek to retire early before the disciplinary process is complete.

The Government firmly believe that modernisation of the two schemes is essential, particularly as any changes to the pension benefits of new entrants will take many years to come into effect.

Prison Visitors

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the responsibility for funding boards of visitors and the Boards of Visitors' Secretariat. [37340]

Ms Quin: Responsibility for funding Boards of Visitors and the Secretariat will be transferred from the Home Office to the Prison Service with effect from 1 April. There are in practice no tangible business links between the work of Boards and the core Home Office and the transfer will enable Boards to be funded appropriately. This change will in no way affect the independence of Boards. Prior to reaching a decision the Government consulted the National Advisory Council for Boards of Visitors.

Asylum and Immigration

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to replace the current application forms for foreign nationals wishing to apply for leave to remain in the United Kingdom. [37342]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The current application forms expire on 14 April 1998. Revised versions of the seven existing forms have been prescribed. These will be valid until 14 October 1998. From today until 14 April 1998 applications may be made on either the newly prescribed forms or the existing versions. Only the newly prescribed versions may be used for applications made on or after 15 April 1998. The new forms will be available shortly from the Application Forms Unit on 0181 760 2233 and copies have been placed in the Library.

National Criminal Intelligence Service and National Crime Squad

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the arrangements for responding to parliamentary questions and correspondence from hon. Members relating to the work of the National Criminal Intelligence Service and the National Crime Squad following their establishment on 1 April. [37358]

Mr. Michael: The National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS), which is currently part of the Home Office, will be placed on an independent statutory footing on 1 April in accordance with Part I of the Police Act 1997. NCIS will continue to have a United Kingdom-wide remit. The National Crime Squad will be created on 1 April in accordance with Part II of the Police Act 1997 and will replace the six existing Regional Crime Squads in England and Wales. The accountability arrangements for both services are similar to those for police forces. Each will be maintained by a Service Authority performing the same role as a police authority for a police force.

NCIS and the National Crime Squad will both be under the direction and control of a Director General holding the rank of chief constable. In recognition of their operational independence, hon. Members should write to the Directors General if they have any questions or concerns about the operations or day to day management of NCIS or the National Crime Squad. The Director General of NCIS is Mr. John Abbott QPM NCIS, PO Box 8000, London SE11 5EN. The Director General of the National Crime Squad is Mr. Roy Penrose OBE QPM, National Crime Squad, PO Box 2500, London, SW1V 2WF.

The Service Authorities will be responsible for securing that NCIS and the National Crime Squad are efficient and effective. They will provide strategic direction and oversight, leaving the day to day management of NCIS and the National Crime Squad to the Directors General. Any questions about the role of the Service Authorities should be addressed to their Chairman, the right hon. Sir John Wheeler JP DL, PO Box 2600, London SW1V 2WG.

My right hon. Friend and I will answer Parliamentary Questions and Ministerial correspondence about NCIS and the National Crime Squad on the same basis as for police forces. We will, of course, deal ourselves with any questions about the exercise of the Secretary of State's powers or responsibilities in relation to the two services or wider policy issues. If such questions relate solely to the activities of NCIS in Scotland or Northern Ireland, it may be appropriate for the relevant Secretary of State to respond. Where other general information is sought, we shall provide it if available. We shall usually reply that questions about how the Service Authorities or the Directors General exercise their specific responsibilities are for those bodies or individuals to answer.

I will write to all hon. Members to set out these arrangements. A copy of my letter will be placed in the Library, together with copies of the first service plan for NCIS and the National Crime Squad.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the road traffic offences for which the police, or other agents, are entitled to levy spot fines; and what plans he has to extend this to other such offences. [37111]

Mr. Michael: There is no system of "spot" fines for road traffic offences in the United Kingdom, but the police (and, in some instances, their traffic wardens) may issue fixed penalty notices in respect of some offences. The recipient of a fixed penalty notice must pay the penalty (normally £20 or £40) within 28 days or request a court hearing if issue of the notice is disputed.

Section 51 of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 enables the Secretary of State to provide by order for existing offences to become fixed penalty offences for the purposes of the Act. Schedule 3 to the Act, as amended by two Fixed Penalty Offences Orders (Statutory Instrument 1990/335 and Statutory Instrument 1992/345), lists these offences. A copy of the Act and amending legislation is in the Library.

The Government plan to add the following road traffic offences to the fixed penalty system later this year:

(i) Overtaking a stationary/moving vehicle at a Pelican, Zebra or Puffin pedestrian crossing;

(ii) Having a registration mark fitted to a vehicle where the mark is not in accordance with statutory requirements relating to its size, shape and character;

(iii) Driving on the footway (pavement);

(iv) Pedal cycle—cycling on the footway (pavement); and

(v) Pedal cycle—carrying more than one person on a bicycle not constructed or adapted for that purpose.

In addition, regulations made last year under the Environment Act 1995, which apply within seven local authority areas, provide that local authority officers or other persons authorised by the authority, may issue fixed penalty notices to drivers whose vehicles fail to comply with vehicle exhaust emissions standards when checks are carried out at the roadside. The seven areas in question are:

Birmingham

Bristol

Canterbury

Glasgow

Middlesbrough

Swansea

Westminster.

The penalty is £60. These regulations also empower the same local authorities to issue fixed penalty notices (penalty £20) to drivers in circumstances where the engine of a stationary vehicle has not been stopped so as to avoid noise and exhaust emissions. Police officers are also empowered to issue fixed penalty notices for these offences.

Detention Centres

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the report of the Chief Inspector of Prisons relating to his unannounced visits to (a) Tinsley House in August 1997 and (b) Campsfield House in October 1997. [37122]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons relating to his planned, routine inspection of Tinsley House and his unannounced inspection of Campsfield House are in the process of being printed and we expect to be in a position to publish them in due course.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from (a) the Immigration Service and (b) the Chief Inspector of Prisons regarding (i) the content and (ii) the date of publication of the Chief Inspector of Prisons' report on Campsfield House Detention Centre. [37125]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Detailed responses to the report's recommendations have been prepared by the Immigration Service, after consultation with Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, and put to my right hon. Friend for consideration. He will make a statement in response to the report at the time of publication. The Chief Inspector of Prisons has made no representations to my right hon. Friend on the content or the date of publication of the report. However, a provisional timetable for publication is now in place.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the contract between Group 4 and the Immigration Service for the running of Campsfield House. [37121]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The contract between Group 4 and the Immigration Service is commercially confidential and it would not be proper to disclose all its details.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Immigration Service regarding (a) the content and (b) the date of publication of the Chief Inspector of Prisons' report on Tinsley House Detention Centre. [37123]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Detailed responses to the report's recommendations have been prepared by the Immigration Service, after consultation with Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons, and put to my right hon. Friend for consideration. He will make a statement in response to the report at the time of publication.

Firearms

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects claim ref. HER 10750 to be settled under the firearms compensation scheme. [36672]

Mr. Michael: The claim with the police reference number HER 10750 was received in the Firearms Compensation Section on 3 October 1997. As claims are being dealt with in date order, we would predict that the Option A and B elements are likely to be processed in around four weeks' time. The Option C elements, which will require individual consideration of the evidence of value provided, will be dealt with at a later date.

Police (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cases since 1980 of Metropolitan police officers applying to the industrial tribunal with claims of racial abuse or discrimination, giving the officer's rank, the dates of claim and of settlement or decision, the result, the award if any, the costs of the police, the costs of the claimant paid by the police, whether the officer was offered or accepted full reinstatement and whether the officer was reduced to half pay or no pay before the end of the case. [36731]

Mr. Michael: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, he tells me that there are currently 19 race tribunal actions outstanding on the part of 16 officers.

Private Security Industry

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulation applies to the private security industry. [37053]

Mr. Michael: No statutory regulation currently applies to the private security industry. We intend to introduce statutory regulation of the private security industry as soon as possible but we will not be able to bring forward early legislation, as we warned before the election. We have recently completed a consultation exercise with the industry and others on the best way to provide a comprehensive, effective and streamlined system for the whole of the private security industry. It is clear from the responses that there is general support for our approach from the industry itself as well as from other respondents and we hope to put forward firm proposals later this year. In the absence of statutory regulation, the industry has taken steps to regulate itself. Several independent Inspectorates exist, inspecting companies to relevant British Standards and the international quality standard BS EN ISO 9000.

Football Offences

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the bilateral agreements with Norway and the Republic of Ireland to allow domestic courts to impose restriction orders on those convicted of football offences abroad were agreed. [37075]

Mr. Michael: The Football Spectators (Corresponding Offences in Norway) Order 1996 (Statutory Instrument Number 1634) and the Football Spectators (Corresponding Offences in the Republic of Ireland) Order 1996 (Statutory Instrument Number 1635) both came into force on 1 August 1996.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the levels of punishment for crimes committed under the Football Offences Act 1991. [37074]

Mr. Michael: The Labour Charter for Football published in 1995 proposed that the threshold for the offence of indecent or racist chanting under section 3 of the Football (Offences) Act 1991 should be lowered to catch chanting by an individual as well as chanting in concert with one or more others. The Football Task Force Report entitled "Eliminating Racism From Football" has endorsed that proposal. We are awaiting a suitable legislative opportunity to introduce this amendment but would look for the practical recommendations contained in the Task Force Report as a way forward until such time as a suitable opportunity arises.

We are presently conducting a review of all football-related legislation to see whether any further changes should be made.

Murderers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted murderers placed under hospital orders under the terms of the Mental Health Act 1983 have been released under supervised discharge to the local authority area in which they resided prior to their conviction. [36223]

Ms Quin: The information is not available in the form requested, and such information as is centrally retained could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35111]

Dr. David Clark: For these purposes, my answer covers major events planned for April and May which will be paid for from the Cabinet Office's votes. This includes expenditure by the Prime Minister's Office, the Minister without Portfolio's Office as well as the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service. It is not possible to provide a comprehensive estimate for total expenditure on Ministerial hospitality as the majority of these events will not be finalised until nearer the time.

The Prime Minister is planning to host ten major events, ranging from informal receptions to formal dinners, half of which are related to the G8 Heads of Government meeting.

The Chancellor of the Duchy is planning to host one major event with EU Ministers.

The Minister without Portfolio and the Parliamentary Secretary have no plans to host major events during April and May.

In addition there are three other events connected with the G8 meeting, which will be hosted by other Ministers, but paid for by the Cabinet Office.

WALES

Rural Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to enhance and develop the roles of rural schools. [36683]

Mr. Hain: Enhancing and developing the role of schools is essentially a matter for local education authorities and school governing bodies. The White Paper—'Building Excellent Schools Together' sets out the Government's commitment to raise standards in every school in Wales and a programme of action to support local education authorities and governing bodies in achieving this.

The National Grid for Learning offers significant potential for improving support for schools in rural areas by providing 'on line' access to materials and services. The Welsh Office is currently working on the development of the Grid with LEAs and others.

Ensuring effective provision of school places while securing a more cost effective education service poses difficult decisions for local authorities given the particular role schools often occupy in rural communities. I have asked LEAs to consider innovative approaches such as federations, amalgamations or groupings as alternatives to school closure. Authorities in west Wales are already exploring this.

School Journeys

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average travel to school distance for children in rural Wales; and if he will make a statement. [37152]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is not available centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Torture Equipment

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the categories of equipment which are regarded as of potential use in torture whose export has been banned since 1 May 1997. [35938]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 24 March 1998]: In his announcement of 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 65–66, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary identified certain goods whose export the Government would not allow because there was clear evidence of their use in torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Export or transhipment of the majority of these goods is controlled by virtue of their being listed in entry PL5001 in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 (SI 1994/1191), as set out in Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No.2) Order 1996 (SI 1996/2663). Export or transhipment of the remainder was brought under control by article 7(8) of the Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No.3) Order 1997 (SI 1997/2758), which came into force on 15 December 1997.

Staff Travel

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total number of staff of all grades employed by the Department; and what percentage of these staff were eligible to claim a car mileage allowance on 31 March in each year since 1990. [36165]

Mrs. Roche: The total number of staff employed by the Department of Trade and Industry, inclusive of Agencies, as at 31 March in each of the years 1990–1997 is as follows:

Year	Number of staff
1990	11,802
1991	12,419
1992	12,301
1993	11,497
1994	10,737
1995	10,168
1996	9,727
1997	9,096

Potentially all staff employed as Civil Servants within the Department are eligible to claim car mileage allowance if they use their own vehicles to undertake official business. These figures have been extracted from payroll data.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total real term value of (a) staff car mileage claims paid and (b) staff rail fares paid; and what was the total amount of staff car mileage for which reimbursement was made and the percentage change year on year, for each year since 1989–90. [36164]

Mrs. Roche: The DTI has devolved to local management the authorisation of travel claims for its staff, subject to checking procedures. The DTI does not record expenditure on staff car mileage claims, or staff rail fares paid, separately from other travel and subsistence expenses paid to staff undertaking departmental business. To provide the information requested would entail disproportionate cost.

Shareholders Rights

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the relationship between independent auditing capacity and the protection of shareholders' rights. [36243]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The Companies Act 1985 requires all companies to lay before their shareholders in general meeting, and file for the public record, independently audited annual accounts and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has particular powers under the Companies Act 1989 to regulate auditors to ensure that the audit is carried out properly and with integrity and with a proper degree of independence. Labour's Business Manifesto sets out our commitment to ensuring a framework of independent regulation for the accountancy profession, including auditors. We are keeping under review the continuing debate about the appropriate balance of rights and obligations between the auditor, management and shareholders.

Commercial Debt Repayment

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what statistics her Department has collated on the payment record for commercial debt of Government departments and agencies, NHS trusts and local authorities; what steps are being taken to ensure that the Government's requirements regarding payment within 30 days, as set out in the annexe to the consultation paper, are being adhered to by them; and if payment performance is being monitored. [35439]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The Government are committed to changing the payment culture in the UK and recognise the importance of the public sector leading by example in paying its invoices promptly.

Government Departments and their Agencies are required to pay all valid invoices within agreed credit terms or 30 days. They are also required to monitor their payment performance and publish the percentage of invoices paid on time in their annual or departmental reports.

My hon. Friend the Paymaster General published the league table of Departments' payment performance for the period 1 June 1996 to 31 March 1997 (Cm 662). Additionally, the DTI will produce the next league table for Departments and their agencies for the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998. This will be available before the summer recess.

The payment performance of the NHS is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. The NHS Trusts are also required to pay valid invoices within agreed credit terms or 30 days. The NHS Executive monitors the payment performance of all NHS Trusts in England on a quarterly basis. The information collected is the percentage of the number of bills paid within this target and the percentage of the value of bills paid within this target. The NHS Executive plans to publish the payment performance of all NHS Trusts in England this summer for the period 1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998.

The payment performance of Local Authorities is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister. Local Authorities are also required to pay their bills promptly. The Audit Commission has set a performance indicator for the current year that all Local Authorities must monitor and publish details of the percentage of their bills paid on time.

Data relating to prompt payment performance in local authorities will be published by the Audit Commission, from March 1999, identifying local authority performance for the year 1997/98.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff are employed in Scotland by her Department, or executive agencies responsible to her Department; and where those staff are located. [36209]

Mrs. Beckett: On 1 January 1998 there were 261 permanent staff (full time equivalents) employed by my Department, the executive agencies and ACAS in Scotland. The staff were located as follows:

Aberdeen: 51

Dundee: 3

Edinburgh: 71

Falkirk: 12

Glasgow: 124.

EU Structural Funds

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, in negotiating the reform of the European Union's Structural Fund, she will ensure that Objective 5(B) is not subsumed in Objective 2. [36030]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Government welcome the principle of a single Objective 2 covering vulnerable rural, industrial, urban and fisheries areas. The risk of artificially distinguishing between types of area is that some are not considered at all. The Government will argue for flexibility for Member States to target Funds at areas of greatest need.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if a Director of Action 2000 has been appointed. [32486]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 3 March 1998]: The Chairman of Action 2000 has appointed Gwynneth Flower as Director of Action 2000.

Inward Investment

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the total amount of inward investment in the UK for each of the past 10 years and the figures for British investment overseas, separately identifying the figures to and from (a) EU and (b) other countries. [36314]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The information is in the following tables:

Net inward direct investment flows to the UK 1987–96

Dounreay

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if a decision has been reached regarding the future management of the Dounreay Shaft and Wet Silo; and if she will make a statement. [37449]

Mr. Battle: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's recommendation to me that the radioactive waste in the Dounreay Intermediate Level Waste Shaft and in the Wet Silo should be retrieved for treatment and storage has been accepted by the Government.

It is now clear that the Shaft does not provide standards of waste disposal that are acceptable today and that retrieval is the best practicable environmental option. It has the support of the relevant regulators, the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII) and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency (SEPA), and of the Government's advisory bodies, the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee and the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment. Special interest groups have also shown support of the retrieval option.

This decision has been taken following detailed engineering studies completed recently by the UKAEA, who operate the Dounreay site, which have shown that it is now technically feasible to recover waste from the Shaft in a safe and environmentally acceptable manner.

I have also accepted the UKAEA's recommendation that it is now time to plan for the removal and treatment of wastes stored in the Wet Silo.

Retrieval and treatment will provide a long term solution to the problem of what to do with the waste placed in the Shaft and Wet Silo over the last four decades which has caused such concern to the public.

The Government believe that nothing is more important than safety in the management of nuclear decommissioning and radioactive waste. We are fully committed to caring for the environment and to taking action to deal with the difficult legacies from the past.

I expect that the difficult task of retrieving this waste will be tackled effectively over the coming years and will demonstrate that the UK is taking a world lead when dealing with nuclear decommissioning and radioactive waste management challenges.

Naturally, in the early stages of such a large and complex project, there are significant uncertainties about the costs. The most recent estimates presented to me by the UKAEA suggest that total indicative costs may lie in the range £215-£355 million. These costs, which are already budgeted for, will be incurred over approximately the next 25 years and will be met from public funds. This includes the first stage of the work which will be for the UKAEA to develop its plans by completing hydrogeological and engineering studies aimed at minimising technical risk and refining predicted costs. They expect expenditure on this work will amount to about £4.5 million over the next five years. At each stage of the project the UKAEA's detailed plans will require approval from the NII and SEPA.

Trade Union Recognition

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many meetings she has had with the CBI concerning trades union recognition since 1 May 1997. [36834]

Mr. Ian McCartney: DTI Ministers have met the CBI on a number of occasions since 1 May. Trade union recognition has been amongst the issues discussed.

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many meetings her Department has had with the TUC to discuss trades union recognition since 1 May. [36833]

Mr. Ian McCartney: DTI Ministers have had a number of meetings with the TUC since 1 May at which various issues, including trade union recognition, have been discussed.

Radiocommunications Agency

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the (a) location of, (b) running costs of, (c) salary costs of and (d) number of staff based at the head office of the Radiocommunications Agency; what percentage of total staff are based (i) at head office (ii) in London and (iii) in Scotland; and what is the percentage of salary and running costs incurred in (A) Scotland and (B) London. [36137]

Mrs. Roche: (a) The Radiocommunications Agency's head office is located at New King's Beam House, 22 Upper Ground, London SE1 9SA. (b) For the 11 months to 28 February 1998, the running costs for head office were £8,514k. (c) For the same period, the salary costs were £8,613k. (d) The number of staff based at head office at 28 February was 295.

At 28 February 1998, (i) 57 per cent. of the Agency's staff were based at head office, (ii) 60 per cent. in London and, (iii) 2 per cent. in Scotland.

For the 11 months to 28 February 1998, (A) 1 per cent. of salary and running costs were incurred in Scotland and (B) 63 per cent. of salary and running costs were incurred in London.

Figures do not total to 100 per cent. as there are Agency Sites outside the stated areas.

International Technology Service

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the (a) locations, (b) running costs, (c) salary costs and (d) number of staff of the International Technology Service; and what percentage of staff are based in (i) London and (ii) Scotland. [36234]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The International Technology Service is managed by DTI Headquarters in Central London and will have estimated programme costs of £4M in the current financial year.

Total running costs for the current financial year are expected to be £405k of which salary costs will be £331.5k.

The Service is managed by ten full time equivalent DTI staff, all of whom are based in London.

Invest in Britain Bureau

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the (a) running costs, (b) staff costs and (c) locations of each of the UK-based offices of the Invest in Britain Bureau. [36237]

Mrs. Beckett [holding answer 27 March 1998]: For 1997/98 the gross running costs budget, net of VAT is £2,445,000 of which staff costs are £1,720,000. In addition, the pay costs of three posts are currently being funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. All Invest in Britain Bureau UK staff are based in London.

Outward Missions

Mr. Swinney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the outward missions organised by her Department in 1996–97 and the companies involved in each. [36187]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 26 March 1998]: A list of missions organised and supported under the Department's Outward Mission Scheme in 1996–97 together with the name and telephone number of the organiser will be placed in the Library of the House. Over 4,700 companies took part in 219 missions. The organisers can be contacted for details of the companies participating.

The Outward Mission Scheme is primarily aimed at providing practical and financial support to small to medium sized UK companies relatively new to the markets concerned to travel overseas as part of a group to promote UK exports of goods and services. Ministerial delegations and delegations led by senior officials are sometimes organised outside the scheme by the Department and other Government Departments where the nature of the event and status/experience of the companies would make financial support inappropriate. Details of ministerial missions organised by the Department since May 1997 were provided on 23 February 1998, Official Report, columns 106–07, in response to a question tabled by the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan).

Computer Systems

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list each major new computer system that (a) her Department, (b) non-departmental bodies and (c) agencies under her responsibility have purchased in the last five years; what was the initial purchase cost and what was the final cost; what was each system's (i) planned and (ii) actual date of commissioning; what major computer systems will be purchased by bodies in categories (a), (b) and (c) in the next financial year; and what is their estimated cost. [27849]

Mrs. Beckett: The information requested on major computer systems installed within the last 5 years is set out in the table. Major Computer Systems installed by the Department's next step Agencies, with the exception of the Insolvency Service and ETS, are not included, and I have asked them to respond direct to the hon. Member. The table also excludes privately financed projects where the installation/purchase costs of the IT systems will be recovered by suppliers through service charges.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown, dated 31 March 1998:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply directly to your Parliamentary Question about the purchase of computer systems.

For the purpose of this reply we have interpreted "major new computer systems" as those costing over £200,000. The information you requested, in respect of computer systems purchased by the Radiocommunications Agency in the last 5 years, is shown in the enclosed table.

Radiocommunications Agency Information on major new computer systems

Notes:

1. ALPACA is the Accounts, Ledgers, Purchasing and Cost Attribution System.
2. The data for ALPACA for actual cost and actual commissioning date are the latest forecasts.
3. The disparity between the planned and latest forecasts for ALPACA is the result of a major change in the scope of the project.
4. Outstations Networking was a turnkey project with ICL to install a Local Area Network between the Radiocommunications HQ, Baldock, Whyteleaf and the other Regional Offices.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown, dated 31 March 1998:

Letter from Dr. Seton Bennett to Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown, dated 31 March 1998:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about the purchase of major computer systems.

This Agency has not purchased any major computer system in the last five years and we have no plans for any major expenditure on systems during 1998/99.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Employee Share Schemes

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when changes in the Budget relating to employee share schemes will be reflected in National Insurance contribution rules. [37362]

Mr. Denham: We are proposing two changes to National Insurance contribution rules which will bring them closer to the income tax rules in relation to shares and share options. This will make for greater clarity for employers and help reduce the administrative burden the system places on them.

First, we intend to bring forward at Report stage in the House of Lords a new clause for inclusion in the Social Security Bill. That clause will change the National Insurance treatment of shares that are subject to the risk of forfeiture or that are convertible. The change will align the treatment of these shares under National Insurance legislation with the tax legislation announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget.

Alignment of National Insurance with the income tax rules will bring forward some important changes to make the National Insurance on shares and options easier for business to administer while guarding against their use in avoidance schemes.

The new clause will be tabled as soon as possible.

It will mirror the proposed income tax treatment of remuneration in shares subject to forfeiture or conversion. To keep to a minimum the period over which the tax and National Insurance positions differ, the clause will apply to shares awarded from the date on which it is tabled. We expect that to be before the end of the current Committee stage in the House of Lords.

The second change we propose is to match my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's extension of the "seven year rule" for share options when we align the National Insurance treatment of share options with the income tax position. Under the current income tax arrangements the award of an option over shares is taxed at the time of grant rather than exercise only where the options can be exercised more than seven years later. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has announced his intention to extend that limit to ten years. We intend to mirror this in future National Insurance legislation. When the relevant regulations made under clause 50 of the Social Security Bill come into force they will replace the National Insurance liability on grant of options with a liability on exercise, except in the case of options which can be exercised more than ten years later. This would take the great majority of options outside liability for National Insurance on grant, thus reducing the administrative burden on business while continuing to protect the Exchequer.

Inland Revenue approved own-company share schemes remain excluded from liability for National Insurance contributions.

Benefit Appeals

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the amount of money that will not be claimed as a result of the change in backdating benefits following a successful appeal; and if she will make a statement. [36088]

Mr. Denham: The backdating proposals in Clause 72 of the Social Security Bill will not affect arrears of benefit following a successful appeal on a claim for that benefit. The change affects only the period before a claim is made or treated as made. A claim for benefit will have been made before decisions on that claim can be appealed.

Pensioners

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the effect on (a) gross expenditure on retirement pensions, (b) income tax revenues and (c) expenditure on means-tested benefits of raising the basic state pension to the level of income support, with the pension rising with age to reflect the current structure of age-related premiums, but not to reflect premiums for disabilities or other additional needs. [34127]

Mr. Denham: It is estimated that the gross cost of raising the basic pension to the level of the income support age-related premiums would be £3.4 billion in 1998–99. Income tax revenue would be increased by an estimated £0.2 billion. Information on income related benefit offsets is not available.

Notes:

1. Gross costs have been provided by Government Actuary's Department (GAD). A pensioner with a category A pension receives an additional amount equal to the difference between RP and IS for a single person. A married woman with a category B pension receives an additional amount equal to the difference between RP and the additional amount paid to an IS couple above that paid to a single person.
2. Tax effects provided by Inland Revenue.
3. The Family Resources Survey does not hold sufficiently detailed information on categories of pension to allow a consistent estimate of income related benefit offsets to be provided.
4. Costs rounded to the nearest £100 million.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners were in receipt of payments from occupational pensions in 1995; and what was the average payment received. [34705]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 16 March 1998]: It is estimated that 4.9 million pensioner couples or single pensioners were in receipt of payments from occupational pensions in 1995–96, receiving average payments of £78.70 (mean) and £44.10 (median).

Notes:

1. This estimate is based on the Pensioners' Income Series. A pensioner couple is defined as a couple where the man is over State Pension Age.

2. In the Pensioners' Incomes Series estimates of the number of pensioner units in receipt of occupational pension income are based upon data from the Family Expenditure Survey which is adjusted to reflect extrapolations of the number of recipients in the Government Actuary's Department Survey of Occupational Pensions (1987 and 1991).

3. Incomes are in pounds per week at July 1995 prices, and are rounded to the nearest 10 pence.

4. Numbers are rounded to the nearest 0.05 million.

5. The Pensioners' Income Series 1995–96 is to be re-issued, as it contains a number of inaccuracies identified since publication. The figures above are not affected by these inaccuracies. However, other information concerning receipt of occupational pensions is affected.

Unclaimed Benefits

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate she has made of the value of unclaimed benefit since 1 May 1997; and if she will make a statement. [36104]

Mr. Field: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Estimated amounts of income related benefits unclaimed in 1995–96

£ million

Benefit	Estimated amount unclaimed
Housing Benefit	410–760
Council Tax Benefit	370–620
Income Support	1,210–1,870
Family Credit	300

Note:

Figures are only available for the main Income Related Benefits, and for 1995–96 at the latest.

Source:

Income Related Benefits Estimates of Take-Up in 1995–96.

Disability Benefit

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons disability benefit restored on appeal is not backdated to the time of the refusal of benefit; and if she will make a statement. [36087]

Mr. Denham: The fact that a decision is changed on appeal does not, necessarily, mean that the earlier decision was incorrect. A person's condition may have deteriorated since they made their appeal or they may produce fresh evidence to the tribunal. The date from which benefit is awarded will also be determined by the tribunal. For example, where an award is made because of a subsequent change in the person's circumstances, benefit will be paid from the date of the change rather than the date of the decision appealed against.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents will be (a) better off, (b) unaffected and (c) worse off in total as the overall result of the increases in child benefit and related benefits planned for November 1998 and April 1999, the proposed Working Families Tax Credit and the cuts in benefits for lone parents already announced; and what is the average gain of those who are better off and the average loss of those who are worse off. [35854]

Mr. Field [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The information is set out in the table.

	Better off	No change	Worse off
Number	1,470,000	255,000	60,000
Average gain/loss	6.30	0	−2

Notes:

1. Numbers rounded to the nearest 5,000.
2. Information from 1995–96 Family Resources Survey uprated to 1998–99 prices, earnings and benefit levels. Budget policy changes to Married Couples Allowance and National Insurance have been excluded.
3. Announced lone parent policy changes due to be implemented in April 1999 have been included in the 1998–99 benefit system at appropriate rates.
4. Lone Parent caseloads affected by the removal of entitlement to lone parent rates for new cases are adjusted to be consistent with forecasts for the end of the financial year 1998–99.

Students

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will amend the Social Security Benefits (Student Loans and Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations 1990 to enable students not in receipt of loans to be assessed on their income in order that they may be eligible for free dental and prescription services. [36434]

Mr. Field: Since 1990, the student loan has been an integral part of student support. Students are not obliged to take up a loan if they feel no need to do so. However as loans are made available from public funds they cannot be ignored in calculating entitlement to further help from public funds.

Students in receipt of a loan may still be entitled to free NHS dental treatment and prescriptions on low income grounds.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals she has to reduce the assumed interest on savings in respect of granting housing benefit. [36355]

Mr. Field: The formula for the calculation of assumed or notional income from capital does not represent any assumed rate of interest. It does, however, avoid the many practical difficulties that would arise if actual income were taken into account when assessing entitlement to Housing Benefit. It also strikes a balance between encouraging people to save and an expectation that people with more substantial savings can make some contribution towards their living expenses.

Asylum Seekers

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons given extended exceptional leave to remain were wrongly refused benefit in the last 12 months; and what was the cost of correcting such decisions. [36246]

Mr. Field: The information is not available. Following representations from asylum seeker and refugee organisations, revised guidance was issued to Benefits Agency staff in November 1997 which makes clear that where a claimant applies to the Home Office to extend their limited exceptional leave to remain before the period expires they will continue to be entitled to benefit pending the Home Office decision.

Benefits Agency (Training)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what training Benefits Agency staff receive in respect of the particular needs of disabled people. [35582]

Mr. Denham: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 30 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked my to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what training Benefits Agency (BA) staff receive in respect of the particular needs of disabled people.

The BA aims to ensure that all our customers have equal access to the benefits system, and that wherever possible, our services can accommodate their individual needs. BA staff that deal with customers are trained in dealing with people with disabilities. The BA recognises the need to develop appreciation of all equal opportunity issues, and as such, provides training in serving the needs of the community. It is our policy to work in partnership with organisations from the voluntary sector to identify areas where improvements could be made and to work together to make the necessary changes.

You may also be interested to note that the BA operates a dedicated telephone helpline to meet the special needs of people with disabilities. Staff on the Benefit Enquiry Line (BEL) provide advice and information about social security benefits and how to claim them. They can also provide help and assistance completing disability claim forms. In addition to the full range of social security benefits, the initial training for the operators includes extensive disability awareness. This is supported by ongoing workshops which concentrate on the individual needs of customers suffering from a wide range of disabilities. Most recently this has included awareness sessions on the problems encountered by people with Mental Health problems.

The Government is determined that disabled people should be dealt with properly and fairly; they should have sufficient information about what is required of them to allow them to provide the required level of information about the effect of their disability.

Each of our managers is responsible for providing training which will help staff to meet the needs of their customers. We actively encourage them to use the expertise and support available from organisations and the voluntary sector. To assist managers, we have provided them with information on the awareness programmes and services available from a range of organisations.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what reforms will be made to the distribution system for winter fuel payments for next year, to ensure that the £20 sum reaches those who qualify; [35297]

(2) how many single pensioners awarded a £10 Winter Fuel Payment have subsequently appealed and been granted a further £10, in (a) Glasgow, Pollok, (b) Glasgow, (c) Scotland and (d) in the United Kingdom; [35296]

(3) what steps are being taken to ensure that winter fuel payments for 1997–98 at £20 are reaching those single pensioners in tenement homes, where a single house number covers several separate households; and what monitoring her Department will undertake to ensure payments reach such pensioners. [35298]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel Payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help the vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. A total of £400 million has been committed for this winter and next, to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay. This is the first time any Government have provided additional help with heating costs to all pensioners receiving a retirement pension or one of a number of other qualifying benefits.

The making of this winter's payments has been an enormous and unprecedented exercise. In order to establish all eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to correlate data in around fifteen million computer records, involving fifteen qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Overall, almost ten million payments will have been made to over seven million pensioner households by the end of March.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Ian Davidson, dated 30 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions concerning winter fuel payments.

The making of almost ten million winter fuel payments to over seven million pensioner households before the end of March 1998 has been a challenging task for the Benefits Agency. In order to establish all eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to match around fifteen million computer records, involving fifteen qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. We expect that every eligible pensioner will have received a payment before the end of March 1998. This has been achieved whilst maintaining normal benefit business.

Planning for next winter's payments has already begun. Operational experience from the delivery of this winter's payments will be taken into account and changes will be made where considered necessary.

Around one and a half million of the poorest pensioners, those receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, received their payment during January. In order to determine whether each of the other eligible pensioners were entitled to a payment of £20 or £10 it was necessary to undertake an exercise of data correlation of all addresses held in Departmental records. Where only one eligible person was identified as living at an address a payment of £20 was made. Where more than one eligible person was identified as living at an address a payment of £10 was made.

Where official records showed that an address contained a number of separate households, for example numbered flats or bedsits, each separately identifiable unit was treated as a separate address for the purposes of determining the number of eligible pensioners in a household. Therefore, where only one common address was recorded for more than one eligible person, it was not possible to determine which, if any, lived in a household where there was no other eligible person. As a result, some eligible pensioners who live alone, but share a common address with other eligible persons, will have been sent a payment for £10 when they should have received £20.

The letter which accompanies the payment clearly explains the entitlement conditions and informs anyone who received a £10 payment, but satisfies the conditions for a £20 payment, to contact the Benefits Agency Office which deals with their pension, or telephone the Winter Fuel Helpline, to request the balance. Requests for a review of the original decision to pay £10 are being dealt with as a matter of priority, particularly in the case of tenement residents.

Adopting this approach aimed to ensure that all payments were made as quickly as possible and disproportionate administration costs were not incurred.

The information requested for Glasgow Pollok, Glasgow, Scotland and the United Kingdom is not currently available. This is due to the fact that those payments are still in the process of being issued. It is anticipated that this information will be available some time after the end of April. I will provide the information requested once it is available.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Rail Freight

8. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of increased levels of freight being transported by rail. [35448]

Mr. Prescott: Moving freight by rail helps the environment by reducing total road vehicle emissions and noise. It also improves road safety and relieves traffic congestion. We have already taken a number of initiatives to encourage railfreight. Others will be announced in the next few months.

Water Companies (Regulation)

9. Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures are being evaluated by his Department to improve the regulation of the water companies. [35450]

Mr. Meacher: The proposals on utility regulation set out in the Government's Green Paper "A fair deal for consumers" will apply to the regulation of the water industry. We will also publish shortly proposals for consultation on a new approach to water charging, and the Director General is continuing his periodic review of water price limits.

Local Government (Corporation Tax)

10. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the likely cost to local government pension funds in 1998–99 of the abolition of advance corporation tax credit. [35452]

Mr. Raynsford: The abolition of advance corporation tax credits is one of many factors to be taken into account as part of the actuarial valuation of the local authority pension funds which are about to begin. Information from the exercise will be available shortly.

15. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from local authorities over the abolition of the advance corporation tax credit. [35457]

Mr. Raynsford: Representations have been received from a number of individual local authorities as well as from the Local Government Association and the United Kingdom Steering Committee on Local Authority pensions.

Racing Pigeons

11. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the progress of the study being conducted of the threat to racing pigeons caused by predators. [35453]

Angela Eagle: There is little quantitative and qualitative data available about the causes and scale of loss of racing pigeons. To address this gap in knowledge, my Department let a research contract to the Hawk and Owl Trust to assess the impact of raptor predation on pigeons and to investigate the effectiveness of non-lethal deterrents. The research is progressing to an agreed timetable and the findings of this research should be reported by the end of September 1998.

Brown-field Development

12. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his current target for development of brown-field sites. [35454]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government expect local authorities to be able to raise the national proportion of new homes to be built on previously developed land, including conversions of existing buildings, to 60 per cent. over the next 10 years. We also expect the regional conferences of local authorities to bring forward regional recycling targets.

Water Efficiency

13. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy that local authorities in areas where there is a water shortage should, as a condition of planning permission, be able to insist that new homes are fitted with (a) grey water recycling systems and (b) other water-efficient devices. [35455]

Mr. Meacher: The new water regulations which we intend to make later this year will set demanding standards for water efficiency which will apply to all new homes.

Urban Sprawl

14. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he has taken to combat urban sprawl. [35456]

Mr. Caborn: The Government expect local authorities to be able to raise the national proportion of new homes to be built on previously developed land, including conversions of existing buildings, to 60 per cent. over the next 10 years. We also expect the regional conferences of local authorities to bring forward regional recycling targets. In addition, we have reaffirmed our commitment to national planning policies which discourage urban sprawl, such as those on Green Belts, the protection of the countryside, town centres and the pursuit of sustainable patterns of development.

"Opportunities for Change"

16. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the arrangements for consultation on "Opportunities for Change". [35458]

Mr. Meacher: The consultation document "Opportunities for Change" was launched on 4 February. There is also a separate public leaflet with a reply-paid response card. Both documents are available on the Internet. The Government have arranged a series of regional events across the country to publicise the consultation. All responses will be taken into consideration in the preparation of a new national sustainable development strategy, to be published later this year.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

17. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the channel tunnel rail link on regeneration in the Thames Gateway area. [35459]

Angela Eagle: When the previous Government decided to commit £1.8 billion, at current prices, of public subsidy, plus public assets, to the project, the worth of the regeneration benefit was estimated to be about £500 million.

Redevelopment Sites

18. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress on identifying derelict or unused urban sites suitable for redevelopment. [35460]

Mr. Caborn: We are setting up a National Land-use Database which will, for the first time, produce a comprehensive national assessment of the amount of previously-developed land available for re-use. Initial results should be available by January 1999. In addition, many local authorities are currently undertaking housing land capability studies to inform their development plans.

Local Government Finance

19. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from authorities in the shires on local government finance in 1998–99. [35461]

Ms Armstrong: The Department received 184 written representations from shire counties and districts within the deadline for responses. I, and other Ministers at the Department, also met 21 delegations from the shire counties and 35 from the shire districts during the consultation period.

22. Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the local authorities in England which have received an increase in standard spending assessment of 13 per cent. or more in 1998–99. [35465]

Ms Armstrong: Three English local authorities received increases in SSA of 13 per cent. or more. They were Easington, Wear Valley, and Sedgefield.

Wildlife and Countryside Act

20. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had on the revision of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. [35462]

Angela Eagle: We are currently having a series of discussions with a range of interested organisations on the need to revise parts of the Wildlife and Countryside Act.

New Housing

21. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will adopt a target of two thirds of new housing development being on brown-field sites. [35464]

Mr. Raynsford: No.

Emissions Reduction

23. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to implement the United Kingdom's Kyoto commitments on emissions. [35466]

Mr. Meacher: Under the United Kingdom Presidency, we will be considering at the meeting of the Environment Council in June how to share out between Member States the legally binding 8 per cent. target agreed by the European Union at Kyoto. We then intend to consult on a programme of measures which will largely focus on delivering our legally binding commitment from Kyoto as well as considering how we might move towards our 20 per cent. aim. We will be looking at the scope for savings from improved energy efficiency by business and in the home; lower transport emissions; and an increase in the electricity generated from renewables and combined heat and power.

Amazonian Parrot

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's policy under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species in respect of the listing of the Amazonian parrot. [35468]

Angela Eagle: Of the 31 species of Amazonian parrot, 13 are listed on Appendix I of CITES and Annex A of the European Regulation governing trade in Member States. This means that international trade in wild specimens of these species is effectively banned. The remaining 18 species are listed on CITES Appendix II and Annex B of the implementing EU Regulation, which means that trade in these is licensed and closely monitored to ensure that it remains below levels at which the species might become endangered.

International trade controls are essential for the survival of many threatened species. The Government fully support the listing on CITES of any species threatened with extinction, and rigorous enforcement of the controls in both range and consumer states.

Leasehold Reform

25. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reform leasehold tenure. [35469]

Mr. Raynsford: We are not satisfied with the current state of leasehold law and intend to bring forward a new package of reforms to assist leaseholders. We are currently considering the scope and practicability of possible new measures and will be consulting interested parties later this year.

West Coast Main Line

33. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) of 5 March 1998, Official Report, column 699, when he next plans to meet the franchising director to discuss levels of investment on the west coast main line. [35478]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have regular meetings with the Franchising Director to discuss a variety of passenger railway issues. I have no current plans to discuss the West Coast Main Line with him.

Trunk Road Scheme Review

34. Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the methodology of his review of major trunk road schemes. [35479]

Dr. Strang: We are developing a New Appraisal Framework to assist our examination of options for tackling problems on the road network against five criteria—integration, accessibility, safety, economy and environmental impact. We intend to publish further details with the report of the Roads Review later this year.

Public Transport

35. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the percentage of journeys made using public transport. [35480]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As we have made clear from the outset, this Government are committed to developing a sustainable transport policy. Reducing dependence on the car and promoting greater use of more attractive public transport, and safer walking and cycling, will be central themes in the Integrated Transport White Paper which we will publish later in the Spring.

36. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received on rural public transport services. [35481]

Dr. Strang: We have received numerous written representations in response to our consultation on developing an integrated transport strategy. Ministers and officials from my Department have also met a wide range of organisations representing rural interests to discuss the best way to improve transport services in rural areas.

42. Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase public transport provision in rural areas. [35487]

Dr. Strang: Our election Manifesto included a commitment to protect transport services in rural areas. As evidence of that commitment, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced an additional £50 million a year to support public transport in rural areas in his Budget statement of 17 March.

Railway Services

37. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to make railway service providers more accountable to the public. [35482]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We are committed to creating a new Rail Authority, to introducing more effective and accountable regulation, and to ensuring that the public subsidy serves the public interest. Our proposals will be published in our forthcoming White Paper on integrated transport policy.

Cleaner Buses and Lorries

38. Miss Melanie Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he proposes to encourage investment in cleaner buses and lorries. [35483]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Chancellor announced at the last budget that the graduated VED scheme for buses and lorries of an incentive of up to £500 for those vehicles meeting stringent emissions standards would begin on 1 January 1999. He also announced the creation of a greater duty differential between ordinary diesel and ultra low sulphur diesel, providing a greater incentive for operators to use this cleaner fuel, and that the Government will consult on how bus fuel rebate can better be targeted to help operators who run cleaner vehicles.

Mobile Phones

39. Miss Begg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the use of mobile phones while driving. [35484]

Dr. Strang: On 16 March 1998, my noble Friend the Minister for Roads announced the launch of a publicity campaign to make clear to motorists the dangers of using hand-held mobile phones while driving.

Rural Traffic Management

40. Mrs. McGuire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on best practice in rural traffic management. [35485]

Dr. Strang: My Department is participating in the Countryside Commission's Countryside Traffic Measures Group, the aim of which is to research and develop good practice guidance on rural traffic management designed with sensitivity to the countryside environment. The Department has commissioned the Transport Research Laboratory to monitor six demonstration schemes being implemented by local authorities who are part of the group; A591 safe cycling zone in Cumbria; Dartmoor signing audit in Devon; Brockenhurst village calming in Hampshire; A149 village calming in Norfolk; Occold 20 mph zone in Suffolk; and Dorking box traffic management in Surrey.

London Transport

41. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his projected timetable for (a) changes to the structure of London Transport and (b) funding increases for London Transport. [35486]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State announced the Government's plans for a London Underground public-private partnership on 20 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1539–42, and for the Greater London Authority on 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 501. Over the next two years, London Transport will be restructured to prepare for its future role. London Underground will remain a single entity in the public sector and will award one, two or three contracts for the maintenance and modernisation of its infrastructure. During this period, London Transport will receive additional funding of £365 million for increased investment and preparing the public private partnership.

45. Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he plans to attract adequate private capital to London Underground. [35490]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Secretary of State announced the Government's plans for a public-private partnership for London Underground on 20 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1539–42. Under these plans, operation will remain in a single, public-sector London Underground. London Underground will award one, two or three contracts for the maintenance and modernisation of its infrastructure, under which the private sector will source the capital needed to achieve a modern Underground for London.

Vehicle Emissions

43. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of vehicle emissions were accounted for by public transport in the latest period for which figures are available. [35488]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Provisional figures from the National Environmental Technology Centre suggest that in 1996, emissions from buses and coaches accounted for 9.5 per cent. of the total emissions of PM_{10} from road transport in the United Kingdom, 6.5 per cent. of the emissions of nitrogen oxides, 1.7 per cent. of the emissions of non-methane volatile organic compounds, 1.8 per cent. of the emissions of carbon monoxide and 4.6 per cent. of the emissions of carbon dioxide.

Drug-driving

44. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of medicinal drugs that seriously impair drivers' abilities were detectable in his Department's recent drug-driving test. [35489]

Dr. Strang: The Department's recent study was capable of detecting at least 75 per cent. of such drugs.

Road Capacity

46. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research he has commissioned into the effects on traffic volumes of reducing road capacity. [35491]

Dr. Strang: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, jointly with London Transport, considered the effect on road traffic volumes of roads which happened to be closed or have their capacity restricted. The study examined:

1) how traffic models of such capacity restrictions ought to be developed and

2) 60 or so cases where closures and restrictions happened—sometimes unexpectedly.

The results of both aspects of that study were published on 11 March in separate reports and a summary report entitled "Traffic Impact of Highway Capacity Reductions" is also available. A copy of the summary report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Workington Bypass

47. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to announce his proposals for a bypass at Workington. [35492]

Dr. Strang: We have no plans for such a by-pass.

Passenger Transport Authorities

48. Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to extend the principle of passenger transport authorities into the rural areas. [35493]

Dr. Strang: The institutions required for delivering an integrated transport policy are being considered carefully and we shall be setting out our policies on this, and our proposals for transport in rural areas, in the forthcoming White Paper.

River Transport (Thames)

49. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for improving river transport on the Thames; and if he will make a statement. [35494]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In July last year, the Deputy Prime Minister launched his Thames 2000 initiative to use the Millennium celebrations at Greenwich as the catalyst to revitalise passenger services on the Thames. Since then there have been three key developments.

London Transport has formed a new subsidiary—London River Services Ltd.—to own and manage key piers on the Thames and license passenger services. This will further the integration of river transport into London's transport system.

On 16 March, the Deputy Prime Minister announced the outcome of a tendering exercise to provide river services to the Millennium Experience, and continuing legacy services thereafter linking a large number of Central London piers. Operators of new services have committed up to £6 million investment in new vessels.

At the same time, he announced the award by the Millennium Commission of a grant of £6.8 million to help fund the building of new piers and the refurbishment of others. In total £15 million will be spent on building new piers at Waterloo and Blackfriars and refurbishing piers at Westminster and Tower.

In total, these developments represent new investment of some £21 million in transport on the Thames.

A3, Hindhead

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) accidents and (b) fatalities occurred on the Hindhead stretch of the A3 last year. [36578]

Ms Glenda Jackson: 1997 injury road accident data will not be available until the end of May 1998. The 1996 data are shown in the following table.

Number of accidents/casualties on the Hindhead stretch of the A3: 1996

Number

Severity	Accident	Casualties
Serious	5	5
Slight	16	28
All	21	33

MV Derbyshire

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the video relating to the second survey on the wreck of the MV Derbyshire. [36832]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I am arranging for copies of the video to be placed in the Library of the House. The Assessors' Report was published on 12 March and copies are available in the Library of the House.

Transport (Wales)

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much of the £500 million in the Budget for extra investment in transport will be allocated to Wales. [36750]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The £500 million transport package is over two years and includes a £50 million boost each year for rural bus services and community based transport initiatives. The extra provision for rural and community based travel has been split by the usual Barnett formula, giving £2.5 million for Wales in 1998–99. The split for 1999–2000 has yet to be decided.

Members (Meetings)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his Department's guidelines are in respect of time scales for responding to requests for meetings from hon. Members. [36753]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Ministers receive a large number of requests for meetings from Members and many others. Such requests are considered as quickly as practicable, taking into account the need to consult other departments and agencies and the pressures on ministers' diaries.

Trunk Road Provision

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the relative importance accorded to the needs of motorists in reaching decisions about future motorway and trunk road provision has changed since 1 May 1997. [37219]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our forthcoming Integrated Transport White Paper and the results of the Roads Review will set out clearly our overall approach and policies for the motorway and trunk road network, in support of our objective of achieving more sustainable transport patterns.

Housing Associations

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he has to influence the level at which housing associations set their rents; and if he will make a statement. [37173]

Mr. Raynsford: Under Section 36 (3) of the Housing Act 1996, draft guidance prepared by the Housing Corporation on the management of housing accommodation by registered social landlords has to be approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions before being issued by the Corporation. Under Section 36(2) of the Act, the guidance may include the principles upon which rents should be determined.

Following consultation, my right hon. Friend approved management guidance issued by the Housing Corporation in December 1997, which included guidance on rents and service charges. This advises registered social landlords that they should endeavour to charge rents that are below equivalent market rent levels, are affordable to those in low paid employment and that do not increase each year by more than the guideline limit of the increase in the Retail Price Index plus 1%.

Housing Renovation

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to encourage local authorities to support the renovation of buildings for housing in inner cities; and if he will make a statement. [35445]

Mr. Raynsford: Our Capital Receipts Initiative has already provided local authorities with an additional £174 million for capital spending on housing and housing related regeneration in 1997–98, and will provide an extra £569 million in 1998–99. Local authorities can choose how best to apply the resources to meet local priorities.

South Yorkshire Super Tram

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the sums required to be raised by the four

South Yorkshire authorities in the year 1998–99 as a result of the debts accumulated by South Yorkshire Super Tram. [35449]

Mr. Raynsford: The increase in South Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority's levy in 1998–99 to the four South Yorkshire districts as a result of Supertram debt was £7 million.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority to publish its annual report for 1996–97. [37296]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Channel Tunnel Safety Authority has today published its ninth Annual Report covering the period from 1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change the way in which statutory joint waste disposal authorities are funded currently. [37356]

Angela Eagle: I am concerned about current funding arrangements for statutory Joint Waste Disposal Authorities (JWDAs). At the moment, the constituent authorities share the costs according to their shares of the Council Tax base. This system does not reflect the service each authority draws from the JWDA and provides little encouragement for waste minimisation or other sustainable methods of waste management. The JWDAs have also expressed similar concerns to me.

Under a tonnage-based system, authorities' contributions would be apportioned on the basis of the amount of waste they had delivered for disposal in a preceding period. The more successful they are in minimising waste and diverting it to other forms of sustainable waste management such as recycling and composting, the less they would deliver for disposal and the less they would pay. This will form one more element in our policy to encourage waste management options higher up the waste hierarchy.

I have therefore requested officials in my department to work out methods for a tonnage-based system and to discuss them with the local authority associations.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits for 1997–98. [37357]

Mr. Prescott: My Department's non-voted and voted cash limits will change as follows.

(i) the DETR/NT (New Towns) non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £2,278,000 from minus £110,000,000 to minus £112,278,000. This reduction reflects a technical transfer to the DETR/OES (Other Environmental Services) non-voted cash limit which will consequently be increased by £2,278,000 from £20,792,000 to £23,070,000 to provide for Supplementary Credit Approvals (SCAs) to local authorities to cover their capital contributions to the Commission for the New Towns under road cost sharing arrangements;

(ii) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 4 (Local government and planning, England), covering Sections A to F of that vote, will be reduced by £1,250,000 from £30,987,634,000 to £30,986,384,000. This decrease is the result of reductions in the expenses of Valuation Tribunals in Section A (Valuation services); and reduced expenditure on publicity relating to planning programmes, on the EC Spatial Planning Initiative and on the planning and minerals research programme in Section D. This decrease will be used to offset an increase of the same amount from £157,000,000 to £158,250,000 on the DETR/LGR (Local government reorganisation) non-voted cash limit to meet the greater than forecast demand for Transitional Costs of Reorganisation Supplementary Credit Approvals (SCAs);

(iii) the cash limit for Class VI, Vote 1 (Housing and construction, England) will be reduced by £2,500,000 from £542,186,000 to £539,686,000 reflecting a reduction in provision for current expenditure by the Rent Officer Service and on the Rough Sleepers' Initiative. Of this, £1,000,000 will be used to offset an increase in the non-voted cash limit DETR/HC from £719,907,000 to £720,907,000 to provide for capital expenditure on the Rough Sleepers' Initiative; and

(iv) the cash limit for Class V, Vote 2 (Department of Transport: administration and transport services) will be reduced by £3,400,000 from £161,701,000 to £158,301,000 arising from reduced expenditure on aviation services and freight grants. The cash limit for Class V, Vote 7 (Passenger rail services) will be reduced by £4,600,000 from £1,444,293,000 to £1,439,693,000 reflecting reduced expenditure on consultants and a reduction in the payments to the train companies as a result of their worse than expected performance. These reductions, totalling £8,000,000, will be used to provide a Public Expenditure offset on Class V, Vote 3 (Transport Industries) to cover a shortfall in Trans European Network receipts.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

University for Industry

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement about his plans for the development of the University for Industry. [37263]

Mr. Blunkett: I have placed in the Library and the Vote Office copies of the University for Industry Pathfinder Prospectus which is published today.

The University for Industry is at the heart of the Government's vision for lifelong learning as set out in our Green Paper, The Learning Age. It will lead the revolution in learning and achievement which this country needs.

The Pathfinder Prospectus describes what the University for Industry will do, how it will operate and how it will develop for launch by the year 2000. It invites organisations in the public, private and voluntary sectors to consider how the University for Industry could support their learning strategies, and how they might contribute to its development and implementation.

I have appointed today a Chairman, Lord Sainsbury, to take forward the further development of the University for Industry until permanent structures are in place. We have advertised today in the national press the permanent post of University for Industry Chief Executive.

Remploy

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what targets Remploy has been set in its 1998–99 Annual Performance Agreement. [37448]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have, on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, written to the Chairman of Remploy approving the 1998–99 Annual Performance Agreement between the Department and the Company. This agreement covers the year from 1 April 1998. It has been negotiated by the Chief Executive of the Employment Service on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The targets are:

- the average number of disabled people employed by Remploy Ltd. will be at least 10,050;
- the average number of disabled people employed under the Interwork scheme will be at least 3,350;
- at least 250 disabled employees will move from Remploy factories to Interwork, having been employed there for at least 1 year, or from Interwork or factories to open employment;
- Remploy Ltd. will keep within a total unit cost target (operating deficit per disabled worker) of £9,700;
- the unit cost of Interwork should be no more than £4,300;
- Remploy limited will keep within an operating deficit of £99m (including reorganisation costs).

I have today arranged for the text of the Annual Performance Agreement to be placed in the Library.

Standard Assessment Tests

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what percentage of 11 year old (a) male, (b) female and (c) male and female pupils in maintained schools in each local education authority attained (i) Level 3 or better, (ii) Level 4 or better and (iii) Level 5 or better, in the 1997 Key Stage 2 tests in the (1) writing, (2) reading and (3) combined test for English; and what was the average level per pupil; [35353]

(2) for each local education authority what percentage of 11 year old pupils in maintained schools were entered for the 1997 Key Stage 2 SAT tests in (a) writing, (b) reading and (c) both for English but were absent. [35354]

Ms Estelle Morris: Pursuant to my reply of 27 March 1998, Official Report, column 324, further information is contained in a number of tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Employees

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff are employed in Scotland by his Department, or executive agencies responsible to his Department; and where those staff are located. [36212]

Mr. Morley: Core-MAFF currently has 84 staff based at 14 different locations in Scotland. The locations are Ayr, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Elgin, Forfar, Galashiels, Hamilton, Inverness, Inverurie, Kirkwall, Oban, Perth, Stranraer and Thurso.

The Meat Hygiene Service and the Veterinary Laboratories Agency also employ staff in Scotland, and I have asked their Chief Executives to reply to my hon. Friend.

The Farming and Rural Conservation Agency, The Centre for Environment, Fisheries & Aquaculture Science, Central Science Laboratory, Veterinary Medicines Directorate and the Pesticides Safety Directorate do not employ any staff in Scotland.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 31 March 1998:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS), your question to the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food enquiring about the number and location of staff employed in Scotland, has been passed to me for reply with regard to this Executive Agency.

The MHS is responsible for enforcing meat hygiene, inspection and animal welfare at slaughter legislation in licensed fresh meat premises in Great Britain. The MHS employs a total of 250 staff in Scotland. The majority of these staff are Official Veterinary Surgeons and Meat Hygiene Inspectors who are based at licensed premises in Scotland. A small team of managerial and administrative staff manage operations from the MHS Scotland Regional Office, which is based in Edinburgh.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 31 March 1998:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on how many VLA staff are employed in Scotland.

There are 25 staff employed at the VLA Lasswade Laboratory, near Edinburgh, Scotland.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department has spent on developing vaccines to prevent bovine tuberculosis since 1985; and how much investment is planned for each of the next five years. [36433]

Mr. Rooker: Work on the development of a vaccine to prevent bovine tuberculosis in badgers began in 1994. £1.5 million has been spent on this work to date. Research relating to the control of bovine tuberculosis is under review, following the publication of the Krebs Report.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many badgers were trapped under his Department's tuberculosis control scheme in each year since 1985 by (a) snares and (b) cage traps; and if he will indicate the number of animals which suffered injuries in (a) and (b). [36432]

Mr. Rooker: The table indicates the number of badgers snared and trapped in Great Britain under the bovine tuberculosis scheme each year since 1985. There was a change of policy in 1986, following the recommendations of the Dunnet report. Snaring was not used in the years asterisked, and has not been used since February 1997.

Year	(a) badgers snared	(b) badgers trapped
1985	24	1,095
1986	12	770
1987	*0	711
1988	3	775
1989	1	726
1990	5	806
1991	*0	993
1992	*0	1,054
1993	*0	1,094

Year	(a) badgers snared	(b) badgers trapped
1994	*0	1,683
1995	*0	1,509
1996	1	1,910
1997	1	2,445

One badger has died in a Ministry-set trap. Information on injuries sustained by trapped badgers is not regularly recorded. However, studies conducted by the Ministry's Wildlife Unit in 1990 and 1992 showed that about one quarter of badgers caught in Ministry-set traps had abrasions or other minor injuries.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if legal ownership rights are conferred in perpetuity where British shares of EU fishing quotas are transferred for cash payments. [36770]

Mr. Morley: The UK undertakes exchanges of quota on an annual basis with other Member States with the agreement of the European Commission. Such exchanges do not affect the underlying share of EU quotas which are fixed by Council Regulations.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the green transport plan; [36645]

(2) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36671]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a 'Guide to Green Transport Plans'. The Department has started to look at preparing green transport plans for key headquarters buildings and has appointed a green transport co-ordinator.

Cereal Feed

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provision is made for separating organic and genetically modified cereal feed in imports; and if he will make a statement. [37102]

Mr. Rooker: Where imports of cereal feed contain a mixture of organic and genetically modified produce, separation is not possible. Equally, the rules of the World Trade Organisation constrain our ability to require segregation at source. However, a number of companies are seeking to import identity preserved cereals to overcome these difficulties. The Department has recently published a list of suppliers of non-genetically modified soya to help those who wish to purchase such material.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assumption his Department is making in developing its financial projections of the proportion of Norwich scientific staff of the Central Science Laboratory who will relocate to York if the Norwich site is closed. [35955]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Only staff in mobile grades would be expected to transfer in the event of a decision to relocate at York.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons Central Science Laboratory employees have an average 16 square metres of office and laboratory floor area at Colney Lane, Norwich, and 35 square metres at Sand Hutton, York. [35403]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 20 March 1998]: As I explained to my hon. Friend on 11 March 1998, Official Report, columns 255–56, the difference in area per employee is due largely to the laboratory at York being designed to accommodate approximately 400 fee-earning scientists and support staff, but presently only being occupied by 300 fee-earning scientists and support staff.

In addition, the new laboratory at York was constructed in accordance with the latest health and safety requirements and scientists have therefore been provided with separate offices in which to write up the results of their work. Separate writing up space is not available at the Norwich laboratory as this was not a prevailing health and safety requirement at the time of construction.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the facilities at the Central Science Laboratory at Sand Hutton, York, for which his Department pays directly; and if he will specify the costs or projected costs in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and 1998–99. [37113]

Mr. Rooker: The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) is required to recover its full costs through charges to customers, including those facilities specifically made available for use by the Department. The facilities in question are containment glasshouses, plant health quarantine facilities, constant temperature humidity rooms, controlled environment unit and storage facilities. Associated charges, representing the full cost of operating these facilities, are accounted for against projects at the year end and included in the audited CSL Annual Report and Accounts.

Income received from the Department in respect of these facilities is as follows:

1996–97 £0.4 million

1997–98 £1.6 million

1998–99 £5.0 million.

The facilities were not available for the full 1996–97 year and the Department therefore paid proportionate costs only. Projected income for 1998–99 includes both running costs and the capital charge, which is payable from 1 April 1998.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the financial transfers between his Department and the Central Science Laboratory for each of the years since the Agency was founded and those projected for 1997–98 and 1998–99. [37112]

Mr. Rooker: The Central Science Laboratory (CSL) was launched as an Executive Agency of MAFF in April 1992. Details of the financial transactions between the Department and the CSL since its launch and up until 31 March 1997 can be found within the CSL Annual Reports and Accounts, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

The CSL expects to receive £22.2 million income from the Department in 1997–98 and £28.1 million, including an element for the capital charge, in 1998–99.

A complete list of financial transactions involved could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what length of continued employment would be guaranteed to scientists employed by the Central Science Laboratory relocated from Norwich to York; and by whom this guarantee would be offered and funded. [37110]

Mr. Rooker: In relation to the previous relocation of permanent staff from MAFF headquarters units and the various Central Science Laboratory (CSL) sites to the York area, assurance of security of employment for a period has been provided in order to give staff the confidence to relocate with their families to York.

In the event of the relocation of the CSL Norwich laboratory to the new CSL site at York, I would, of course, give consideration as to whether similar terms should be offered. Any such guarantee would be the responsibility of the Department.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the capital charge payable by the Central Science Laboratory on the laboratories at (a) Sand Hutton, York and (b) Colney Lane, Norwich, for the years (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) 2000–2001. [37127]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him on 25 March 1998, Official Report, column 186, in respect of the capital charge for the Sand Hutton, York laboratory. The capital charge for the Norwich laboratory is anticipated to be £780,000 for each of the three years 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2001–2002.

Capital charge valuations are subject to periodic review by an independent valuer.

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the scientists employed by the Central Science Laboratory at Torry, Aberdeen in January 1995 were still employed by the CSL, at York, in January 1998. [35959]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 24 March 1998]: The closure of the Torry laboratory resulted from the significant financial loss being incurred by the laboratory. On closure, funding for work of particular relevance to Scotland was transferred to the Scottish Office and work programmes and associated staff were transferred to the Rowett Research Institute, Aberdeen University and the Scottish Office Marine Laboratory. 10 staff, 7 of whom were scientists, transferred to the Central Science Laboratory at York and all were still employed there in January 1998.

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the occasions since 1 May when he, his colleagues, or officials, have (a) met and (b) received representations from (i) Monsanto and (ii) Zeneca; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of each meeting. [36879]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Neither I nor my colleagues have met either of these two companies since 1 May. However, officials met or received representations from them on the following occasions

(i) Monsanto

Date	Reason	Outcome
16 May 1997	Meeting to discuss an application under EC Novel Foods Regulation	Agreement to submit an application
18 June 1997 9 July 1997 19 August 1997	Meetings to discuss matters relation of pesticides	Improved understanding of requirements

In addition, 2 officials had a short placement with Zeneca in the Autumn of 1997.

Vitamin B6

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the US Government's public health policy regarding the daily usage of vitamin B6. [36457]

Mr. Rooker: The basis of the US Government's estimate of the vitamin B6 requirement of healthy adults is 16 micrograms per gram of protein per day. This is virtually identical to the 15 micrograms per gram of protein per day that is the basis of the estimate for healthy adults in the UK. We are not aware of any US Government public health policy on the desirability of intakes above this level.

There are no specific statutory limits in the US on the level of vitamin B6 in dietary supplements sold under food law. However, US legislation appears to allow less scope for the introduction of such limits on a precautionary basis. In this respect, it would seem to afford less protection to consumers than UK legislation.

HEALTH

Residential Care Homes

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on future levels of regulatory fees for residential care homes and nursing homes. [37354]

Mr. Boateng: The Department received 189 replies to the consultation document on increasing regulatory fees for residential care homes and nursing homes issued on 19 January. 106 respondents agree that fees should be increased, although many of these felt that the proposed increases were insufficient. Of the other respondents 80 felt the proposed increases were excessive and the remaining 3 did not express an opinion about the level of increases.

Having considered the responses carefully, I have decided that fees should be increased as proposed in the consultation document with effect from 1 May 1998. I will be laying the necessary regulations before Parliament to bring these increases into effect.

Private Health Work

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the number of private beds and (b) the proportion of private beds to all beds for each NHS trust each year since 1990. [37109]

Mr. Milburn: This information has never been collected from National Health Service trusts. It was last collected from district health authorities and special health authorities in 1990/91 when there were 2,956 authorised private beds. In the same year the average daily number of available beds in wards open night and day (ie 24 hours) was 255,479.

National Health Service Centre for Coding and Classification

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 March 1998, Official Report, column 136, on what date his Department regularised the extra-statutory payments position as regards the NHS Centre for Coding and Classification; if the procedure required separate action with respect to Leicestershire Health Authority and the former Trent Regional Health Authority; and if he will place a copy of the documentation in the Library. [37230]

Mr. Milburn: The payments were formally regularised on 11 March 1998. Documentation consists of a note on the official file. No recovery action is required, but Leicestershire Health Authority may, after consultation with its appointed auditor, include an appropriate note in its next set of annual accounts.

Correspondence

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlay the length of time taken to answer the letter of 20 January from the hon. Member for Montgomeryshire relating to the NHS provision of needles for insulin injection pen systems. [36342]

Ms Jowell: The Department aims to answer all correspondence within twenty working days of receipt but unfortunately, due to the volume of correspondence, delays can occur. I apologise for the delay in responding to the hon. Member's letter.

Public Bodies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish (a) the number of places on each of his Department's non-departmental public bodies, (b) the number of places that are currently unfilled on each non-departmental public body, (c) the total number of members that have resigned since 1 May 1997, (d) the total number that have retired since 1 May 1997, (e) the total number that have not had their contracts renewed since 1 May 1997, (f) the total number that have remained in place since 1 May 1997 and (g) the total number that have been appointed since 1 May 1997. [35285]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 19 March 1998]: There are 744 places on the Department's non-departmental public bodies of which 36 are currently unfilled. 11 members have resigned since 1 May 1997; 23 members have retired; the appointments of 43 members have expired and not been renewed; 603 members have remained in place; and 73 have been appointed.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan; [36653]

(2) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36663]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". The Department has started work on preparing green transport plans for key headquarters buildings.

Smoking

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of his Department's budget for 1998–99 is dedicated to reduction in the number of smokers. [34352]

Ms Jowell: The Department's budget for centrally funded health promotion activity in 1998–99 is £39.9 million. £6.5 million (or 16.29 per cent.) of it will be spent on anti-smoking health education programmes.

Hospitality

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list planned expenditure on hospitality for April and May, indicating the date, location and purpose of each event. [35124]

Ms Jowell: There are no large events planned for April and May. It is not, however, possible to provide a comprehensive estimate for total expenditure on Ministerial hospitality as the majority of events and meetings will not be finalised until nearer the time.

Staff Travel Expenses

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total real term value of (a) staff car mileage claims paid and (b) staff rail fares paid; and what was the total amount of staff car mileage for which reimbursement was made and the percentage change year on year, for each year since 1989–90. [36162]

Ms Jowell: The real term value of (a) staff car mileage claims and (b) staff rail travel from 1993–94 is in the table. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Year	Car mileage £	Per cent. change	Rail travel £	Per cent. change
1997–98 (to 20 March)	809,314	+1.8	2,150,077	+8.5
1996–97	794,835	(Note 2)	1,980,281	(Note 2)
1995–96	58,594	+80	1,669,966	+8
1994–95	32,494	+44	1,546,063	−15.5
1993–94	22,474	—	1,829,772	—

Notes:

1. Figures deflated using gross domestic product deflator.
2. 8 regional health authorities were absorbed into the Department on 1 April 1996.

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of staff of all grades employed by his Department; and what percentage of these staff were eligible to claim a car mileage allowance on 31 March in each year since 1990. [36160]

Ms Jowell: The total number of staff employed by the Department in each year since 1990 is as in the table.

Year	Numbers of staff
April 1990	5,388
April 1991	4,651
April 1992	4,803
April 1993	4,846
April 1994	4,672
April 1995	4,493
April 1996	4,784
April 1997	4,696
January 1998	4,540

All staff are entitled to use their car for official business and are potentially eligible to claim car mileage allowance, provided they comply with the codes and instructions set out in Departmental procedures. The Department maintains records of all claims for each individual but does not collect information on the percentage of total staff who make claims for car mileage and the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Care Assessments

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many care assessments were made during 1996–97 by local authority social services departments. [36352]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not currently collected by the Department on the number of care assessments carried out by local authority social service departments. However, a project is currently in progress to develop statistics on assessments and the resulting packages of care. A report on the outcome of the pilot will be available later this year.

Kidney Replacement Therapy

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the resources available for kidney replacement therapy. [36222]

Mr. Boateng: It is for health authorities, in consultation with specialist clinicians, to decide on local priorities for resources. Guidance was issued to health authorities about commissioning renal services in May 1996, and this will be followed up shortly with further advice about standards of treatment and the clinical effectiveness of dialysis therapy.

We are also cousidering publicity initiatives aimed at increasing the number of transplants.

Maternity Services

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on (a) the availability of post natal care and laying-in facilities and (b) the availability and provision of maternity units within community based hospitals. [36487]

Mr. Boateng: The post natal care provided in maternity units is determined on the basis of clinical need and the needs of the mother.

The pattern of local service provision is the responsibility of the health authority taking into account the needs of the local population, evidence of effectiveness and available resources.

Private Health Care

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of medical treatment paid for privately through medical insurance and (b) the impact of this on NHS costs per annum; [36729]

(2) what estimate he has made of the extent to which the use of private medical insurance impacts on costs to the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [36475]

Mr. Milburn: The Association of British Insurers estimates the cost of claims on private medical insurance policies in the United Kingdom at £1.4 billion in 1996. We have made no estimate of the impact of the use of private medical insurance on National Health Service costs.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial contribution the private sector makes to healthcare in the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [36464]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Acute Care

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is planned to be spent on acute care in the NHS in the current financial year. [36468]

Mr. Milburn: Health authorities submitted planned National Health Service figures for 1997/98 to the NHS Executive Headquarters in May 1997. These returns showed that, in England, £12,424 million was planned for general and acute care in 1997/98.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned into possible transmission of TB from badgers to humans; and if he will make a statement. [36721]

Ms Jowell: The Department has not commissioned work into possible transmission of tuberculosis (TB) from badgers to humans.

Around 30 to 40 cases of human TB each year are due to M.bovis infection, the strain which infects badgers and cattle. These are mainly in older people who were exposed to bovine TB before sterilisation of milk and routine testing of herds for TB were introduced and are not thought to be due to recent transmission.

However, the Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are in discussion over the possible use of new molecular techniques for typing strains of TB to further investigate the epidemiology of M. bovis infection.

Head Lice

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics his Department has collated on the incidence of head lice amongst school children in the last five years. [36971]

Ms Jowell: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the effects on children's health of trends in the incidence of head lice in the last five years. [36972]

Ms Jowell: The Department's policy research programme and the central National Health Service research and development programmes are not currently supporting any research into this subject, due to the pressure of other priorities. The Medical Research Council, which is funded by the Office of Science and Technology, commissions most of the Government's research into bio-medical and clinical issues. The council is always open to new sound scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Courts

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was (a) the total revenue raised by his Department through fees for civil work in each of the last two years and (b) the total expenditure of the court services for civil work in each of the last two years. [36437]

Mr. Hoon: (a) The total revenue raised through fees for civil work in 1996–97 was £264.4m and in 1997–98 was £323.1m. This includes forecast revenue for March 1998, (b) the total expenditure of the Court Service for civil work in 1996–97 was £321m and in 1997–98 was £327m. This also includes forecast expenditure for March 98.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was (a) the target percentage of the costs of civil courts to be recovered through fees and (b) the actual percentage of the costs of the civil courts recovered through fees in each of the last two years. [36438]

Mr. Hoon: (a) The amount planned to be recovered through fees for 1996–97 was £260m (81 per cent. of the total cost) and for 1997–98 was £314m (96 per cent.); (b) the actual percentage of the costs recovered through fees in 1996–97 was 82 per cent. and in 1997–98 was 99 per cent. This includes forecast data for March 1998.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Airports (North-West)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many visitors to Britain arrived through north-west airports during 1997. [36848]

Mr. Tom Clarke: Data from the International Passenger Survey for 1996 shows that 767,000 overseas visitors to the UK used Manchester Airport. During the first three quarters of 1997, 606,000 overseas visitors used Manchester Airport, an increase of 19,000 on the same period in 1996. Figures for overseas visitors are not available for other airports in the North West.

Shooting Organisations

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 26 February 1998, Official Report, column 322, what were (a) the level of membership of each of the shooting organisations listed and (b) the level of public funding in each of the last three years; and what is the projected funding for the next three years. [33543]

Mr. Banks: The relevant governing body for England is the English Shooting Council (ESC) whose approximate 1997 membership stands at 18,000 and consists of 4 member organisations: the English Pistol Association; English XX(2) Club; the Clay Pigeon Shooting Association; and the English Small Bore Shooting Union.

The UK-wide body is the Great Britain Target Shooting Federation (GBTSF), whose approximate 1997 membership is broken down as follows:

	Clubs	Members
National Pistol Association	500	100,000
National Rifle Association	1,000	57,000
British International Clay Target Shooting Federation	700	28,000
National Small Bore Rifle Association	18,000	296,000

The level of grant to each organisation is as follows:

	English Shooting Council	GB Target Shooting Federation
1995–96	11,000	240,785
1996–97	10,000	330,215
1997–98	18,000	288,120
1998–99	6,500	[1]239,370
1999–00[2]	16,500	not yet available
2000–01[2]	4,500	not yet available

[1] Planning figure subject to further discussion with the Federation.
[2] No firm projections can be made beyond 1998–99. The level of funding is subject to review.

Sport Governing Bodies

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the total grant-in-aid made available by the Great Britain Sports Council to governing bodies of sport for the financial years 1992–93, 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96. [34253]

Mr. Banks: The information requested is set out in the table. Many governing bodies also benefited from a number of services and programmes provided by the Sports Council or organisations funded by them, and from the use of facilities and services provided by the six National Sports Centres.

£000

Year	Grant-in-aid
1992–93	8,974
1993–94	9,603
1994–95	9,997
1995–96	10,956

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the total grant-in-aid made available by the English Sports Council to governing bodies of sport for the financial years 1996–97 and 1997–98; and what it is projected to be for the next three financial years. [34264]

Mr. Banks: The information requested is set out in the table. Projections have not yet been made for 1999–2000 and 2000–2001.

Year	Grant-in-aid
1996–97	[1]1,574
1997–98	[2]4,782
1998–99	[3]5,535

[1] The English Sports Council became fully operational on 1 January 1997. The figure, therefore, covers the period 01–01–97 to 31–03–97. The total grant-in-aid made available to governing bodies by the GB Sports Council during the period 01–04–96 to 31–12–96 was £8.126m.
[2] Forecast outturn.
[3] Budget figure. From 01–04–98, the governing body budget will include funding for sport specific developments in the ESC regions which previously were included in the individual regional budgets. When the regional element is included, the total governing body budget for 1998–99 will be £6.2m.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list, by individual governing body, the grant-in-aid made available by the English Sports Council to governing bodies of sport for the financial years 1996–97 and 1997–98. [34268]

Mr. Banks: The information requested is set out in the table. The English Sports Council became fully operational from 1 January 1997. The United Kingdom Sports Council assumed primary responsibility for UK/GB governing bodies on the same date. The 1996–97 figures include grant-in-aid payments made by the GB, English and UK Sports Councils during 1996–97.

Public Bodies

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the (i) location of, (ii) running costs of, (iii) salary costs of and (iv) number of staff based at the head office of the (a) National Lotteries Charity Board, (b) Lottery Sports Fund, (c) Arts Lottery Fund and (d) Heritage Lottery Fund; and for each of these bodies what percentage of (1) staff, (2) salary costs and (3) running costs are based in (A) London and (B) Scotland. [36127]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 26 March 1998]: All the following figures are for 1996–97 and relate to the organisations' Lottery operations. Figures given for running costs include salary costs.

(a) National Lottery Charities Board—Corporate Office (including UK-wide and International grants operations)

Lottery operations
(i) Location:	London
(ii) Running costs:	£8,696,735
(iii) Salary costs:	£1,822,296
(iv) Staff numbers:	81

Note:

In addition to its London Corporate Office, the NLCB has nine regional offices in England, including one in London, and four country offices, including a Scotland one based in Edinburgh. Corporate Office costs include services that support all operating units. The costs include IT and telemarketing costs, and UK-wide and International grant making operations. Taking all offices into account, percentages of staff and costs of the whole organisation, regardless of function, based in London and Scotland are as follows:

percentage

	(A) Based in London	(B) Based in Scotland
(1) Staff	36.6	5.9
(2) Salary costs	43.9	4.7
(3) Running costs	55.2	4.1

(b) Lottery Sports Fund—Headquarters

The English Sports Council distributes Lottery funds for expenditure on or in connection with sport in England, and the Scottish Sports Council with sport in Scotland. The organisations' Lottery operations are based wholly in London and Scotland respectively.

Lottery Sports Fund
(i) Location:	London (English Sports Council)	Edinburgh (Scottish Sports Council)
(ii) Running costs:	£4,980,000	£840,000
(iii) Salary costs:	£1,100,000	£503,000
(iv) Staff numbers:	76	21

(c) Arts Lottery Fund—Headquarters

The Arts Council of England distributes Lottery funds for expenditure on the arts in England, and the Scottish Arts Council on arts in Scotland. The organisations' Lottery operations are based wholly in London and Scotland respectively.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the green transport plan; [36651]

(2) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36655]

Mr. Tom Clarke [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". My Department has started work on preparing green transport plans for key headquarters buildings.

World Cup 1998

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tickets to Scotland's matches in World Cup 1998 have been obtained by his Department; and to whom these tickets have been distributed. [36805]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 30 March 1998]: None, nor do we intend to obtain any.

National Lottery

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his plans to improve the regulation of the National Lottery. [37663]

Mr. Chris Smith: It is the Government's intention to ensure that the public has complete confidence in the operation and regulation of the National Lottery. To that end, the National Lottery Bill, which will shortly receive its Second Reading in the House, contains provisions to establish an advisory panel to help the Director General select the operator of the National Lottery.

While this panel would bring collective expertise to the selection of the operator, the final decision would remain in the hands of an individual—the Director General.

I have therefore been considering whether there is more we could do to broaden and strengthen the regulatory structure. I believe that there is a case for establishing a permanent collective body to bring a wider range of expertise and experience to the task of ongoing regulation as well as selection of the operator.

I therefore plan to introduce amendments to the Bill to replace the post of Director General, and the advisory panel, with a National Lottery Commission. The Commission, which will have the same statutory functions and duties as the Director General, will have five members and will be serviced by OFLOT. Its introduction will reduce the risk, actual or perceived, of conflicts of interest and regulatory capture, and remove the focus on an individual, while ensuring that a breadth of knowledge, experience and expertise is brought to bear on the regulation of the National Lottery. The necessary amendments will be introduced before the Bill is considered in Committee.

Cash Limits

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what changes he proposes to make to his Department's non-voted cash limit for 1997–98. [37664]

Mr. Chris Smith: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 July 1997, Official Report, columns 245–50, the DCMS/ERDF non-voted cash limit covering the payment of European Regional Development Fund grants, including supplementary credit approvals in respect of capital expenditure by local authorities, is eligible for an increase of £14,517,000 under the end year flexibility scheme for structural funds expenditure. The cash limit for 1997–98 has therefore been increased by £11,000,000 from £34,000,000 to £45,000,000 reflecting partial take up of the announced EYF amount to finance additional payments to approved projects.

The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mountaineering

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the Minister for Sport has visited the national mountaineering centres at (a) Glenmore Lodge, (b) Plas-y-Brenin, (c) Tollymore and (d) Plas-y-Menai since 1 May 1997. [36620]

Mr. Chris Smith: My hon. Friend the Minister for Sport has not visited the national mountaineering centres at Glenmore lodge, Plas-y-Brenin, Tollymore and Plas-y-Menai.

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what procedures he will put in place to allow all sports access to the expertise in sports medicine and science of the UK Sports Institute. [36619]

Mr. Banks: The UKSI's mission is to put the UK at the top of world sport by providing quality services that athletes will want to use. This will require access to the best possible expertise wherever in the world people are located.

All sports, including major spectator sports, will be able to connect into the support services throughout the UKSI network, locally, regionally and at the Headquarters.

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the proposal by the English tourist board to set up an annual tourism conference from 1999, under their strategy Action 2000; and if he plans to attend the 1999 conference. [36849]

Mr. Tom Clarke: I welcome the English Tourist Board's commitment to a partnership approach with the industry. I understand that they are now working on ideas for such a conference early next year and will soon be in a position to announce further details.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the UK's proposed target for carbon dioxide reductions under the Kyoto protocol before entering into negotiations with other European Union countries. [36383]

Mr. Meacher: The starting point for the sharing out with other European Union countries of the EU's legally binding 8 per cent. Kyoto Protocol target is the provisional agreement reached in March 1997, under which the previous Government committed the UK to a 10 per cent. reduction. We indicated before Kyoto that we were prepared to consider doing more than this as a legally binding target: but we would not do so simply to enable other EU countries to reduce their efforts.

Separately from whatever legally binding target is agreed for the UK, we retain our aim of a 20 per cent. reduction in CO_2 emissions.

Railway Stations

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the number of railway stations that opened (a) nationally and (b) in Shropshire for each year since 1979. [36473]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The table gives the number of railway stations that the British Railways Board opened between 1979 and 1993. None were in Shropshire. Since 1994, the opening of new stations has been the responsibility of Railtrack. I understand that a total of 30 stations have opened in the last four years, but that Railtrack have no central record of station openings by year or by region.

Goods Vehicles

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how many prosecutions there have been for unlawful levels of emission for goods vehicles in each of the last 15 years; [36598]

(2) how many local authority weighing stations for the checking of loading of goods vehicles are currently in operation; [36597]

(3) how many prosecutions there have been for overloading of goods vehicles in each of the last 15 years. [36596]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency, Mr. Ron Oliver, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from R. J. Oliver to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 1 April 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the number of local authority weighbridges currently in operation and also numbers of prosecutions for overloaded goods vehicles and goods vehicles with unlawful levels of emissions in each of the last 15 years.

The Vehicle Inspectorate does not hold details of local authority weighbridges currently in operation. The Public Weighbridges Directory last published in 1991, and in the process of being updated by the Local Authorities Co-ordinating Body on Food and Trading Standards (LACOTS), lists all weighbridges publicly available for use by location. It is therefore not possible to identify those owned by local authorities currently in operation except at disproportionate cost.

The Inspectorate is responsible for the operation of a network of 74 weighbridges throughout the country. These are either owned by us or operated by us on behalf of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The weighbridges are used by our staff and also by local authority Trading Standards Officers and the Police to carry out enforcement weighings. We have formal agreements to use four local authority owned weighbridges. We also use a range of other local authority weighbridges on an ad hoc basis and have agreements to use a number of weighbridges in private ownership.

We are unable to supply details of overloading prosecutions over the last 15 years. The Inspectorate took over responsibility for Traffic Examiners from the Traffic Area offices in 1991 and Table 1 below details the number of prosecutions for overloading taken by us since 1993/94. Comparable figures prior to that date are not available. It should also be borne in mind that overloading prosecutions are also taken by other enforcement bodies such as the Police and Trading Standards.

[1] Figures for Scotland not available

Note:

Full year figures not yet available for 1997/98.

As regards prosecutions for unlawful levels of emissions for heavy goods vehicles, it is not the Inspectorate's policy to prosecute in these cases as this provides no assurance that the fault has been rectified. Our usual practice is to issue the vehicle with a prohibition. This provides an effective sanction as in order to remove the prohibition the vehicle is required to be presented for a re-inspection once the fault has been rectified. Details of prohibitions issued to licensed operators are also passed to the Traffic Commissioners to consider whether action against an operator's licence is warranted.

There have been instances in which we have prosecuted serial offenders, single extreme cases or illegal unlicensed operators who are not answerable to the Traffic Commissioners. There were 2 successful prosecutions for unlawful levels of emissions in 1995/96 and seven in 1996/97.

In cases where light goods vehicles, which fall outside of the operator licensing scheme, are prohibited (for any defect including exhaust emissions), a caution is issued and a new MOT certificate must be obtained for the vehicle before the prohibition can be lifted. This is required to be submitted to the Police for cross checking. Failure to repair (or scrap) the vehicle results in prosecution for the original offence. Almost all owners provide proof that their vehicles have been repaired following the issue of a prohibition and very few prosecutions are necessary. It is not possible to break down the figures for prosecutions to identify those relating to emissions.

Details of prohibitions issued to heavy goods vehicles at emission only spot checks are shown in Table 2 below. Data is only available from 1992/93 as prohibitions issued prior to that date cannot be linked with sufficient accuracy to the defect identified.

Birds (Staffordshire Moors)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to reverse the decline in bird populations on the North Staffordshire moors; and if he will make a statement. [36764]

Angela Eagle: In response to a decline in certain bird populations, the South West Peak Environmentally Sensitive Area (ESA), part of the North Staffordshire Moor, was set up in 1993. This ESA included management guidelines specifically aimed at bird protection by minimising the risk of disturbance and nest damage. The 1997 Quinquennial Review of the ESA considered a further range of options for habitat management and creation. As a result, further measures have been taken to encourage the regeneration of extensive pasture land and recreation of traditional meadows, as well as supplementary payments designed to encourage farmers to follow a drainage management plan. This enables the creation of areas of wet land as suitable habitat for feeding and nesting birds.

In addition, other areas of the moor are designated as Special Protection Areas under the EC Wild Birds Directive 79/409/EEC.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the impact on bird life on the North Staffordshire moors of agricultural developments over the last 20 years; and if he will make a statement. [36763]

Angela Eagle: Declines in the populations of some species of birds in the North Staffordshire moorland area, in particular ground nesting waders such as curlew and lapwing, as well as the skylark and twite, have been shown by a number of surveys which have been carried out since 1984.

The reasons for the declines may be linked to breeding failure caused by predation and changes in farming practices. Measures have been put into place which may help to reverse the decline in the population of these bird species.

Public Carriage Office

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 692, if he will instigate an independent appeals process over decisions taken by the Public Carriage Office not to allow advertisements on licensed taxi vehicles. [36823]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have no plans to change the present arrangements. However, I understand that the Public Carriage Office, and the Metropolitan Police of which they form part, are willing to discuss questions of taxi advertising with the agencies concerned, and that liaison meetings for that purpose are already planned.

"Europe's Shared Environment"

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the total cost of producing his Department's publication, "Europe's Shared Environment: The Work of the European Union in Environment Protection"; and what assessment he has made of the appropriateness of its size. [36803]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The total cost of the production (design and print) of 20,000 copies of the publication "Europe's Shared Environment: The Work of the European Union in Environment Protection" was £17,429. The A4 landscape format was selected for its attractiveness and to ensure that text was clear and uncramped. This did not affect the design or print costs.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made by Government departments towards the target of improving energy efficiency by 20 per cent. in the nine years to 31 March 2000. [37355]

Angela Eagle: By 31 March 1997, energy efficiency in Government Departments had improved by just over 15 per cent. since 1990–91.

Full details are given in tables, copies of which have been deposited in the Library. The overall improvement is shown in Table 4. The tables include revisions to figures for earlier years revealing better performance than previously reported. All results reported here relate to periods before this Administration took office. Energy management in individual Departments is a matter for those Departments and their Green Minister. The Government aim to be at the forefront of good practice to improve energy efficiency, and will be looking to ensure that momentum is maintained through the strengthened role of Green Ministers under the Chairmanship of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment. We are also working on the development of new performance indicators which will, for the first time, enable comparisons with independent standards of good practice across the economy.

The results for the former Department of the Environment in 1996–97 were affected by relocation and rationalisation of its accommodation in London and elsewhere. This resulted in the need to run a number of old and new buildings while changes took place. The Department's two new headquarters buildings at Eland House and Ashdown House will be fully occupied by the end of March 1998. Both include a number of energy efficient measures including a combined heat and power system and a displacement cooling system.

Drive-through Restaurant (Cheam)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning the planning application for a drive-through fast-food restaurant on the London Road, North Cheam. [37170]

Mr. Caborn: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Planning Inspectorate, Mr. Chris Shepley, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Chris Shepley to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 1 April 1998:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about what representations have been received concerning the planning appeal for a drive-through fast-food restaurant on the London Road, North Cheam.

At the local inquiry held on 10–12 February the Inspector heard representations on behalf of McDonald's, the London Borough of Sutton and the North Cheam Residents' Action Group—which includes the views you expressed. The Inspector is also considering all the written representations, which include some 150 letters from local residents and petitions submitted to the Council at the time of the planning application, and some 130 representations made to this office about the appeal. Since the inquiry closed there have also been over 12 further representations.

I will see that you are sent a copy of the Inspector's decision letter when it is issued.

Solvents

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce labelling for cleaning materials to identify their content for those who suffer from allergic reactions to certain solvents. [35806]

Angela Eagle: The current UK and EU law dealing with the labelling of chemicals, including cleaning products, obliges suppliers to assess whether the chemical will cause sensitisation by inhalation or skin contact. If a product has this property it has to be labelled with a warning symbol and written advice including the chemical identity of the active chemical. I have no plans to introduce more specific legislation of the type described.

Regional Planning

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he intends the new approach to planning for future housing requirements to be taken into account in existing reviews of regional planning guidance and development plans. [37596]

Mr. Caborn: The statement "Planning for the Communities of the Future", Cmnd 3885, points out, in paragraph 33, the need for an orderly transition from the old to the new policy. The new approach will be introduced, as soon as possible, through reviews of Regional Planning Guidance. We will discuss with the Regional Planning Conferences how far it will be possible to introduce the new arrangements into existing review processes, some of which are likely to be completed next year. In the meantime, where development plans are being replaced or altered, they should continue to have regard, inter alia, to existing regional guidance. However, in considering whether to object to proposals put forward in development plans, the Secretary of State will treat each case on its merits, taking account of national policy, including that in the statement. A more detailed note on the transitional position has been placed in the Library.

Water Charging

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the Government's consultation paper following the review of water charging in England and Wales. [37660]

Mr. Prescott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are publishing today our water charging proposals. The driving principles behind our policy on water charging are to have a system which provides for fair water charges and gives customers more choice in the way they pay for water. That system has to look after vulnerable customers. It also has to help ensure that water is used efficiently. We propose four key measures:

(i) Those who currently pay on an unmeasured basis and use water only for essential domestic purposes should be able to continue to do so in their present home.

(ii) We should remove the threat of disconnection from domestic customers.

(iii) Domestic customers should have the choice of a meter, free of charge, if it suits their needs.

(iv) Targeted help should be available for consumers with special needs.

For the foreseeable future, the majority of customers will pay their water charges on an unmeasured basis. We remain firmly of the view that customers should not, in future, be obliged to start paying for water in their present home on a measured basis, where they are not using significant amounts of water for non-domestic purposes like garden watering using a sprinkler. To allow this, we propose a change in the law to allow rateable value charging to continue beyond the year 2000.

We also propose to remove the powers of water companies to disconnect domestic water supplies in the event of non-payment. This will be particularly reassuring to those who are most vulnerable. Access to water is essential to the maintenance of general good health and well being, and the water charging arrangements need to reflect that. Of course, water companies are entitled to be paid for the services they provide, but other debt recovery procedures are available to them. Our concern about public health demands that we maintain the flow of water supplies to households in all circumstances.

Measured charges may, in the right circumstances, encourage individual customers to use water efficiently. Some consumers, such as single people or pensioners in larger properties, will see an advantage in moving to a measured charging basis for their bills. We propose that in future customers should have the choice to have a meter fitted, free of charge. But those who choose a meter should also have the opportunity to revert to an unmeasured charging basis within a year if metering does not suit their needs.

Companies should draw up imaginative new tariffs which increase customer choice. Those should bring benefits to customers who have not previously seen any point in being metered. And tariffs can also be designed to give customers strong incentives to economise on water for discretionary purposes without discouraging essential use. It must be for the companies to take the lead in developing such tariffs, but I look to the regulator to see that they do so. In particular, we see a strong case for ending standing charges for metered customers, which can be a particular problem for people on low incomes with low water use.

For new homes, and those substantially altered since 1990, there are no rateable values. We do not believe that any of the unmeasured charging options for these homes are attractive. We therefore propose that metering should continue to be the normal charging method. But we will consider constructive proposals for alternative charging options which consultees wish to put forward, including possible unmeasured options for new houses.

A particular concern of this Government is the position of vulnerable customers. So we propose that households on low incomes, particularly large families, and those with special medical needs who live in houses with a metered supply should have the right to opt for a charge based on average use rather than their actual meter reading. This should provide targeted and effective assistance to the groups who could be most disadvantaged as a result of metering.

Copies of the Government's consultation paper 'Water Charging in England and Wales—A New Approach', on which responses have been requested by 14 May, have been placed in the Library.

Concrete (Thaumasite)

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the problems associated with the thaumasite form of sulphate attack on concrete. [37704]

Mr. Raynsford: During recent strengthening operations on two of the older overbridges on the M5 in Gloucestershire, an unexpected deterioration was noted in some of the concrete columns below ground level. Consultations with BRE identified this as the thaumasite form of sulphate attack. Foundations on a further three bridges were examined and were found to be exhibiting similar deterioration.

The Highways Agency's view is that this does not pose a threat to the structural stability of the bridges, nor is there any risk to the safety of road users. The Agency are drawing up a programme to identify which bridges might be subject to this form of problem and to investigate those bridges.

BRE has been conducting research into this form of sulphate reaction since 1990 for my Department. But until the cases on the M5 were discovered last week, only three such incidents of damage to concrete foundations had previously been identified in the UK. It appears that compliance with standard design guidance on protection against sulphate attack does not guarantee protection of concrete against the thaumasite form of reaction. At present, BRE are undertaking both laboratory and long-term field studies into this phenomenon. These studies have led them to the conclusion that this form of sulphate reaction can only occur when there is a combination of:

(a) A source of sulphates, a commonly found in clay soils;

(b) Very wet, cold conditions; and

(c) A source of calcium carbonate in the concrete (limestone aggregate in the cases investigated).

The expert independent advice received from the BRE is that, while they believe that their initial findings indicate the need for wider study, they are strongly of the view that any damage to buildings would be gradual and there is no danger to people in buildings.

In the light of the problems discovered on the M5, I have today appointed Professor Leslie Clark to chair an expert group to study the phenomenon further and to report to me as soon as possible. The Group will develop guidance and advice on any implications for existing buildings and structures and on the design and specification of new construction.

Mining

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to lay the regulations under section 58 of the Environment Act 1995 for mine operators to notify the Environment Agency before abandoning a mine or part of a mine. [37705]

Mr. Meacher: I am today laying before the House, together with the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales, my hon. Friend the Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths), The Mines (Notice of Abandonment) Regulations 1998. The Regulations will come into force on 1 July 1998. On 4 March, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle) made the necessary Commencement Order to bring the remainder of section 58 and 60 of the Environment Act 1995 into force on 1 July. This period of notice will allow mine operators time to put in place the necessary steps to avoid a criminal liability for failing to notify the Agency of proposed abandonment.

These Regulations are being introduced following extensive consultation with interested parties. Copies of the responses received are available from the Departments' libraries. The Regulations will help the Environment Agency ("the Agency") avoid an unexpected minewater breakout resulting in serious contamination of controlled waters by enabling the Agency to identify appropriate action to prevent pollution or treat minewaters when a mine or part of a mine is abandoned.

The Regulations require mine operators to notify the Agency at least six months before abandoning a mine or part of a mine and to publish a notice in at least one local newspaper where the mine is situated. They set out the precise contents of both the notice to be given to the Agency and the public notice in a local newspaper. The notice for the Agency requires the operator to give an opinion as to the consequences of the proposed abandonment with relevant supporting information. Variations to the timing of the notice will apply where abandonment follows an emergency, and in some cases of insolvency. Where a phased programme of abandonment is planned, this could be notified to the Agency and published in local newspaper at one time, so as to reduce the burdens on the operator.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has also brought into effect the remainder of section 60 of the Environment Act 1995. This removes the statutory defence against prosecution from the owners and former operators of mines abandoned after 31 December 1999, where a polluting discharge is "permitted" to flow from an abandoned mine or part of a mine.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visa Applicants (Security Risks)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are taken to ascertain the accuracy of information supplied by another country suggesting that an individual applying for a visa to enter the United Kingdom may be a security risk to that other country; and what account is taken of such information in determining an individual's visa application. [36851]

Mr. Fatchett: Any information supplied by another government in relation to a United Kingdom visa application at the respective British Mission would be carefully evaluated, including against the background of the information available on the visa application. Any information would be given appropriate weight when deciding the application under the requirements of the Immigration Rules.

Moldova

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to (a) establish permanent diplomatic representations in the Republic of Moldova or (b) move Moldavian accreditation from Moscow. [37210]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are no plans to open a British Embassy in Moldova. We have no plans to transfer accreditation from the British Embassy, Moscow. We are however hoping to appoint an Honorary Consul in Chisinau by the end of this year. The question of diplomatic coverage of Moldova is kept under regular review.

People's Europe Project

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the (a) purpose and (b) budget of the People's Europe Project. [37072]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The aim of the People's Europe 98 conference is to promote and widen public debate on the challenges facing Europe; in this way to help make the EU more open and closer to the citizen; and to provide a means to promote the views of civic society within the European Union. The budget for the project is the responsibility of the organisers. My Department is providing £70,000.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what European Communities funding will be available to support the People's Europe Project. [37096]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The European Commission intends to provide about £70,000 from the EC budget toward the cost of the People's Europe 1998 conference. The European Parliament is likely to make a further, smaller contribution. It is possible that EC funds may be available to Non-Governmental Organisations that are contributing to the conference.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff of the European Commission based in London possess diplomatic immunity. [37165]

Mr. Fatchett: Under the 1965 Protocol on Privileges and Immunities of the European Communities, 26 members of staff at the European Commission based in London enjoy Diplomatic Immunity. This is only in respect of acts carried out in their official capacity.

UNICEF

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial contribution the UK has made to UNICEF in each of the last five years. [37060]

Mr. Foulkes: I have been asked to reply.

Total UK contributions to UNICEF were as follows:

Year	£ million
1993–94	12
1994–95	25
1995–96	27
1996–97	22
1997–98	[1]10

[1] Provisional

Refugee Children

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) projects and (b) financial aids are provided to help reunite refugee children with their families in areas of conflict. [37054]

Mr. Foulkes: I have been asked to reply.

The Department for International Development (DFID) supports a number of organisations which help to reunite refugee children with their families. Prominent among these is the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) who work in most of the world's crisis affected countries and whose mandate includes protection and tracing. We have recently agreed a core contribution of £15 million (1997/98 financial year) for the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC). We support and work closely with the United Nations Children Fund (UNICEF), whose mandate is the protection of children's rights: in 1996/97 DFID provided a core contribution of £8.5 million. We have also contributed a sum of £200,000 in support of the work of the United Nations Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict to ensure protection, healing and rehabilitation of war affected children.

Additionally, DFID supports bilaterally a number of NGOs who work with refugees. Many of these projects are aimed at the most vulnerable members of the community and often have children as major beneficiaries. For instance we have given specific support to the UK NGO Children in Crisis to fund an orphan reunification project in Afghanistan. We are also funding a Save the Children programme in Liberia which aims to assist unaccompanied children, family tracing and reunification/rehabilitation work.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Experiments

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the animal tests for cosmetics in 1996 were for non-legislative purposes. [36424]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1996, there were 101 animal tests for cosmetics involving a total of 2,803 individual procedures on 2,791 animals. Of these, one test (1 per cent.) was for non-legislative purposes. It involved 45 rats (1.6 per cent. of the total number of animals). The test was carried out because of doubts about the safety of an ingredient which was to be used in trials involving human volunteers.

The figures given are not consistent with the figures in table 11 of the report "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain, 1996" which was published in July 1997. The "All species" row in table 11 indicated that 620 cosmetic testing procedures had been carried out for non-legislative purpose. Inquiries since the statistics were published showed most of these procedures were, in fact, carried out to comply with health and safety or consumer protection legislative requirements.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline his proposals relating to animal experimentation during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Union. [36428]

Mr. George Howarth: The United Kingdom has used its Presidency of the European Union to seek agreement for the European Commission, and those member states which have not done so, to conclude by January 2000 the European Convention for the protection of vertebrate animals used for experimental and other scientific purposes. This will allow the United Kingdom to ratify the Convention, to which it has been a long-standing signatory. We have also clearly signalled our support for the Commission in its approach to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development for a review of its requirements for safety testing (including the LD50 test) and to pursue a vigorous policy over the use of non-human primates in the European Union.

In addition, the Home Office is collaborating with other Government Departments to organise a workshop in May. This will be jointly funded by the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods and the United Kingdom Government. The aim is to explore advances in safety testing which will allow refinement of existing tests or a reduction in the number of animals used.

My noble Friend, the Lord Williams of Mostyn, is also to visit the European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods to explore the possibility of setting up a European database to promote the use of alternatives to animals in scientific experiments.

Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the proportion of (a) heroin and (b) cocaine seized in the last 12 months for which figures are available, with a degree of purity of (a) less than 20 per cent., (b) 20 to 30 per cent., (c) 30 to 40 per cent., (d) 40 to 50 per cent., (e) 50 to 60 per cent. and (f) 60 per cent. and above: and what quantity was seized in each band. [36480]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1997 where the Forensic Science Service was asked to test for purity of police seizures of heroin and cocaine, the purities were as follows:

Heroin purity	Percentage of cases	Cocaine purity	Percentage of cases
Less than 5 and 5–10	2	Less than 5 and 5–10	2
10–20	12	10–20	4
20–30	21	20–30	10
30–40	23	30–40	12
40–50	23	40–50	13
50–60	15	50–60	13
More than 60	5	More than 60	43

Note:
Figures are rounded

The quantity seized in each band is not available. The seemingly high percentage of cases involving purity of cocaine of more than 60 per cent. is probably skewed by the inclusion of some crack cases. The overall average purity for heroin was around 35 per cent. and for cocaine around 52 per cent.

Where the Forensic Science Service was asked to test for purity of Customs seizures, the average purity on importation in 1997 of heroin was around 34 per cent. and cocaine around 70 per cent. More detailed information on purity on importation is not available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the proportion of amphetamines seized in the last 12 months for which figures are available, with a degree of purity of (a) less than 5 per cent., (b) 5 to 10 per cent., (c) 10 to 20 per cent., (d) 20 to 30 per cent., (e) 30 to 40 per cent., (f) 40 to 50 per cent., (g) 50 to 60 per cent., (h) 60 to 70 per cent. and (i) 70 per cent. and above; and what quantity was seized in each band. [36479]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1997, where the Forensic Science Service was asked to test for purity of police seizures of amphetamine, the purity was as follows:

Purity	Percentage of cases
Less than 5	36
5–10	24
10–20	17
20–30	10
30–40	6
40–50	3
50–60	2
60–70	2
More than 70	1

Note:
Figures are rounded.

The quantity seized in each band is not available. The overall average purity was around 14 per cent. although the typical (modal) purity was around 5 per cent.

Where the Forensic Science Service was asked to test for purity of Customs seizures, the average purity on importation in 1997 was around 40 per cent. More detailed information on purity on importation is not available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the average potency per unit seized in the last twelve months of (a) LSD and (b) ecstasy. [36481]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1997, the Forensic Science Service was not asked by the police or Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to determine the drug content of any LSD seizures.

In 1997, where the Forensic Science Service was asked to test for drug content in police seizures (22 cases), the average content of MDMA tablets was 66 milligrams; the average content for MDEA tablets and tablets containing a mixture of MDMA and MDEA was around 80 milligrams.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many children are currently held in detention in connection with asylum applications; what are their nationalities; how many have been held for more than two months; and if he will list the detention establishments where they are held; [36587]

(2) how many children who made applications for asylum at the port of entry in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997 were subsequently detained; [36589]

(3) how many children made applications for asylum at the port of entry in (a) 1995, (b) 1996 and (c) 1997. [36588]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is our policy not to detain persons under the age of 18 save only in exceptional circumstances, such as when an unaccompanied minor arrives at a port of entry late at night and the Immigration Service is unable to make immediate contact with the local social services, or when the child's parent is detained, usually immediately prior to removal. The normal procedure is to grant temporary admission/release wherever possible, either into the care of a close relative or friend, or into the care of social services.

The available information relating to persons detained under sole Immigration Act powers in immigration detention centres is that, as at 28 February 1998, there were two persons known to be aged under 18 years who were present in Immigration Service detention accommodation as the dependants of a detained asylum seeker. In addition, one unaccompanied minor asylum seeker, whose age was in dispute on 28 February 1998 but who was later found to have been 17 years of age, was held in detention on that date. The nationalities of the persons involved were Kenyan and Syrian; they were held at Tinsley House and Harmondsworth detention centres; and none had been in continuous detention for more than two months.

Cases do inevitably arise where the exact age of an individual is in dispute. All age-disputed unaccompanied minor cases are referred, without prejudice, to the Refugee Council's Panel of Advisers for Unaccompanied Children. I regret that no central record is held of the numbers of unresolved age-disputed cases.

The numbers of persons recorded as being aged under 18 years when they applied for asylum at a United Kingdom port of entry, were: 580 in 1995; 650 in 1996; and 740 in 1997. These data relate to principal asylum applicants only and therefore exclude those whose only claim to asylum was as the dependant of another person.

I regret that reliable information on the numbers of persons recorded as being aged under 18 years when they applied for asylum at a United Kingdom port of entry and who were subsequently detained is available only at disproportionate cost through the examination of individual case records.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of persons who have claimed asylum in the United Kingdom in each of the last six months. [36996]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is given in the table.

Applications[1] received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, September 1997 to February 1998

	Number of principal applicants
1997
September	2,850
October	2,990
November	2,345
December	3,120
1998
January	2,860
February	2,650

[1] Figures are provisional and rounded to the nearest five.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons who are claiming asylum have been convicted of criminal offences, other than motoring, in the last 12 months. [36995]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Regrettably, the information requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

The available information, relating to persons who had applied for asylum at some stage is that, in 1997, 11 such persons were recommended for deportation by a court, and a further four were issued with notices of intention to deport on grounds conducive to the public good, following conviction for a criminal offence. The data are provisional and may include persons who have been convicted of motoring offences.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to public funds in the last week for which figures are available in respect of those currently claiming asylum in the United Kingdom. [36994]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 13 November 1997, Official Report, column 652, which gave the available information for 1996. More recent information from the Department of Social Security is not yet available. The Department of Health has estimated that, in 1997/98, grants to local authorities are likely to be in the region of £40 million for single adult asylum seekers and £28.5 million for families with children.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum claims have been made in the United Kingdom in the last 10 years; how many have been determined; and how many are outstanding. [36993]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During the period 1 January 1998 to 28 February 1998, approximately 278,000 asylum applications, excluding dependants, were lodged in the United Kingdom. In the same period in the order of 207,000 initial decisions were made.

As at 28 February 1998, there were estimated to be 50,960 asylum applications, excluding dependants, awaiting an initial decision.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many detainees in Campsfield House have been transferred to prison establishments in each month since January 1997. [37106]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The numbers of detainees transferred from Campsfield House to Prison Service establishments in each month since January 1997 are given in the table. These figures include transfers to the dedicated Immigration Service detainee accommodation at Her Majesty's Holding Centre at Haslar, and the detention wings at Her Majesty's Prison Rochester. The figures for August 1997 include those transferred as a result of the disturbance.

Young Offender Institution, Colchester

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he has taken (a) to identify good practice at Colchester YOI and (b) to disseminate it to other YOIs; [36703]

(2) when he expects the reconviction rate for Colchester YOI to be ascertained; and what provisional estimate he has made of it; [36708]

(3) what is his estimate of when the research carried out by Dr. Kate Painter of Cambridge University into the experimental regime at Colchester Young Offender Institution will be published; [36709]

(4) what research his Department has commissioned or evaluated on the number of former inmates at Colchester YOI obtaining employment following the completion of their sentence; [36706]

(5) how many incidents of absconding have taken place at Colchester YOI; [36707]

(6) how many incidents of self-harm have been reported from the Colchester Young Offender Institution; [36710]

(7) what assessment he has made of (a) the inculcation of discipline and (b) the participation in constructive activity at (i) the Colchester YOI and (ii) other YOIs; [36704]

(8) what proportion of young offenders at Colchester YOI have (i) taken part in and (ii) obtained certificates acknowledging competence in the short courses in (a) painting, (b) bricklaying, (c) motor mechanics, (d) animal husbandry, (e) carpentry and (f) other subjects offered as part of the regime. [36705]

Ms Quin: (i) Colchester Young Offender Institution has been closely monitored by all those involved in the project, either directly or indirectly. Ministers have been regularly updated on progress, and I have had the opportunity to visit both Colchester and Thorn Cross to see their operation at first hand. The Prison Service is currently reviewing regimes for young offenders, and this will incorporate the learning from good practice identified at Colchester. The outcome of the review will be disseminated to all establishments.

(ii) Preliminary reconviction data should be available at the end of 1998. No provisional estimate of the reconviction rate has been made.

(iii) An evaluation report containing a qualitative analysis of the Colchester experiment should be available in the autumn. A further report, including reconviction data will be produced when the data are available.

(iv) The offenders' supervising probation officers record information on employment; this will be assessed as part of the evaluation process.

(v) There have been no reported incidents of absconding from Colchester, but one prisoner did breach a temporary release licence by failing to return from a community visit. This prisoner was taken back into custody after two days.

(vi) There have been no reported incidents of self-harm.

(vii) The Colchester evaluation includes an assessment of attitude and behaviour changes among young offenders during their time at Colchester. This includes measures relating to discipline. The regime was highly structured with constructive activities and full participation was a basic requirement.

In other Young Offender Institutions assessment of needs and participation in appropriate regime activities is part of young offenders' sentence management. Discipline and behaviour are regularly monitored as part of the incentives and earned privileges scheme which determines the inmates' level of privileges.

(viii) There have been 66 young offenders at Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution Colchester. The table lists the proportion and numbers who attended courses and obtained certificates.

Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution Colchester: courses attended by young offenders

Young Offenders (Accommodation Costs)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will assess the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of transferring the cost of remand places for juveniles facing criminal charges from local authority social services departments to his Department's budget; [37028]

(2) if he will assess the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of transferring the cost of secure accommodation places for young offenders from local authority social services departments to his Department's budget; [37027]

(3) if he will assess the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of transferring the funding for remand places for juveniles facing criminal charges from local to central Government; [37026]

(4) if he will assess the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of transferring the funding for secure accommodation places for young offenders from local to central Government. [37025]

Mr. Michael: Juveniles held in custody on remand or sentenced can be placed in secure accommodation provided by the local authority, within its secure estate, or by central Government in Prison Service facilities, Secure Training Centres or in the Youth Treatment Centre.

At present, when juveniles—that is those between the ages of 10 and 16—are charged and not released on bail they have to be remanded to local authority accommodation under section 23 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969. The local authority may, if it can satisfy certain strict conditions, return to court and seek a secure accommodation order under section 25 of the Children Act 1989 to place the juvenile in local authority secure accommodation. The cost of such remands in these circumstances is met by the local authority and there are no proposals to change these payment arrangements.

Currently there are also special arrangements for 15 and 16-year-old boys who may be remanded to prison if the strict conditions set out in section 23 of the 1969 Act are met. The costs for these prison remands are met centrally and there are no proposals to change these payment arrangements.

The Government intend to add to the existing remand powers so that courts will have the power to remand certain juveniles direct to local authority secure accommodation. Powers are contained in the Crime and Disorder Bill which will allow for the process of implementing the Government's commitment in this area to begin. This process will be implemented in stages with priority concentrated on the youngest and most vulnerable juveniles, because there is a limited number of available local authority secure places. The powers will apply, in the first instance to 12 to 14-year-olds, 15 to 16-year-old girls and some 15 and 16-year-old boys who are adjudged by the court to be vulnerable and where a local authority secure place has been identified. The costs of such secure remands once implemented will be met centrally.

The costs of all sentenced juveniles and young offenders, irrespective of where they are held, are met centrally and there are no proposals to change these arrangements.

We have been reviewing the provision of secure accommodation for remanded and sentenced juveniles, including the funding arrangements. The outcome of the review will be known shortly.

Illegal Entrants

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people in the last 12 months he estimates have entered the United Kingdom illegally via Eurostar; [36997]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of persons entering the United Kingdom illegally in each of the last six months. [37011]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no estimate of the total number of persons who enter the United Kingdom illegally since, by the very nature of the problem, it is not possible to establish that a person is here illegally until they have been traced and interviewed.

The available information, relating to the total number of persons detected and served with papers as illegal entrants in 1997, is given in the table. I regret that information concerning the numbers of illegal entrants detected who had arrived, or had claimed to have arrived, via the Eurostar service, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost through the examination of individual case records.

Persons served with papers as illegal entrants[1] by month papers served, 1997[2]

Month	Number of persons[2]
January	1,410
February	1,200
March	1,130

July	1,100
August	1,100
September	1,160
October	1,280
November	1,340
December	1,110
Total	14,150

[1] Covers persons served with papers and dealt with as illegal entrants as defined in section 33 (1) of the Immigration Act 1971.
[2] 1997 figures are provisional and rounded.

Police Constables

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the number of police constables in (a) the West Mercia Constabulary and (b) the Shrewsbury Division; and if he will make a statement. [36757]

Mr. Michael: Ministers have no direct control over police numbers or their deployment. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force, within the total resources available to them. For 1998–99, West Mercia Constabulary will be able to increase its spending by £4.1 million, or 3.8 per cent. giving it a total spending power of £112.2 million.

The West Mercia Constabulary had 2,031 officers in September 1997—three fewer than in March 1992.

I understand from the Chief Constable that the Shrewsbury Division had 305 officers in March 1998—two more than 12 months ago. Included in this total are 239 constables—one more than 12 months ago. The Chief Constable has no immediate plans to change the disposition of his resources.

Domestic Violence

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of cases of domestic violence prosecuted by the police in the last 12 month period in the West Midlands Region. [36978]

Mr. Michael: Information collected centrally on court proceedings is not held in sufficient detail to distinguish domestic violence from other violent offences. The four police forces within the West Midlands region (Staffordshire, Warwickshire, West Mercia and West Midlands) do not maintain counts of prosecutions involving domestic violence.

Police Information Technology Organisation

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assets will be transferred to the Police Information Technology Organisation on its establishment as a non-departmental public body under the Police Act 1997. [37555]

Mr. Michael: Under the provisions of Article 4(1)(a) of the Police Act 1997 (Commencement No. 5 and Transitional Provisions) Order 1998, I have given notice to the Police Information Technology Organisation that certain Crown assets will be transferred to it, with effect from 1 April 1998, to coincide with its establishment as a Non-Departmental Public Body. The transfer will be free of charge. The assets concerned comprise:

£000

Assets	Estimated value
Hendon Data Centre	12,023
Information Technology (IT) equipment and software associated with the Police National Computer	21,287
Other office IT equipment and software	2,277
Furniture and miscellaneous items of office equipment	742
Vehicles	23
Total	36,352

NCIS Service Authority

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assets will be transferred to the Service Authority for the National Criminal Intelligence Service on its establishment as a body corporate under the Police Act 1997. [37556]

Mr. Michael: Under the provisions of Article 4(1) of the Police Act 1997 (Commencement Number 5 and Transitional Provisions) Order 1998, I have given notice to the Service Authority for the National Criminal Intelligence Service that certain Crown assets will be transferred to it, with effect from 1 April 1998. The transfer will be free of charge. The assets comprise:

£000

Assets	Estimated value
Information technology and communications equipment	3,147
Vehicles	1,049
Furniture and miscellaneous items of office equipment	313
Technical equipment	208
Total	4,717

In addition, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has given notice to the Service Authority for the National Criminal Intelligence Service that he will transfer to it, on the same day and free of charge, vehicles with an estimated value of £301,000.

Detention Centres

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what timescale he has agreed with the Chief Inspector of Prisons for the publication of reports following a visit to (a) a prison and (b) a detention centre. [37120]

Ms Quin [holding answer 31 March 1998]: On 29 September 1997, my right hon. Friend announced a new protocol for dealing with the publication of inspection reports on Prison Service establishments by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons. The protocol procedures seek to ensure expedited publication of the Chief Inspector's inspection reports 10 weeks after the inspection of a Prison Service establishment is completed, and once any issues of factual accuracy have been resolved between the Prison Service and the Chief Inspector.

These procedures do not extend to the inspection reports of Immigration Service detention centres. However, the Government would look to the early publication of such reports once any issues about factual inaccuracy have been resolved.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the report of the Chief Inspector of Prisons to Featherstone Prison in 1996 was not published. [37124]

Ms Quin [holding answer 31 March 1998]: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector withdrew his draft report of the 1996 inspection of Featherstone Prison because of delays in agreeing a publication date. At the time the Chief Inspector submitted his report, it was the practice of the Prison Service to provide Ministers with full and detailed advice on all aspects of an inspection report prior to its publication. This process could take a number of months and, on occasions, led to a delay in publication.

In order to expedite matters and ensure transparency in the process, my right hon. Friend announced, on 29 September 1997, a new protocol for handling the publication of the inspection reports. The protocol seeks to ensure the publication of the reports ten weeks after the inspection of an establishment, unless there are unresolved issues of factual accuracy raised by the Prison Service. The protocol has the full agreement of the Director General of the Prison Service and the Chief Inspector.

World Cup

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information the French authorities have provided to him about the proportion of tickets which will be checked against identification at the turnstile during the forthcoming World Cup. [37166]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 31 March 1998]: We are assured by the French authorities that supporters attending matches during France '98 will be subject to a range of security checks by police authorities and stewards before entering stadiums to ensure that they hold valid tickets, and to further checking following entry to the ground. This will include stewards conducting checks on the validity of tickets prior to entry to the ground and again before the person takes up his or her seat. All ticket holders will be subject to a search outside the stadium by the police or gendarmerie, providing a further opportunity to check on the validity of tickets.

The French authorities have not stated that any specific proportion of tickets will be checked against identification. That is an operational matter for the French authorities. They have indicated that checks against identity will be carried out in any circumstances which give rise to suspicion. Verification checks will also be carried out on a random basis.

There is strict ticketing legislation in place in France and the authorities have undertaken to apply this rigorously.

Firearms

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims have been made for increased compensation payments to former owners of handguns handed in under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997; and how many (a) have been settled and (b) are outstanding. [37294]

Mr. Michael: The levels of compensation under Options A and B of the compensation scheme and the evidence required in support of claims under Option C are prescribed in the scheme booklet approved by Parliament. There is no provision for making increased payments outside the terms of the scheme, and so the question of claims for such payments does not arise.

DEFENCE

Military Aircraft

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the regulations covering military aircraft breaking the sound barrier above (a) urban and (b) other areas. [36406]

Mr. Spellar: The following regulations, which are an extract from Military Flying Regulations, apply to supersonic flying by military aircraft in UK airspace:

In the United Kingdom Flight Information Region (FIR), all medium and high level supersonic flights are to be made over the sea. Aircraft heading directly out to sea may accelerate to supersonic speed when at least 10 nautical miles (nm) out to sea and along a flight of at least 20° divergent from the mean line of the coast; the angle of dive is not to exceed the minimum necessary. Supersonic flights with the aircraft pointing towards the land, turning or flying parallel to the coast are to take place at least 35nm from the nearest coastline.

Supersonic flying at low level over the sea within UK FIR may take place provided that the above rules are followed and that, in addition, a radar/visual search is maintained in order to avoid the following by the margins indicated:

(a) Shipping and fixed or mobile oil and gas installations: 3nm.

(b) Civilian or military transport aircraft: a minimum of 6nm.

(c) Helicopter main routes and corridors: 6nm.

With the exception of Air Defence missions, operating authorities are to notify the appropriate radar station of all planned supersonic flights in advance. Radar stations are to maintain a permanent record of supersonic flights carried out under their control.

If any captain knows or suspects that his aircraft has inadvertently made a supersonic flight he is to enter details in the Flight Authorisation Book. In addition, it is the responsibility of the station concerned to notify the appropriate radar station of the flight within 30 minutes of the aircraft's landing. The radar station is to maintain a special record of all such occurrences.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will contact the customers using the facilities at the firing ranges operated by DERA before coming to a decision on the transfer of work from Shoeburyness to Eskmeals. [36389]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 March 1998]: As part of the DERA land ranges rationalisation study, customers were and continue to be consulted about their future requirements for test and evaluation capabilities, the likely volume of the work, and the funding available for this work over the next five years. Once the current consultation phase has finished, all contributions will be considered openly and fairly before a decision is made on how best to meet the needs of the Department in the most cost effective way.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the future reductions in spending which will arise at DERA in Shoeburyness in consequence of the management reorganisations. [36386]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The land ranges rationalisation study recommends changes that, in a full financial year, will produce savings in operating costs at Shoeburyness of some £8.9 million per year.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the expenditure involved in operating the DERA range facility at Shoeburyness in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what savings in annual administrative costs have accrued from management reforms in respect of the facility and from the changes introduced in consequence of the first stage of the reorganisation of the ranges. [36387]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The cost of operating the Shoeburyness site in FY 1996–97, the last year for which full figures are available, was £21.1 million. The forecast cost for FY 1997–98 is £20 million. The changes made in staff numbers during October 1997, along with other efficiency measures at the site, will reduce operating costs by approximately £2 million per year. The level of saving achieved from October 1997 to date is consistent with this.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the (a) percentage and (b) total amount of grant in aid awarded by his Department to museums and galleries in (i) London, (ii) England and (iii) Scotland. [36131]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The total amount of Grants in Aid estimated to be paid to Museums and Galleries by the Ministry of Defence during 1997–98 is £9,625,000 which represents about 0.05% of the Defence budget.

Of the total, £6,878,000 (71%) is paid to the National Army and Royal Air Force Museums in London; £2,747,000 (29%) is paid to the Royal Air Force, Royal Marine, Royal Navy, Royal Navy Submarine and Fleet Air Arm Museums in England (Hampshire, Shropshire and Somerset); and none is paid in Scotland.

In addition to Grant in Aid, the Ministry of Defence also funds Regimental and Corps Museums, in partnership with the Trustees of the Regimental and Corps Associations. The total funding provided by the Ministry of Defence in 1997–98 is £2,021,000, which represents about 0.1% of the Defence budget.

Of the total, £286,000 (14%) is paid to museums in London; £1,411,000 (71%) to museums in England; and £160,000 (8%) to museums in Scotland.

Hydrographic Survey Squadron

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has to use the Public Private Partnership to procure new vessels for the Hydrographic Survey Squadron; and what assessment he has made of the suitability of such procurement for front-line vessels; [37206]

(2) if he will make a statement on the progress of the procurement of new ships for the Hydrographic Survey Squadron; [37207]

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of the delay in procuring new ships for the Hydrographic Survey Squadron on the Squadron's operational affectiveness; and if he will make a statement. [37208]

Mr. Spellar: Plans to replace the surveying capability currently provided by vessels of the Hydrographic Survey Squadron include the possibility of a Private Finance Initiative, PFI, solution to the requirement. We are nearing completion of the evaluation of PFI proposals, which includes an assessment of the operational implications of procuring an Oceanographic and Hydrographic capability through such Private Partnership arrangements rather than through direct procurement of survey vessels by the MOD. A decision should be made on the preferred procurement route within the next few months. In the meantime, although limited by age and weather, the current ships continue to carry out their tasks effectively.

Type 42 Destroyers

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what negotiation he has had with the US Government on replacements for the Type 42 destroyers; and what plans he has for their future. [37238]

Mr. Spellar: No negotiations have been held with the US Government regarding replacement of the capability currently provided by the Type 42 destroyers. It is currently planned that the Type 42 capability will continue until replaced early in the next century by the Common New Generation Frigate.

Jaguar and Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has spent on upgrades and enhancements to Jaguar aircraft in Royal Air Force service in each of the last 10 years. [36445]

Mr. Spellar: Details of expenditure on upgrades and enhancements to Royal Air Force Jaguar aircraft for the last four financial years are provided below. Before that time expenditure was minimal, and retrieval and collation of the relevant information could be achieved only at disproportionate cost.

Financial year	£ million VAT included
1994–95	1.89
1995–96	24.25
1996–97	27.07
1997–98	18.59

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average cost per flying hour of operating in Royal Air Force service (a) Jaguar aircraft and (b) Tornado GR1 aircraft. [36447]

Dr. Reid: The average cost, (at current prices) per flying hour of operating a Royal Air Force Jaguar is approximately £13.3K and for a Royal Air Force Tornado GR1 is approximately £23.3K. This includes the variable flying costs and the apportionment of the station's fixed costs and overheads.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average number of maintenance man-hours per flying hour in Royal Air Force service (a) Jaguar aircraft and (b) Tornado GR1 aircraft. [36448]

Mr. Spellar: The average number of maintenance man-hours per flying hour recorded for Jaguar and Tornado aircraft in Royal Air Force service is as provided. The figures include work which is carried out by the RAF at 1st, 2nd and 3rd line, but do not include maintenance work undertaken by industry which is not calculated in man-hours:

(a) Jaguar—12.24 maintenance man-hours per flying hour.

(b) Tornado GR1/1a/1b—17.00 maintenance man-hours per flying hour.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department intends to spend in the current financial year and in the next two financial years on upgrades and enhancements to Jaguar aircraft in Royal Air Force service. [36446]

Mr. Spellar: Expenditure on upgrades and enhancements to Royal Air Force Jaguar aircraft in the current financial year, and that proposed for the next two financial years, is around £60 million inclusive of VAT.

Army Storage Sites

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the specialist vehicle storage site at Ludgershall, Wiltshire; and what forecasts he has made of future employment levels at the site. [37250]

Dr. Reid: The future of the site which formerly contained the Army's Base Vehicle Depot at Ludgershall is under consideration as part of the Strategic Defence Review, and it would not be appropriate to make predictions on future employment levels at the site while the Review is still ongoing.

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the upgrade of technical facilities required at the Ashchurch site as a result of the transfer of responsibilities for armoured vehicles has been completed; [37248]

(2) if he will make a statement on the performance against targets of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency at its Ashchurch site in respect of armoured vehicle work previously carried out at Ludgershall. [37262]

Dr. Reid: These are matters for the Chief Executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency (ABSDA). I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from P. D. Foxton to Mr. Michael Wills, dated 1 April 1998:

I am replying to your recent questions you tabled to the Secretary of State for Defence for those matters that fall within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency (ABSDA). You asked; had the technical facilities at Base Vehicle Depot (BVD) Ashchurch had been upgraded as a result of the transfer of responsibilities for armoured vehicles and the performance against targets at Ashchurch in respect of armoured vehicle work.

The upgrade of the technical facilities has not yet been completed. However, a Project Manager has already been appointed and a submission for final approval has been made to Quartermaster General, the Top Level Budget holder, to make funds available that will allow construction to begin. I am confident approval will be granted in the near future. I wish to point out that the armoured vehicle maintenance is being carried to the same exacting standards demanded by the Army's Equipment Managers, as was the case when armoured vehicles were stored at BVD Ludgershall.

BVD Ashchurch is meeting all but one of it's Performance Targets in respect of the routine issue of Armoured vehicles. This target is being missed due to awaiting spares (Ashchurch is given a low priority on spares issue compared to operational units) and the current restricted workshop space, but this is not affecting operations as BVD Ashchurch has met all operational Armoured vehicle demands placed upon it within or higher than the set times. This is a record of which the depot staff and myself are justifiably proud.

I trust I have answered your questions fully.

Defence Communications Service

Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Defence Agency status for the Defence Communications Service. [37665]

Dr. Reid: On 1 April 1998 the Defence Communication Services Agency (DCSA) will be established as a Defence Agency. The DCSA will be responsible for the provision of end to end wide area information transfer services to meet defence needs. It will enable the MOD's requirements for national and international information transfer services to be focused on one primary provider. The DCSA's Chief Executive will be Major General A. J. Raper CBE and its headquarters will be at Corsham, Wiltshire. The Agency will employ 899 military and 618 civilian staff at locations in the UK and Germany.

The creation of the Agency will improve defence communications by focusing on the delivery of customer services rather than simply communication systems. It will also offer scope for rationalisation and provide a clear line of accountability for service delivery. The DCSA's aim will be "To provide its customers with the optimum end to end wide area information services to meet defence needs".

The Chief Executive has been set the following Key Targets for the first year of operation:

1. To deliver communication services which achieve 100 per cent. of the systems output performance standards specified in the Baseline Service Document.

2. To introduce a process by December 1998 for measuring the delivery of information services, assessing their effectiveness by surveying customer satisfaction and develop the criteria for establishing an output service efficiency Baseline in both areas.

3. To plan the means of meeting customers' future requirements through the preparation of a Business Development Programme by March 1999.

4. To achieve 2 per cent. cost savings through efficiency measures and seek to improve further the value for money of delivered services through the preparation of a Management and Efficiency Programme by March 1999 which plans for rationalisation, re-investment and savings following reviews of:

inherited responsibilities and resources;

business unit boundaries;

Agency wide business processes;

and takes account of outcomes from the Strategic Defence Review.

TREASURY

Savings

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much he estimates tax relief would be reduced as a result of applying (a) annual and (b) overall limits of (i) £5,000 and (ii) £50,000 to PEPs and TESSAs using the same assumptions on how individuals would invest their capital as are used in calculating tax relief in the consultative document on ISAs. [34960]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Exchequer effect would depend on a number of factors including how these limits would replace the current limits for PEPs and TESSAs, and in particular, whether there were separate limits on the amount which could be subscribed to, or held in, the TESSA.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if uninvested cash within the equity element of the ISA will qualify for interest payable to the investor. [36326]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 27 March 1998]: This aspect of the ISA scheme will be considered during the consultation on the Regulations in the next few months.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what facilities will be available after 5 April 1999 for general PEP holders who wish to transfer their investments from an underperforming fund manager within the tax-free framework of their PEP; [36327]

(2) what facilities will be available after 5 April 1999 to holders of single company PEPs to change their investments within the tax free framework of their PEP. [36328]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Government do not envisage that the existing PEP rules allowing switching managers or investments will be changed.

Fuel Excise Duty

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the dates and rates of each petrol and diesel fuel excise duty increase since 1992 and the increase in the RPI which occurred between each of those increases. [35514]

Dawn Primarolo: The table sets out road fuel excise duty rates since 1991 together with the increases in RPI which occurred between changes.

Inward Investment

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the inward investment projects located in intermediate status areas for which his Department permitted the higher development area job subsidy limit to apply between April 1992 and 1 May 1997 and the dates on which the permission was given. [35379]

Mrs. Liddell: Between April 1992 and 1 May 1997, the Treasury approved two offers of Regional Selective Assistance for inward investment into an intermediate status area where the cost per job ceiling for intermediate status areas was exceeded. These were for an investment in South Wales by LG, and an investment in the West Midlands by Rover Group Ltd. Treasury approval was given for both in 1996.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of the child care tax credit within the working families tax credit in 1999–2000 assuming that it is fully used by families entitled to it, and also assuming take up of (a) 75 per cent. (b) 50 per cent. and (c) 25 per cent.; [36139]

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the estimate by the Institute for Fiscal Studies relating to the cost of the proposed child care tax credit, assuming full take-up of the benefit. [36354]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 24 March 1998]: A number of the Government's policies will make profound changes to the availability and affordability of child care over the next few years. The £300 million of extra resources for out-of-school child care provision, the child care tax credit and the rest of the Working Families Tax Credit, the New Deals to help people into work, and the rest of the National Childcare Strategy will all help to make quality childcare available and affordable for more parents. In this context, estimates of the cost of the childcare tax credit are subject to a wider degree of uncertainty than usual.

The Exchequer cost arising from replacing Family Credit with the Working Families Tax Credit is shown in line 1 of Table C.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report (HC620). The share of that cost accounted for by the childcare tax credit is £50 million in 1999–2000 and £250 million in 2000–01 (the first full year of the tax credit).

Growth Rate

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the change in growth rate over each of the next three years as a result of the measures contained in the Budget. [36593]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: The Budget takes a broadly neutral fiscal stance. Consequently, there will be very little impact on growth in the short term. In the medium term, measures taken to address structural weaknesses in the economy, including the changes made to help work pay and promote enterprise, should increase the growth potential of the economy. This should allow faster growth and higher levels of employment in the future, consistent with meeting the inflation target.

The ranges included in the Treasury's forecast of GDP growth for the next three years, published in the FSBR, reflect the potential impact of improved labour market performance on the economy.

Credit Controls

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answers of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 453, on credit control, (1) if he will now use the reserve requirement to restrict the expansion of credit; [37229]

(2) what assessment he has made of alternative monetary policy instruments. [37240]

Mrs. Liddell: The operational decisions necessary to meet the Government's inflation target are now taken by the Monetary Policy Committee.

Oil Prices

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what forecasts he has made of the average price of crude oil in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [36777]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Prospects for oil prices are very uncertain. But the assumption made for the public finances projections in the March "Financial Statement and Budget Report" is that the oil price (Brent crude) is flat at $14½ per barrel in 1998, and constant in real terms thereafter.

Coal Industry

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings Ministers in his Department held with coal industry representatives on 22 and 23 March; and if DTI (a) Ministers and (b) officials took part in these meetings. [36570]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 30 March 1998]: None.

Standing Committee

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the role and membership of the Standing Committee set up by the Memorandum of Understanding between Her Majesty's Treasury, the Bank of England and the Financial Services Authority. [37658]

Mr. Darling: The Memorandum of Understanding states that the Standing Committee will meet on a monthly basis to discuss developments relevant to financial stability, including individual cases of significance. Meetings can be called at other times by one of the participating institutions if it considers there to be an issue which needs to be addressed urgently.

The formal membership of the Committee is the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Governor of the Bank of England and the Chairman of the Financial Services Authority. But the routine monthly meetings will normally be attended by Deputies, who are the Director of Financial Regulation and Industry at HM Treasury, the Deputy Governor of the Bank of England with responsibility for financial stability and the Managing Director and Head of Financial Supervision at the Financial Services Authority.

HM Treasury provides the secretariat for the Committee.

NORTHERN IRELAND

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is her estimate of his Department's planned real level of expenditure on the National Health Service in 1995–96 prices in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, using (i) the estimates of spending and of the GDP deflator as contained in the Financial Statement and Budget report 1997–98 and (ii) the estimates of spending and of the GDP deflator as contained in the Financial Statement and Budget report for March 1998. [37134]

Mr. Worthington: Estimates of HPSS spending in Northern Ireland will be published shortly in the 1998 Northern Ireland Departmental Annual Report (Cm 3916), as part of a series of departmental reports (Cm 3902 to Cm 3920) which, accompanied by the document Public Expenditure: Statistical Analyses (Cm 3901), present the Government's expenditure plans for 1998–99 Departmental reports are planned to be published 3–7 April 1998.

Forest Service

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in establishing the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture as an executive agency. [37666]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Forest Service, currently a Division of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, will be established as an Executive Agency on 1 April 1998. It will continue to be known as the Forest Service.

I have set a number of key performance targets for the Agency in its first year of operation. These are as follows:

- To achieve 800 hectares of new planting in public and private sectors combined
- To offer for sale 260,000 cubic metres of timber
- To maintain visitor numbers in charged areas at the average level achieved over the last 5 years
- To maintain the area of forest under sustainable management

To commission an analysis of the potential for private finance and private/public partnerships in Northern Ireland forest, to be completed by 31 December 1998

To respond to 100 per cent. of written correspondence within 15 working days

To approve or reject 90 per cent. of applications under the Woodland Grant Scheme and Farm Woodland Premium Scheme within 8 weeks of receipt of a properly completed application form

Following planting, to pay 90 per cent. of grant claims within 8 weeks of receipt of a properly completed claim form

To achieve an expenditure outturn which meets the targeted net cost of the forestry programme for 1998–99

To achieve at least 3 per cent. DRC efficiency savings in the 1998–99 financial year

To control DRC and programme expenditure to within 1 per cent. of the final control totals

To market test or contract out 10 per cent. of direct costs of forest operations.

Copies of the Framework Document, which sets out the terms within which the Agency will operate, will be placed in the Library, together with copies of the Agency's Corporate and Business Plans.

Child Support Agency

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the revised Child Support Agency Northern Ireland Charter will be published; and if she will make a statement. [37668]

Mr. Worthington: The Northern Ireland Child Support Agency will publish its revised Charter today. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The Charter aims to provide prospective and existing clients with information that will advise them of the Agency's commitment to providing a high quality service. The main aims of the Charter are to provide information about:

the standards of service that parents and employers can expect.

how to get further advice.

how to make comments or complaints about the service.

information on the current level of performance.

The revised Charter promotes the Agency's commitment to continuously improving service standards and providing the best possible service to clients. The new service standards are based on the Agency's continued experience and listening to what people have to say. The Charter has been plain English tested and Crystal Mark approved.

SCOTLAND

Local Authority Funding

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the funding of Scottish local authorities will be changed to a resource accounting basis. [34940]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 23 March 1998]: The introduction of Resource Accounting to central Government will not directly affect local authorities but decisions affecting the funding of local authorities will take place within the framework of the resource budgeting process when this is introduced throughout central Government. Local authorities already account for their expenditure on an accruals basis, and already deal with their capital accounting on a basis which is broadly similar to the plans which are to be introduced in central Government through Resource Accounting.

Education Spending

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total of (a) GAE, (b) AEF and (c) actual expenditure for each Scottish council for each of the last 10 years for (i) provision in respect of primary schools, secondary schools, special schools and support services, (ii) nursery education and (iii) community education; and in each case what is the budgeted figure for 1998–99. [36631]

Mr. Macdonald: Information on each Scottish local authority's GAE assessment for all services, including the relevant Education sub-services, is published by The Scottish Office annually in "Grant Aided Expenditure" (the Green Book). Copies are available in the House of Commons Library. (In 1988–89 and 1989–90 GAEs were known as Assessments of Relative Expenditure Need).

AEF is a block grant and is not attributable to specific services.

Actual expenditure figures for all services are published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) in the "Rating Review Actual Income and Expenditure". For the years 1996–97 and 1997–98, the latest estimated information available is in the CIPFA publication "Rating Review Estimates of Income and Expenditure". Both publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Agri-environment Schemes

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many farmers and crofters have entered (a) an environmentally sensitive area scheme and (b) the Countryside Premium Scheme; and in each case how many participants have taken up options relating to (i) arable field margins, (ii) beetlebanks, (iii) conservation headlands and (iv) extensive cropping since January 1997. [36699]

Mr. Macdonald: As at the end of February 1998, the number of farmers and crofters participating in the Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme was 1,668 and for the Countryside Premium Scheme was 485. Information about participants taking up options for arable field margins, beetlebanks, conservation headlands and extensive cropping since January 1997 is set out in the following table.

Options	Number of CPS participants	Number of ESA participants
(i) Arable field margins	[1]121	[2]112
(ii) Beetlebanks	[1]—	[3]—
(iii) Conservation headlands	88	[2]55
(iv) Extensive cropping	111	[3]—

[1] Items (i) and (ii) are recorded as a single option under the CPS

[2] Included as part of wider prescription covering arable land

[3] Not directly applicable to ESA schemes

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to introduce a scheme available to land managers, irrespective of their agricultural status, to encourage biodiversity, access and amenity; and if he will make a statement. [36698]

Mr. Macdonald: The Government have recently consulted on proposals to merge the existing agri-environment schemes into a single all-encompassing scheme for Scotland's farmers and crofters. We have no plans to extend eligibility to non-agricultural land. Support to land managers to achieve biodiversity, access and other natural heritage objectives is available through management agreements and a number of grant schemes operated by Scottish Natural Heritage.

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of land managers in Scotland excluded from entering agri-environment schemes because they are not registered holders of agricultural land; and if he will make a statement. [36700]

Mr. Macdonald: The Scottish Office has no information on the number of land managers who are not registered holders of agricultural land or the number of applicants excluded from entering agri-environment schemes for that reason. It is widely known that only legal occupiers of agricultural land are eligible.

EU Structural Funds

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if she will make a statement on his Department's response to the latest proposed eligibility criteria for European Structural Funds, with particular reference to those relating to Objective 1 funding; [36334]

(2) if he will list the European Council of Ministers meetings he has attended since 1 May 1997 at which the future of structural funding and Objective 1 funding for the Highlands and Islands have been discussed; [36335]

(3) if he will list the meetings (a) he and (b) his officials have had with the European Commission to discuss structural funds and the future of Objective 1 Funding for the Highlands and Islands; [36336]

(4) what recent representations he has made to the European Commission concerning the proposed eligibility for areas awarded Objective 1 status; if he will publish his Department's correspondence with the European Commission on this subject since 1 May; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the documentation he has provided to the European Commission with regard to the Highlands and Islands future Objective 1 status. [36337]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Government welcome the European Commission's draft Regulations and the objectives to contain the costs of the Funds and improve their administration and effectiveness. But the Government do not believe the proposals as they stand represent a fair basis for reform. We will work hard with the Commission and other Member States to ensure a fair deal for the UK and Scotland. The draft regulations published on 18 March propose that Objective 1 regions shall continue to be determined at NUTS level II on the basis of per capita GDP of less than 75 per cent. of the Community average. The Highlands and Islands are unlikely to qualify on that basis. However, the Government have and will continue to press for the region to be treated in the same way as other areas of sparse population within the EU. It is important to note that the Commission proposals will now be subject to detailed scrutiny and negotiation by the Member States. What is finally agreed may vary somewhat from the draft Regulations.

The Prime Minister and Cabinet colleagues have supported the case for Objective I status for the Highlands and Islands at meetings and in correspondence with President Santer and European Commissioners. I myself met with President Santer on 18 September 1997, with Commissioner Wulf-Mathies on 8 January 1998 and 8 October 1997, and with Commissioner Flynn on 1 December. Discussion of European Structural funds formed part of the agenda on each occasion. The subject also formed part of the agenda at the Luxembourg European council in December 1997 and is likely to be discussed at the Cardiff Summit in June. Reform of the Structural Funds will be the subject of the second day of the Informal meeting of Ministers to be held in Glasgow on 9 June 1998 at which I will be present. There have been no other European Council of Ministers meetings at which the future of the Structural Funds has been discussed.

Scottish Office officials are in regular contact with the European Commission regarding the implementation of the Structural Fund programmes and the Commission proposals for the next round. The Scottish Office is also in close consultation with the Department of Trade and Industry, who co-ordinate priorities for negotiations on Structural Fund reform on behalf of the UK as a whole.

Ministerial colleagues have written to Commissioners in recent months in connection with the reform process. It is not normal practice to publish such correspondence. The Highlands and Islands European Partnership have produced substantive material in support of the case for continued Objective 1 status based on comparability with the existing Objective 6 areas. I will arrange for copies of the documentation to be placed in the Library.

Summary Criminal Prosecutions

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to introduce emergency legislation to prevent summary criminal prosecutions being abandoned because of the holding of more than one intermediate diet in the criminal proceedings taken against the accused concerned. [36868]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Yes. A Bill is being introduced today to address the implications of the High Court of Justiciary's recent decisions about the validity of orders made at intermediate diets held in certain circumstances in summary criminal proceedings.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many summary criminal prosecutions have been deserted, since 12 March, between the conviction and the sentencing of the accused, on account of the fixing or holding of more than one intermediate diet in the criminal proceedings taken against the accused concerned. [36869]

Mr. Dewar: Desertion is only one of a number of means by which a summary criminal prosecution can be brought to an end. However, between 12.3.98 and 27.3.98, eighteen (18) were deserted as a result of the decision in Vannet v Milligan.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many summary criminal prosecutions have been deserted, since 12 March, before the conclusion of a trial diet, on account of the fixing or holding of more than one intermediate diet in the criminal proceedings taken against the accused concerned. [36870]

Mr. Dewar [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Desertion is one of a number of means by which a prosecution can be brought to an end. However, between 12 March 1998 and 27 March 1998, fifty three (53) summary criminal prosecutions were deserted as a result of the decision in Vannet v Milligan.

Summary Criminal Convictions

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many summary criminal convictions recorded in each of the five years to 31 December 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996 and 1997 are susceptible to legal challenge because they followed upon the fixing or holding of more than one intermediate diet in the criminal proceedings taken against the accused concerned. [36871]

Mr. Dewar: No figures are available for the number of summary criminal convictions which may be affected by the decision in Vannet v Milligan. However the Crown Office has estimated that up to 1,000 current cases may be affected. Several thousand concluded cases may be involved as well.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of his Department's planned real level of expenditure on the National Health Service in 1995–96 prices in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, using (i) the estimates of spending and of the GDP deflator as contained in the Financial Statement and Budget report 1997–98 and (ii) the estimates of spending and of the GDP deflator prices as contained in the Financial Statement and Budget report for March 1998. [37133]

Mr. Galbraith: Estimates of NHS spending in Scotland will be published shortly in the Scottish Office Departmental Report (Cm 3914), as part of a series of departmental reports (Cm 3902 to 3920) which, accompanied by the document "Public Expenditure: Statistical Analyses" (Cm 3901), present the Government's expenditure plans for 1998–99.

Sexual Consent

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of prosecutions of (a) heterosexuals below the age of 16 years and (b) homosexuals below the age of 18 years for breaching the legal age of sexual consent in each of the past four years; and if he will make a statement. [36810]

Mr. McLeish: The available information is shown in the table.

Number of young persons proceeded against for selected offences in Scotland: 1993–1996

Main offence	1993	1994	1995	1996
Persons aged under 16 proceeded against under section 5 of the 1995 Act[1]	0	0	0	2
Persons aged under 18 proceeded against under section 13(5)(c) of the 1995 Act[2]	0	0	0	0

[1] The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995: Section 5—Sexual intercourse with a girl under the age of 16 years (including attempts), or equivalent earlier legislation.
[2] The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995: Section 13(5)(c)—committing, or being party to the commission of, or procuring or attempting to procure the commission of a homosexual act with a person under the age of 18 years, or equivalent earlier legislation.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Child-headed Households

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support her Department is giving to child-headed households in developing countries; and if she will make a statement. [35204]

Mr. Foulkes: We recognise that many children and young people who are forced into heading households and having to care for their siblings are themselves victims of conflict or other disaster situations. The Department for International Development works together with UN agencies and the Red Cross, non-governmental organisations and partner governments to ensure that humanitarian assistance reaches those who are most in need. Uppermost is of course the protection and promotion of human rights and the observance of humanitarian law. These aspects are integral to all our programmes of humanitarian assistance.

China

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what applications for mixed credits for projects in China her Department is considering; and if she will make a statement. [36311]

Mr. Foulkes: No mixed credit proposals for projects in China are currently under consideration.

Any mixed credits will be managed within agreed country strategies with the primary aim of helping to reduce poverty.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her counterpart in the People's Republic of China about the availability of mixed credits for development purposes; and if she will make a statement. [36844]

Mr. Foulkes: There have been no discussions at Ministerial level about the availability of mixed credits for development projects. As regards our general policy on mixed credit financing, I refer the right hon.

Gentleman to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development gave him on 21 January 1998, Official Report, column 562. The Government of China are fully aware of the position.

WALES

Oil and Gas Industries

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the oil and gas industries in the waters around the coastline of Wales. [35735]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

In addition to the oil and gas fields currently in production in Liverpool Bay, exploration programmes are continuing in areas off the north and west coasts of Wales, both of which have proven hydrocarborn potential.

New licences will be offered to the north of Wales in the 18th Seaward Licensing Round, which I hope to announce very shortly, and to the west of Wales in the following round. In both cases, the advice of interested departments and environmental authorities has been or will be taken as to the suitability of areas for licensing and unsuitable blocks will be excluded from offer. Further safeguards for the environment will be offered by the forthcoming introduction of regulations that will require appropriate assessments to be carried out on offshore petroleum projects that are likely to have a significant effect on the environment.

Exploration does not always lead to discovery, nor discovery to development, but there are proven hydrocarbons off the Welsh coast and continuing work and new licensing opportunities will help to ensure that their economic potential is properly assessed and, where possible, exploited.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the cost of financing tuition fees for the fourth year of study for Wales-domiciled students studying (a) full-time and (b) part-time at Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement. [36196]

Mr. Hain: We estimate that the extra cost of financing tuition fees for the fourth year of study for Wales-domiciled students studying full-time for first degrees at Scottish higher education institutions would be some £45,000.

There are no Wales-domiciled students studying part-time on the fourth year of first degrees at Scottish institutions.

Dental Services

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will increase the grant offered to dentists to set up in areas lacking NHS provision; [36674]

(2) what steps he is planning to take to encourage general dental practitioners to set up practice in areas of rural Wales where there is a shortage of NHS dentists. [36673]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The Welsh Office is doing all it can to assist Health Authorities to attract more dentists into those parts of Wales where they are most needed.

The £3m dental initiative, first launched in 1995, has enabled Welsh Health Authorities to offer unprecedented levels of grant (up to £50,000 in some areas) to dentists for new or expanding practices, and to NHS Trusts to expand the Community Dental Service. In July 1997, and additional £250,000 was provided for continuation of the initiative.

We are aware that there are particular problems associated with service provision in rural areas. The initiative is being reviewed and we are considering what more can be done to overcome those problems.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 733, what proportion of the £13 million budgeted receipts for the 1997–98 financial year of the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation his Department assumed would accrue from Associated British Ports in its budget calculations prior to commencement of the present financial year. [37015]

Mr. Ron Davies: Details of the make-up of the receipts in 1997–98 are an operational matter for the Corporation and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of his Department's planned real level of expenditure on the National Health Service in 1995–96 prices in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99, using (i) the estimates of spending and of the GDP deflator as contained in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" 1997–98 and (ii) the estimates of spending and of the GDP deflator as contained in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for March 1998. [37132]

Mr. Win Griffiths: Estimates of NHS spending in Wales will be published shortly in the Welsh Office Departmental Annual Report (Cm 3915), as part of a series of departmental reports (Cm 3902 to Cm 3920) which, accompanied by the document "Public Expenditure: Statistical Analyses" (Cm 3901), present the Government's expenditure plans for 1998–99. Departmental reports are planned to be published 3–7 April.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Agent 15

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what data she has (a) collated and (b) plans to obtain on whether British companies were responsible for selling Agent 15 or its constituents to Iraq since 1968; and what export licences have been issued for the sale of glycollates to Iraq. [29280]

Mrs. Roche: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence set out in his statement to the House on 9 February 1998, Official Report, column 6, our knowledge of Agent 15 is limited. It is one of a large group of chemicals called glycolates, which are esters of glycolic acid.

The export to Iraq of any goods, unless under the authority of an export licence, is prohibited by the Export of Goods (Control) (Iraq and Kuwait Sanctions) Order 1990 [SI 1990/1640], which came into force on 9 August 1990.

The Export Control Organisation's database has been interrogated and no licences were identified for the export to Iraq of glycolates. However, details of all the goods on an export licence are not always recorded on the database, so it is possible that licences covering glycolates might have been issued during the period. Any such licence could be identified only by examination of the paper records of all licences issued since 9 August 1990, which would entail disproportionate cost.

Gas (Doorstep Sales)

Mr. Love: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to strengthen the rules covering doorstep sales methods by companies selling gas. [35099]

Mr. Battle: The Government believe that consumers who are sold gas contracts on the doorstep should have proper protection. Following concerns over the misleading marketing techniques adopted by some gas suppliers, the Office of Gas Supply introduced a new licence condition to regulate such activities at the end of January.

Among other things, the new condition includes rules on the proper selection and training of sales staff who are in direct contact with domestic customers, auditing of sales activities, schemes for paying compensation, and a ban on gas suppliers using agents who ask for payment in advance of arranging a supply of gas.

I am keeping the situation, including the need for further action, under review.

Food Science Research Contracts

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will list the food science research contracts allocated by the BBSRC in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97, broken down by (i) length of contract, (ii) value of contract and (iii) institution securing the contract. [35407]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 20 March 1998]: The BBSRC awards an annual "competitive strategic grant" (CSG) to its Institute of Food Research (IFR). The figures for each of the three years in question were:

1994–95: £749k

1996–97: £818k.

The IFR uses the CSG to fund research projects within the BBSRC's remit. A list of Projects started in each of the three years have been placed in the Library of the House. Typically, one third of the projects funded from the CSG change each year. Therefore, at the beginning of the period in question, the CSG was already being used to fund a large body of research initiated in previous years, details of which are not included.

In the period concerned, the IFR also won a number of BBSRC Realising Our Potential Awards ("ROPAs"). A list of the total amount awarded to the IFR each year, the projects and their duration, have been placed in the Library of the House.

In addition, BBSRC awards grants for food research to higher education institutions, and occasionally some other bodies including its Institutes, through the usual, competitive, "responsive-mode" procedures. A list of these new awards in each of the three years have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Trade Union Recognition

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will estimate how many small companies employing (a) fewer than 25, (b) 50 to 100, (c) 100 to 150 and (d) over 150 employees recognise trades unions. [36840]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Data on union recognition are collected for workplaces rather than companies. According to the 1990 Workplace Industrial Relations Survey, the proportions of workplaces where unions were recognised are as follows:

Percentage

Employees	All workplaces	Private sector workplace
25–49	47	30
50–99	51	40
100–149	55	41
150 and over	78	68
All workplaces employing 25 and over	53	38

Workplaces employing fewer than 25 employees were not included in the Survey, so no figures are available for this group.

Electricity Generating Plants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what criteria he uses to assess the suitability of sites for the development of electricity generating plants; and what arrangements exist to involve the public in the planning process. [37088]

Mr. Battle: When assessing applications made under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 we will address local issues and ensure consistency with the wider objectives of secure, diverse and sustainable supplies of energy at competitive prices and meeting of environmental targets.

When an application is made the applicant has to place notice of it in the local and national press. Such notice invites anyone who wishes to make representation on the application to do so to the President within a period of not less than 28 days.

Price Waterhouse

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received from British industry about the proposed merger between Price Waterhouse and Coopers and Lybrand; and if she will make a statement. [36241]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 30 March 1998]: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received a number of letters from British companies about competition issues relating to the proposed merger, which were considered by the UK authorities in formulating the UK's comments to the European competition authorities.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment she has made of the implications for competitive choice in the auditing field of the proposed merger between Price Waterhouse and Coopers and Lybrand; [36240]

(2) what assessment she has made of the level of independent auditing capacity available to British financial institutions following a Price Waterhouse and Coopers and Lybrand merger. [36242]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The proposed merger between Price Waterhouse and Coopers and Lybrand is being considered by the European competition authorities. Member States have a formal role in EC competition investigations. Disclosure by the UK of its views or of the results of any work undertaken by the UK authorities would compromise the effectiveness and integrity of that investigation.

Export Licences

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to her answer of 11 March 1998, Official Report, column 234, what is the average length of time taken by the Export Control Organisation to process export licence applications that are circulated to other departments. [36702]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the answer by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the right hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) on 23 February 1998, Official Report, column 103.

Yemen

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures she is taking to promote British investment in the development of the port of Aden, Yemen. [36754]

Mrs. Roche: Officials in my Department have disseminated widely the opportunities for British companies in the port of Aden. The Department's promotional programme has enabled British companies to take advantage of this, and other, opportunities in Yemen.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions her Department has had with representatives of Tarmac plc in respect of bids to refurbish the port of Aden, Yemen. [36755]

Mrs. Roche: My Department has had no discussions with Tarmac plc in respect of bids to refurbish the port of Aden, Yemen. Tarmac has confirmed that it is pleased with the help it has received from my Department in pursuit of its interest in the refurbishment of the Aden refinery.

Unfair Dismissal

Mr. Hammond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to remove the statutory limit on compensation for unfair dismissal. [37204]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I draw the hon. Member's attention to the statement I made to the First Standing Committee on Delegated Legislation when moving the Draft Employment Rights (Increase of Limits) Order 1998, Official Report, First Standing Committee on Delegate Legislation, 10 March 1998, column 4.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of energy consumed in the UK came from (a) nuclear power generation, (b) fossil fuels and (c) renewable sources for the last year for which figures are available; and what estimate she has made for the percentage breakdown for (i) 2008 and (ii) 2018. [36881]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Provisional figures for 1997 show that 10 per cent. of United Kingdom inland energy consumption, on a primary fuel input basis, came from nuclear sources, 88 per cent. came from fossil fuels and 1 per cent. from renewable sources. Just under 1 per cent. came from imported electricity, which is mainly nuclear in origin.

Energy projections for the UK, published by the previous administration as Energy Paper 65 in March 1995 gave forecasts under a variety of scenarios. The scenario, which combined the central assumption for GDP growth with low energy prices, projected primary energy consumption in 2010 to be as follows:

> fossil fuels 93 per cent., nuclear 5½ per cent., renewables 1 per cent. and imported electricity ½ per cent., while in 2020 the percentages were projected as:

> fossil fuels 97½ per cent., nuclear 1 per cent., renewables 1 per cent. and imported electricity ½ per cent.

Energy Paper 65 did not contain projections for 2008 or 2018.

My department is working on a new set of projections which I intend to publish later this year.

Waste Management

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to improve coordination with the Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions and its agencies in connection with the regulation and support of the waste management industry. [36697]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Officials within the DTI already have regular contact with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions officials and with the Environment Agency on many waste issues, for example, the review of the waste strategy, aspects of waste management licensing, the Landfill Directive and waste shipments issues. JEMU, the Joint Environmental Markets unit, is composed of staff from both departments and promotes opportunities for the UK environment industry, including waste management companies.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Boswell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she intends to develop and publish for consultation a definition of fuel poverty. [37130]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 31 March 1998]: My Department does not propose to develop a definition of fuel poverty. An interdepartmental group on which DTI is represented, led by the Department of the Environment, Transport, and the Regions is looking at the factors which contribute to fuel poverty and its effects, and considering the options for addressing them.

Plutonium

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the current quantity of plutonium stockpiled in the United Kingdom; where it is stockpiled; and what assessment she has made of the quantities unaccounted for in the last 10 years. [37138]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker), on 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 372, which stated that details of the quantities of civil plutonium stored at United Kingdom nuclear facilities are published by my Department each year.

Figures for civil nuclear material unaccounted for, including plutonium, have been published annually by the industry since 1977. Each year, the figures are subject to careful review by specialists in my Department, who remain satisfied that they are consistent with what would normally be expected and that there is no evidence to suggest that there has been any actual loss of material. Civil nuclear material in the UK is also subject to the independent oversight of international nuclear safeguards inspectorates and to rigorous physical protection measures by the nuclear operators.

Domestic Heaters

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will introduce measures to improve the safety of domestic heaters which emit potentially lethal gases. [36827]

Mr. Battle: The safety of new domestic gas appliances, including domestic heaters, is controlled by the Gas Appliances (Safety) Regulations 1995 ("the Regulations") which implement into UK law the European Council's Gas Appliances Directive.

To protect consumers against the hazards posed by combustion products, such as carbon monoxide, the Regulations require that:

(a) appliances must be so constructed that, when used normally, flame stability is assured and combustion products do not contain unacceptable concentrations of substances harmful to health, and there is no accidental release of combustion products;

(b) flued appliances must be so constructed that in abnormal draught conditions there is no release of combustion products in a dangerous quantity into the room concerned; and

(c) independent flueless appliances and flueless instantaneous water heaters must not cause, in the room or space concerned, a carbon monoxide concentration likely to present a danger to the health of the persons exposed, bearing in mind the foreseeable duration of their exposure.

To ensure that gas appliances comply with these and other important safety provisions, manufacturers are required to submit their product to a third-party Notified Body for type approval before it may be placed on the market. Manufacturers must also appoint a Notified Body to undertake periodic surveillance of the production process in order to ensure that the product continues to conform to the type that was originally approved.

The appropriate measures are in place and my Department therefore has no plans at this stage to introduce any further measures.

HEALTH

Health Promotion

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proportion of the total health budget allocated to health promotion. [34014]

Ms Jowell: Health promotion is an integral part of the National Health Service and features in one form or another in nearly all contacts between patients and health care professionals. Much of this activity is not, however, separately or comprehensively identified in NHS accounts, nor separately allocated at the beginning of the year.

Advice on healthy living and disease prevention is intrinsic to the activity of general medical and primary health care teams. Most consultations in primary care will include an element of opportunistic health promotion. The cash-limited and non-cash-limited total general medical services allocation for 1997/98 is £3,055 million.

There is a centrally held budget for health education and promotion campaigns which is separately allocated. In 1997/98, the Department allocated £43.6 million to health promotion nationally, of which the Health Education Authority received £39.1 million.

Health authorities and trusts do not receive a specific allocation for health promotion. Provisional figures for 1996/97, the most recent year available, show that expenditure by NHS trusts and health authorities on health education and promotion was £79.6 million, but this figure excludes those functions of health authorities and trusts which indirectly support health promotion.

Alcohol Consumption

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which (a) medical organisations and (b) Government-funded expert organisations he consulted prior to the Portman Group launching its campaign on sensible drinking. [36485]

Ms Jowell: The Portman Group's sensible drinking campaign is their own initiative. It is intended to reflect the Government's sensible drinking message and to complement the alcohol health education campaign run on the Department's behalf by the Health Education Authority. The Portman Group consulted the Department to ensure that their campaign messages reflected accurately the Government's advice on sensible drinking.

Health Authority Funding

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the criteria being used to allocate the additional funding made available by the Government to health authorities. [36488]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the Statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State on 18 March 1998, Official Report, columns 1290–92.

Private Health Care

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private hospitals have been visited by Ministers in his Department since 2 May 1997. [36466]

Mr. Milburn: One.

Midwifery Courses

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the numbers of training places available in the South West Region for midwifery courses; and if he will make a statement. [36856]

Mr. Milburn: It is planned to increase the number of midwifery training places in the South and West Region from 424 in 1998–99 to 455 in 2000–01.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 1998, Official Report, columns 46–48, concerning readmissions, how much readmissions cost the NHS (a) by region and (b) in total in each quarter since April 1996. [37171]

Mr. Milburn: Specific information on the cost of emergency readmissions to National Health Service hospitals for people aged 75 and over is not collected centrally.

Hospital Admissions (Elderly Patients)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients aged 75 years and over were admitted into hospital for each quarter since April 1996 (a) for each region and (b) in total. [37062]

Mr. Milburn: Information is not yet available from the hospital episode statistics (HES) in the form requested but should be available from July 1998. Provisional HES data for 1996–97 currently are not reliable because of significant shortfalls in coverage information which would affect any regional and England level figures.

NHS Trusts (Pay Awards)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many NHS trusts have reached agreement with staff over the local element of the national NHS pay awards for 1996–97 (a) nationally and (b) in the Northern and Yorkshire Region; and what percentage of staff and trusts the agreements represent; [36990]

(2) how many NHS community trusts have reached agreement with staff over the local element of the national NHS pay awards for 1996–97; and what percentage of staff and trusts the agreements represent. [36991]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 10 November 1997, Official Report, column 434.

Microbiological Research Agency

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what capacity the Government have specifically commissioned since 1 April 1994 from the Microbiological Research Agency to respond to national emergencies. [37136]

Ms Jowell: Since 1 April 1994, the Department and the Public Health Laboratory Service have commissioned the Microbiological Research Authority to provide reference services to the National Health Service for the diagnosis of anthrax, and of infections caused by other exotic biological agents such as arbovirus, haemorrhagic fever viruses, and rickettsia. These services would form a key part of the co-ordinated response to any civil emergency which involved these organisms. The Department has paid the authority £0.5 million per annum to provide these services.

Any other services which the Government require of the authority in a national emergency are for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Defence and for the Home Department to address.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the meetings he and his Ministers (a) have had and (b) propose to have with trust and health authority chairmen and chief executives to discuss reducing waiting lists; if people were invited on a regional basis; what is the estimated cost of these meetings including the costs of travel and subsistence of those summoned; and which Ministers (i) attended and (ii) will attend each meeting. [37261]

Mr. Milburn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State invited the chairmen and chief executives of health authorities and trusts in England to meet Ministers to discuss the use of the additional resources obtained for the National Health Service in 1998–99 to reduce waiting lists. These meetings are being held on a region by region basis on 26, 30 and 31 March and on 7 April. The meetings are all being held in one of the buildings occupied by the Department and consequently the major costs are those of travel and subsistence for those attending the meetings. These are being met from the administration budgets of the individual health authorities and trusts. Information is therefore not available centrally on the total cost.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Inspections

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many primary schools with year two pupils were inspected by OFSTED in 1996–97; and in what proportion of them their year two pupils' standards of attainment were assessed by inspectors on OFSTED's scale one to seven in all 11 subjects of the primary national curriculum together in inspection judgment recording forms; [36491]

(2) in what proportion of primary schools with year two pupils inspected by OFSTED in 1996–97 their year two pupils' standards of attainment in information technology were assessed by inspectors on OFSTED's scale one to seven in inspection judgment recording forms; [36492]

(3) in what proportion of primary schools with year six pupils inspected by OFSTED in 1996–97 their year six pupils' standards of attainment in information technology were assessed by inspectors on OFSTED's scale one to seven in inspection judgment recording forms; [36493]

(4) how many primary schools with year six pupils were inspected by OFSTED in 1996–97; and in what proportion of them their year six pupils' standards of attainment were assessed by inspectors on OFSTED's scale one to seven in all 11 subjects of the primary national curriculum together in inspection judgment recording forms. [36494]

Mr. Byers: These are matters for HM Chief Inspector of Schools. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Teachers (Unions)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the proportion of teachers employed in the state sector in the United Kingdom who are affiliated to recognised trade unions (a) in total and (b) broken down by individual unions. [36767]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not held centrally.

Celebrating Europe Competition

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what categories of youth groups are eligible for the Celebrating Europe Competition. [36960]

Dr. Howells: All youth groups in the United Kingdom were eligible: local authority, voluntary, national and local groups.

Curriculum

Sir Raymond Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he intends to publish his consultative document on the new curriculum. [36858]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) will be advising the Government in April on the nature, scope and timing of possible future changes to the National Curriculum from the year 2000.

Once we have considered this advice, QCA will consult teachers, parents, employers and others on the shape of the future National Curriculum. The precise dates for the consultation and the issue of related documents have not yet been determined, but it will take place during the 1998–99 school year.

Education SSAs

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the 10 local authorities with the (a) smallest and (b) largest increases in education SSA for 1998–99. [37137]

Mr. Byers: The following table sets out the information requested:

percentage

LEA	Biggest increase	LEA	Smallest increase
Croydon	+ 7.7	City of London	– 6.7
Bexley	+ 7.6	Wandsworth	+ 2.2
Isle of Wight	+ 7.5	Hackney	+ 2.9

Portsmouth	+ 6.9	Richmond	+ 3.7

Labour Market Statistics

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what impact the introduction of the New Deal will have on labour market statistics, with particular reference to those for employment, unemployment and inactivity. [37706]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have written to the Chairman of the Employment Sub-Committee setting out how the New Deal will affect Labour Market Statistics. A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the reserves held by each training and enterprise council on 31 March. [37293]

Dr. Howells: A list of Training and Enterprise Councils (TECs) and their accumulated reserves, as shown in their audited annual statutory accounts, at the end of the financial year 1996–97 is shown in the table. This is the most recent year for which information is available.

Reserves are used by TECs to provide working capital and on activities in support of their corporate and business plan objectives which are agreed with the Government. Examples include the provision of additional opportunities within existing DfEE programmes, matching funding for European-funded projects and other training, enterprise or economic development initiatives designed to meet identified local needs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the engagements he undertook in the United Kingdom in the course of his duties during January indicating in each case which were accessed by (a) car, (b) train, (c) aeroplane and car, (d) aeroplane and train and (e) other means. [28927]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 10 February 1998]: I undertook a number of official engagements in the United Kingdom during January, most of them in London. All involved use of a car at some stage. With the exception of my attendance at the Oxford Farming Conference, where the train timetabling was inconvenient, none was sufficiently far away to merit travel by rail, or to require me to take a plane. I did, however, take the train from Gatwick to Victoria on my return from visiting the Windward Islands.

Agricultural Show

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will visit the Royal Lancashire Agricultural Show. [33912]

Dr. John Cunningham: I thank my hon. Friend for the invitation. Unfortunately, I have a prior engagement that weekend, and so will not be able to attend.

New Covent Garden Market

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many board members currently serve on the New Covent Garden Market Authority Board; and what is the maximum number of board members permitted. [34979]

Dr. John Cunningham: Under the provisions of Section 1(2) of the Covent Garden Market Act 1961, as amended, the Authority must comprise a Chairman and between four and seven members. There are currently a chairman and four members.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the costs of compensating tenants if New Covent Garden Market were sold. [34982]

Dr. John Cunningham: Any compensation would be in accordance with the Landlord and Tenants Act 1954.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the recent appointment of a Chairman of the New Covent Garden Market Authority was not conducted under the Nolan rules process. [34980]

Dr. John Cunningham: The recent appointment of a Chairman was conducted under the Nolan rules process, and the procedure was endorsed by the Ministry's "Nolan" panel.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which bodies and individuals his Ministry would be obliged to consult in any disposal of his interest in New Covent Garden Market. [34988]

Dr. John Cunningham: Any consultation would be full and open and include all those with an interest in the Market.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what ways his Ministry could dispose of its interests in New Covent Garden Market; which options he has evaluated; and if he will make a statement. [34987]

Dr. John Cunningham: These questions will be addressed when the necessary Bill is prepared.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances he will allow leases lasting beyond 2005 to be given to existing tenants of New Covent Garden Market. [34985]

Dr. John Cunningham: The length of leases will be considered when they come up for renewal.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his Ministry's current policy on the disposal of the New Covent Garden Market; [34989]

(2) how long his Department proposes to retain ownership of New Covent Garden Market. [34986]

Dr. John Cunningham: We are maintaining the policy, announced by the previous Government in 1990, of disposal of the assets of Covent Garden Market Authority, when Parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances the current management of the New Covent Garden Market will be allowed under the present ownership arrangements to have more capital expenditure flexibility in order to attract new tenants. [34981]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Covent Garden Market Authority is expected to ensure a net benefit from such expenditure within the life and terms of any new lease granted. The Authority already has flexibility concerning other decisions on capital expenditure but legislation constrains the nature of the businesses which new tenants may undertake.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to answer the questions of 27 February 1998 from the hon. Member for Teignbridge, reference 32064 and 32065, concerning his visits to the West Country and other counties. [34788]

Dr. John Cunningham: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to him on 18 March 1998, Official Report, column 656, and 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 728.

British Cattle Movement Service

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he announced the site for the headquarters of the British Cattle Movement Service. [35000]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: My hon. Friend the Minister of State announced this on 30 July 1997, Official Report, column 310.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were his Ministry's projected start-up costs for the British Cattle Movement Service at Workington, Guildford and Manchester. [35002]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 1 April 1998]: At the time the decision on the site was taken, the specific accommodation costs for setting up the British Cattle Movement Service were estimated as follows:

Workington £1.3 million

Guildford £0.6 million

Manchester £0.8 million.

These estimates covered accommodation costs only, and not the whole costs of setting up the new service.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what were the estimated start up and running costs for the first year in (a) August 1997 and (b) March 1998 for the British Cattle Movement Service; and if he will publish a detailed breakdown of the component costs of each figure, indicating the factors underlying each cost variant; [35003]

(2) if he will publish a detailed breakdown of the start up and first full year running costs of the British Cattle Movement Service. [34999]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: The British Cattle Movement Service will operate the computerised Cattle Tracing System (CTS) in Great Britain. The following estimates are for the CTS as a whole. In September 1997, the decision was taken to move the issue of cattle passports from Agriculture Department regional offices to the British Cattle Movement Service. This significantly increased the scope and set up costs of the CTS project, and means that the estimates are not strictly comparable.

In August 1997, the estimated costs of the Cattle Tracing System were as follows:

Set up costs	£ million
Database development	3.4
Project Management	1.7
British Cattle Movement Service (accommodation)	1.3
BCMS/Agriculture Department regional offices (equipment, services and publicity)	4.1
Total	10.5

Running costs

Detailed estimates were not available in August 1997, but following a feasibility study in 1996, running costs were expected to be of the order of £20 million to £25 million a year.

In March 1998, the estimated costs of the Cattle Tracing System, including additional costs associated with the decision in September 1997 that the system should also be responsible for the issuing of cattle passports, are as follows:

Set-up costs	£ million
Database development	[1]6.5
Project Management	3.7
British Cattle Movement Service (accommodation)	3.5
British Cattle Movement Service (equipment, services and publicity)	3.7
Total	17.3
First year running costs
Staff costs	3.2
Accommodation, administration and consumables	2.9
Common services and depreciation	3.4
Office supplies (including cost of 'freepost' system for reporting cattle movements and local call rate telephone system)	5.9
Inspection services	3.6
Total	19.1

[1] Further enhancements costing up to £3 million may also take place.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the cost benefit study to determine the site for the British Cattle Movement Service was completed. [35001]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: An investment appraisal was carried out in August 1997 and updated in November 1997. Both the original and updated investment appraisal suggested that, over a fifteen-year period, Workington would be the cheapest option.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the West Cumbria Development Agency was asked to draw up cost estimates for the Workington site of the British Cattle Movement Service. [35023]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: The West Cumbria Development Agency provided information which assisted my Department to draw up estimates of the cost of using the Workington site of the British Cattle Movement Service in late July 1997.

Whitehall Place Offices

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what use is being made of his Ministry's former offices in Whitehall Place. [34994]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: The vacant space in 3–8 Whitehall Place is being used by MAFF officials dealing with the Lord Justice Phillips Inquiry and by other policy groups.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Ministry's former office in Whitehall Place remains approved for office use. [34996]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: Whitehall Place offices are occupied in accordance with a current Home Office fire certificate and are approved for continued office use.

Cattle Tracing System

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proposals he received from non-Governmental sources to provide the cattle passport systems at sums below current estimates; [34998]

(2) which (a) companies and (b) other organisations made approaches to his Ministry to run the electronic cattle passport scheme. [34997]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: During early 1997, certain livestock industry organisations (e.g. NFU and National Milk Records) suggested the computerised Cattle Tracing System could be developed by an industry-led consortium. However, these ideas did not include detailed costings and implementation timescales. A feasibility study for the Cattle Tracing System, carried out by independent consultants for the previous Government, and published in autumn 1996, recommended that an existing Government database should be used as the basis for the Cattle Tracing System.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the computerised cattle data base system will begin operation. [34964]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: I expect the computerised Cattle Tracing System to be operating by late summer 1998.

Cattle Date-Based Scheme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions his Ministry has had in 1998 with the EU Commission and the Standing Veterinary Committee about the introduction of the date-based scheme for cattle; and when he expects approval for this scheme. [35024]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: My officials are in regular contact with EU Commission officials on the progress of our proposals for a Date-Based Export Scheme. Officials representing the United Kingdom at the Standing Veterinary Committee will discuss the Date-Based Export Scheme when the Commission has prepared and tabled their proposal for consideration by the Committee.

Nobel House (Costs of Move)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish for (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 the costs relating to his Ministry's move to Nobel House under the headings (i) rent, rates, service costs, (ii) refurbishment for 3,000 square metres, (iii) removal costs for all moves, (iv) Nobel House alterations, (v) Nobel House security guarding car ramp, (vi) Eastbury House deficit, space, rent, rates, services for two floors of 600 square metres, (vii) Eastbury House refurbishment and (viii) contingencies, giving details of items covered. [34953]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: The figures are as follows (those in italics are forecasts).

Item	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Rent, rates, service costs[1]	275,250	367,000	91,750
Refurbishment[2]	253,000	—	—
Removal costs (all moves)[3]	38,000	—	—
Nobel House—alterations[3]	240,000	—	—

Eastbury House—"deficit" space, rent, rates service (two floors—600m²)[5]	97,500	195,000	195,000
Eastbury House—refurbishment[5]	92,000	—	—
Contingencies[6]	54,000	—	—
Total	1,049,750	562,000	286,750

[1] The Department's Chief Scientist's Group (CSG) will stay in the decant building, St. Christopher House for a further year until MAFF's new Westminster building is ready in the summer of 1999. An earlier return to Whitehall Place early in 1998 would have meant a double move. The vacated space in Whitehall Place is being utilised by units servicing the Phillips Inquiry into BSE and other policy initiatives.

Much of the charge for the decant building is an "opportunity cost rent". Whilst it is an additional cost to the Department, it largely substitutes for other costs previously borne elsewhere by the Exchequer. The only additional costs to the Exchequer from MAFF's occupancy are those for utilities and other office services.

[2] In all £369,000 was spent to refurbish 3,000m² in St. Christopher House. Of this, £116,000 provided for staff displaced from Ergon House as a result of the co-location of the Joint Food Standards and Safety Group (JFSSG) in preparation for the establishment of the Foods Standards Agency.

[3] Actual costs were lower than initial estimates.

[4] No extra security measures were required for Nobel House.

[5] Extra space was taken in Eastbury House as a result of the co-location of JFSSG (see note 2 above), and is therefore not considered a direct consequence of the Secretariat move to Nobel House.

[6] Covers furniture and carpets for Ministers.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Nobel House move contingency fund is now fully allocated; and on what items of expenditure this money has been spent. [34995]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: The contingency budget for the move has now closed. £54,000 was spent from this for furniture and carpets for Ministers' new offices in Nobel House.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what hotel expenses were incurred by his Ministry in direct connection with the move to Nobel House. [34952]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: None.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what items of expenditure on the MAFF estate have had to be reduced to help fund the move to Nobel House. [34993]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: By altering priorities within the 1997–98 Non Pay Running Cost budget for building maintenance, sufficient funding was identified to help fund the move to Nobel House.

Desk (Cost)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of the new desk ordered for his use; and for what reasons no existing desks within his Department were suitable. [34992]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 17 March 1998]: The cost was £4,085 plus VAT. Until my removal to new accommodation, I had been using a desk left behind by a retired official. This would not have been suitable for the new location and will remain in Whitehall Place for further use in that building. No other spare desks were available which would have met the need. On grounds of economy, we do not hold significant stocks of unused furniture.

Unpasteurised Milk

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the outcome of his consultation exercise on unpasteurised milk. [35288]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 19 March 1998]: We are taking stock of all the points raised in the consultation, which ended on 24 February, and an announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many consultees, and from which organisations, agreed with his proposals on unpasteurised milk. [35287]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 19 March 1998]: Fourteen organisations and companies agreed with the proposal to ban sales of raw cows' drinking milk. These were:

British Medical Association

British Veterinary Association

Chartered Institute of Environmental Health

Co-operative Union Ltd.

Dairy Industry Federation

Institute of Food Research

Institute of Food Science and Technology

Local Authorities' Co-ordinating Body on Food and Trading Standards

Marks and Spencer PLC

National Dairymen's Association

National Institute for Research in Dairying

Public Health Laboratory Service

Royal College of Physicians

Unigate.

In addition, 22 individual food authorities and 6 individual consumers wrote in support of the proposed ban.

Beef Export Ban

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what barriers remain to be lifted before the ban on British beef exports to Europe can be ended. [36807]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 31 March 1998]: We have fulfilled all of the pre-conditions for the resumption of beef exports laid down in the Florence Agreement. We have secured the lifting of the bank from Northern Ireland beef from Export Certified herds. To enable the resumption of beef exports from the UK as a whole we are now engaged in discussions with the European Commission on our Date-based Export Scheme proposal. This scheme will have to be adopted by the European Union member states, either in the Standing Veterinary Committee or the Agriculture Council, before beef exports from Great Britain can begin.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which member states of the European Union he has communicated with since the agreement to lift the beef ban for Northern Ireland was agreed, to establish in each case what that members state's current objections are to the lifting of the beef ban for the remainder of the United Kingdom. [36808]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 31 March 1998]: I regularly have discussions with my European Union counterparts in which the Date-based Export Scheme is covered. The European Commission have yet to put their proposal to member states in the Standing Veterinary Committee. My officials are discussing the UK's proposals with the Commission in order to deal with any potential objections.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to ensure that at the next meeting of the Agriculture Council, an item will appear on the Agenda enabling a discussion to take place on a timetable of actions that will lead to the lifting of the beef export ban for Scotland, England and Wales. [36806]

Dr. John Cunningham [holding answer 31 March 1998]: Steps towards the resumption of UK beef exports are set out in the Florence Agreement which also specifies the procedures to be applied to each step. Consequently, my officials are currently developing plans for a Date-based Export Scheme in consultation with the European Commission. The Commission will then draw up a proposal to put before the Standing Veterinary Committee in line with the procedure set out in the Florence Agreement. The Agriculture Council would become included in this process if the Standing Veterinary Committee do not adopt the proposal.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Advertising

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make a statement on her Department's advertising budget for the current financial year. [34016]

Mr. Field: The Department does not allocate an annual budget specifically for advertising. Any expenditure on advertising is included in the Publicity budget.

For the current financial year the total estimated forecast spend on Publicity for the Department, including its Agencies, is £14,550,520.

This figure includes the cost of publications such as benefit leaflets etc (which this year will cost approximately £6,550,000), research, advertising, marketing, exhibitions, film and video.

Separate figures are not available for the proportion spent on advertising.

War Pensions

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she has discretion to backdate war pensions for those who applied for backdating before a given date; [34454]

(2) when was the last time she exercised discretion to backdate a war pension; and on how many occasions she has so acted since 1 May 1997; [34347]

(3) on what basis, and according to what criteria, she has the discretion to backdate war pensions; [34348]

(4) what was the date and nature of the change in Government policy in respect of the discretion to backdate war pensions. [34346]

Mr. Denham: Before 7 April 1997, Article 65 and Schedule 3 to the Naval, Military and Air Forces Etc. (Disablement and Death) Service Pensions Order 1983 provided the Secretary of State with a discretionary power to backdate an award of war pension in respect of any particular case or class of case, prior to the date of claim, whenever it was considered reasonable to do so. All cases were considered on their individual merits.

Normal policy was to exercise the discretion to backdate a war pension in a number of different circumstances. An example was where the claimant had suffered a mental or physical illness or disablement for a continuous period up to the date of claim and that illness or disablement was of such a nature or severity as to prevent the person claiming earlier or instructing someone to do so on their behalf.

The law on backdating was amended from 7 April 1997 as part of a package of measures to simplify administration. Following full consultation with the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions and other ex-Service organisations, the criteria for the commencement date of an award of war pension, and the limited circumstances in which it may be backdated, were defined precisely. The full details are to be found in Schedule 7 of the Naval, Military and Air Forces Etc. (Disablement and Death) Service Pensions Amendment Order 1997 (1997 No.286), which substituted a new Schedule 3.

Information is not kept on the number of occasions on which war pensions are backdated and this could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will make it her policy to pay increases in income support child personal allowances on the child's 11 and 16 birthday. [35722]

Mr. Field: When a dependant child reaches age 11 or 16, the increase in the Income Support child personal allowance in respect of this age change is payable from the first Monday in September which follows the 11th or 16th birthday. We have no plans to change this arrangement.

Benefit Integrity Project

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if she will review, in conjunction with disabled groups, the forms and letters issued under the Benefit Integrity Project; [35229]

(2) if she will provide disability awareness training to adjudication officers involved in the Benefit Integrity Project; [35230]

(3) if she will establish refresher training courses on disablement issues for visiting officers involved in the Benefit Integrity Project. [35231]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 23 March 1998]: Following discussion with organisations representing disabled people, we have established a programme of incremental improvements to the Benefit Integrity Project, including the key issues raised.

We intend to re-consider the literature issued to claimants as part of the Project, in order to make it clearer and more specific. In addition, we will be working with groups of and for disabled people to review our training programme for Visiting and Adjudication Officers.

The Benefits Agency is committed to carrying out the work of this Project in a sensitive and considerate manner. The review work to be carried out over the next few weeks confirms our determination to be fair, and to be seen to be fair.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors determine which method of payment is used for the winter fuel payment. [37126]

Mr. Denham: Winter Fuel payments are one of a number of initiatives the Government have taken to help vulnerable people, especially the elderly, keep warm in the winter. A total of £400 million has been committed over the next two years (1997–98 and 1998–99), to help pensioners with fuel bills to pay. This is the first time any Government have provided additional help with heating costs to all pensioners living in the United Kingdom who receive a Retirement Pension or one of a number of other qualifying benefits.

The making of this year's payments has been an enormous and unprecedented exercise. In order to establish all eligible pensioners, correctly identify pensioner households, and determine the amount each should receive, it was necessary to correlate data in around 15 million computer records, involving 15 qualifying benefits, across nine computer systems. Overall, almost 10 million pensioners, in over 7 million households, have received a payment.

The administration of winter fuel payments is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 31 March 1998:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what factors determine which method of payment is used for the winter fuel payment.

The making of winter fuel payments to almost ten million eligible pensioners, in over seven million households, before the end of March 1998 has been a challenging task for the Benefits Agency. This will have been achieved whilst maintaining normal benefit business.

Around one and a half million of the poorest pensioners, those receiving Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, received their payment of £50 during January. A further 8.3 million eligible pensioners received a payment of £20 or £10 during March. Where they live alone, are the only eligible pensioner in a household, or are of no fixed abode, they are entitled to £20; otherwise, they are entitled to £10.

Three different methods of payment have been used to make the payments to all eligible pensioners. A number of factors were taken into account in determining the appropriate method. The factors included: the normal method of payment used by the customer to receive their benefit; the ability of the relevant benefit system to make one-off payments by a number of different methods; the speed in which payments could be made; and, the cost and timescales required to introduce new methods of payment to individual computer systems. Payments have been made by the three routes as follows:

—Automated Credit Transfer (ACT) direct to the pensioner's bank or building society account where the qualifying benefit is paid in this way (except where the qualifying benefit was Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Invalid Care Allowance, an industrial injury benefit, or one administered by the War Pensions Agency);

—Payable order sent to the pensioner's home address, where the qualifying benefit is Invalid Care Allowance, an industrial injury benefit, or one administered by the War Pensions Agency; otherwise,

—Girocheque sent to the pensioner's home address or the Post Office where the pensioner collects their qualifying benefit.

The decision to send girocheques to the pensioner's Post Office was based on the fact that these customers represented by far the largest qualifying group and this was considered the most secure method of payment for them.

Thank you for the opportunity to explain the position.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Child Support Agency can pursue maintenance payments from parents who are illegal immigrants. [36985]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Child Support Act 1995 applies only where both parents and the child are habitually resident in the UK. Where both parents and the child have addresses in the UK they are normally assumed to be habitually resident unless there is evidence to the contrary. In such a case, the child support officer would decide on the evidence available whether that person should be treated as habitually resident for child support purposes. An individual's immigrant status is decided by the Home Office. The Home Office decision on whether an individual can stay in the country will be key for the child support officer in deciding whether they are habitually resident and therefore whether the Child Support Agency has jurisdiction.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations she has received from hon. Members on CSA matters in each month since 1 May 1997; and how many representations the Chief Executive has received in the same period. [36987]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The information is set out in the table.

The number of letters received from hon. and right hon. Members about the child support scheme for each month since May 1997

MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Millennium Dome

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister without Portfolio what steps he has taken to ensure a full environmental assessment has been carried out in respect of (a) the land on which the Dome is to be built, (b) the construction process of the Dome and (c) the operation of the Dome. [35930]

Mr. Mandelson [holding answer 24 March 1998]: An environmental statement was submitted to the London Borough of Greenwich as part of the Millennium Experience planning application in October 1996. The subsequent approval of the application was conditional upon the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) establishing procedures to ensure that environmental issues properly inform the decision making process both for construction and operation. A draft environmental plan to meet this condition has been submitted to the London Borough of Greenwich and consultations on it are underway. The NMEC has also commissioned assessments which address a wide range of environmental matters including the health and safety of employees and visitors. Together with English Partnerships, the NMEC is undertaking an audit of the remediation work that has been done to prepare the site for the Millennium Experience.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Freedom of Information

15. Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the conclusions he has drawn from the consultation on his freedom of information proposals. [35816]

24. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what responses he has received to the White Paper on open government. [35826]

27. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on freedom of information. [35829]

Dr. David Clark: Consultation on "Your Right to Know" drew over 550 responses. The overall reaction to our proposals was very positive, as the hon. Members will see if they study the material in the Library. I am considering detailed points from the consultation in preparing a draft Freedom of Information Bill.

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his proposed date for the introduction of Freedom of Information legislation. [35823]

22. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to publish the Freedom of Information Bill. [35824]

Dr. David Clark: I expect to publish a draft Bill later in the year, which will continue the consultation process started with the White Paper Your Right to Know. In the light of comments on this, a Bill will be introduced into Parliament as soon as the legislative timetable permits.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has received to the consultation exercise he held on the Government White Paper, Your Right to Know. [37659]

Dr. David Clark: I am delighted to say that the consultation exercise on the Government's Freedom of Information White Paper, Your Right to Know, received a very good response with some 557 replies received from a wide variety of individuals and organisations, as shown in the breakdown in the table. The great majority of the comments we received, even where they suggested changes or expressed disagreement with some aspects, were in favour of the fundamental content and broad direction of our proposals. This shows the wide support that exists for legislation of the sort proposed in our Manifesto, and set out in detail in the White Paper.

Although the consultation period formally ended on 28 February, many responses were still coming at the stage and, in the interests of full inclusiveness and fairness, we have included in our analysis as many replies as possible which were received after the end of February.

I am pleased to report that 172 (or 31 per cent.) of the replies were made by e-mail and 48 of these replies came via the Internet site set up for an open discussion of the proposals by UK Citizens' Online Democracy (UKCOD) with the support of the Cabinet Office. This shows the important role information technology can play in consultation exercises of this type.

I am today placing in the libraries of the House a list of those who responded (except where they requested anonymity) and copies of the responses received (except for those respondents who wished their comments to remain confidential). The apparently substantial number of replies requesting anonymity or confidentiality very largely consists of responses concerning the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 made by licence holders under the Act. Replies of this sort made up 100 of the 117 responses in these categories.

In addition to being placed in the libraries of the House, the responses are also being placed on the Internet and will shortly be available for viewing and downloading on the Internet. There is a direct link from the FOI Unit home page—http://www.open.gov.uk/m-of-g/foihome.htm — to the UKCOD site where the submissions are posted—http://foi.democracy.org.uk/html/submissions.index.html. A paper copy of the full set of responses is available from the Cabinet Office.

The consultation exercise has been extremely valuable in focusing public attention on our proposals for Freedom of Information. I am now considering the main points arising from the consultation, and how we will need to take account of them in preparing a draft Bill for publication later this year. That publication will, in itself, mark a further major stage in the consultation process.

The breakdown of responses by category is:

	Total number of responses	Responses by e-mail	On-line discussion
Individuals	160	103	38
Business	65	11	2
Media	6	1	0
Academics	59	14	0
Charities, Lobby Groups and Campaign Group	82	21	4
Members of either House	5	0	0
Public Authorities	152	15	1
Members of the European Parliament	0	0	0
Others	28	7	3
Totals	557	172	48

Ministerial Residences

17. Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much has been spent in total to refurbish official residences and offices of members of the Cabinet since 1 May. [35819]

Mr. Kilfoyle: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is not responsible for expenditure on all Government Ministers' residences and offices. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear, on 9 February, the cost of maintaining and refurbishing Ministerial residences for 1997–98 which is estimated at £1.1 million. Information on the cost of refurbishing departmental offices of Cabinet Ministers is not held centrally.

Arms Exports

18. Ann Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if information on the United Kingdom suppliers of the components of chemical and biological weapons exported to Iraq would be available under his proposed freedom of information legislation. [35820]

Dr. David Clark: All requests for information falling within the scope of the proposed Freedom of Information Act will be considered against the access provisions of the Act.

Departmental Efficiency

19. Mr. Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to increase efficiency in Government Departments. [35821]

Dr. David Clark: We are working to the target that, by 2002, one quarter of the public's dealings with government can be done electronically—through television, telephone or computer. This should result in better quality, more cost effective government services.

European Commission Documents

20. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to press for the greater use of plain language in European Commission documents during the United Kingdom presidency. [35822]

Dr. David Clark: Using plain language is important if the European Commission is going to communicate effectively with the citizens of Europe. British linguists in the Commission's translation service are holding a 'Fight the Fog' campaign to encourage the use of plain language by the Commission's authors and translators. The UK Government are fully supporting this work. Plain language is also vital in legislation so that citizens and business can know what is required of them. As Presidency, the UK is working with the Commission, European Parliament and other Member States on an initiative to improve the quality of drafting of EU rules.

Print Media

23. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next proposes to meet the civil servants' unions to discuss the Government's relationship with the print media. [35825]

Dr. David Clark: I met the General Secretaries of the Council of Civil Service Unions on Wednesday 25 March as part of a regular series of meetings to discuss key issues affecting their members. The Government's relationship with the print media is not an issue that has been raised.

Electronic Information

25. Mr. Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to permit individuals to supply information electronically to Government. [35827]

Dr. David Clark: I intend to publish later this year a White Paper on Better Government, which will set out in more detail ways in which IT will enable individuals to supply information to the Government electronically. As a prelude to this, last December I launched the Intelligent Form project, which converts what were once six paper forms on notification of self-employment into one electronic form, and in so doing enables individuals to supply several departments with information simultaneously via the Internet.

Regulatory Process

26. Mr. Casale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from his European counterparts on the reform of the regulatory process. [35828]

Dr. David Clark: When I took the UK seat at the Cambridge informal meeting of Internal Market Ministers on 13 February, many EU Ministers present spoke enthusiastically in favour of regulatory reform at European level. As a result of this support, I hope to see the launch under the UK Presidency of a pilot European Business Test Panel. The purpose of the panel will be to help regulators understand better the impact of new rules on business by consulting firms of all sizes on legislative proposals in advance of their becoming law. The UK will be a leading player in this pilot.

Better Government Programme

28. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on his better government programme. [35830]

Dr. David Clark: I have received many positive and interesting contributions on my Better Government programme. In addition to individual letters and meetings, I have held a series of seminars with a wide range of participants from academia, local government, the public, private and voluntary sectors, and user and staff representatives. The Parliamentary Secretary has also held a series of workshop with front-line staff, around the UK, to feed in their ideas.

Access Business Initiative

Kali Mountford: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress of the access business initiative. [35801]

Mr. Kilfoyle: On 5 March, we launched the Enforcement Concordat, which sets a blueprint for better enforcement practice throughout the country. Among several other projects, the group is also helping to develop an IT system that enables local authorities to provide a single point of advice on various regulatory matters.

Special Advisers

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many special advisers are currently employed within the civil service. [35818]

Dr. David Clark: At 1 April, there are 61 full-time and six part-time Special Advisers in post. In addition, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has appointed Professor Michael Barber as an adviser on Standards and Effectiveness, the President of the Council has appointed Keith Hellawell as the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator and Michael Trace as the Deputy UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer has appointed Chris Wales and Paul Gregg as members of the Council of Economic Advisers.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was (a) the estimated average fuel consumption and (b) the total mileage of ministerial cars travelling on official business in each of the years since 1989–90 for each Government department. [36159]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I cannot answer for all cars used by Ministers. However, for those run by the Government Car and Dispatch Agency, responsibility has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Nick Matheson to Mr. Andrew Stunell, dated April 1998:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, has asked me in my capacity as the Chief Executive responsible for the Government Car Service (GCS) to reply to your Parliamentary Question about (a) the estimated average fuel consumption and (b) the total mileage of ministerial cars travelling on official business in each year since 1989–90.

In my letter to you of 3 February I explained that information on the ministerial use of the GCS before 1 April 1997, when GCDA was set up as a separate agency, was not readily available, and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

For 1997/98, the estimated average fuel consumption of GCS cars allocated to Government departments for the use of Ministers is 25 miles per gallon. For the same period the estimated mileage of GCS cars allocated to departments, based on the most up-to-date information available, is as follows:

Department	Estimated mileage
Prime Minister and Cabinet Office	69,400
Department for Education & Employment	165,700
Ministry of Defence	7,000
Department of Social Security	77,800
Department of Health	55,100
Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions	124,000
Foreign & Commonwealth Office	174,200
Home Office	60,900
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries & Food	64,100
Northern Ireland Office	58,500
Scottish Office	52,700
Department of Trade & Industry	147,700
Law Officers' Departments	15,200
HM Treasury	65,900
Welsh Office	28,100
Privy Council Office	6,400
Department for International Development	37,000
Lord Chancellor's Department	39,200
Department for Culture, Media & Sport	54,400

As you may know, some departments may use other providers of cars and drivers for use by their Ministers.

As I also explained in my earlier letter, cars and drivers are allocated for the use of Ministers and their offices, and the above estimates may include some non-Ministerial use, such as the transportation of documents or use by officials.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 2 April 1998

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Travelcards

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the future of London Transport travelcards, with particular reference to full-time students; and if he will make a statement. [35522]

Dr. Strang: The Government have received a number of representations about the future of the London Transport Travelcard, including some from the University of London Union, which were specifically about discount schemes for full-time students. I understand that a recent trial revealed that, while a discount scheme would be workable, it would only be partly self-funding. In the light of this, London Transport (LT) were not sufficiently persuaded of the benefits to proceed.

Fares and ticketing, including student tickets, are the statutory responsibility of London Transport. On 4 January 1998, LT introduced a new ticket, providing a 30% discount for all 16 and 17 year olds on period LT cards, which can be used on Underground, LT Buses and Docklands Light Railway services.

Railway Maintenance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what safety procedures are required during railway line maintenance; and what measures are taken to ensure that they are enforced. [35540]

Dr. Strang: All those involved in the maintenance of the railway throughout Great Britain must comply with their obligations under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, Railways (Safety Case) Regulations 1994 and the Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994. Work on Railtrack's network must comply with the requirements of their Rule Book and the Railway Standards (the provisions of which are mandatory on Railtrack PLC and its contractors by virtue of Railtrack's Railway Safety Case and related contractual arrangements).

Inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive's Railway Inspectorate are responsible for enforcing legal requirements relating to health and safety on the railways, including the detailed requirements of the Railways (Safety Case) Regulations 1994.

Road Traffic (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has made of future growth in road traffic within the Greater London area. [36583]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Forecasts using the Department's strategic multi-modal transport model, known as "LTS", suggest that traffic volumes in the peak periods will be around 15% higher by 2011 within the Greater London area. For the inter-peak period, traffic is estimated to grow by 20%. These forecasts take no account of policies that will follow the Government's forthcoming White Paper on Integrated Transport.

A3, Hindhead

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received regarding traffic congestion on the A3 at Hindhead; and if he will make a statement. [36579]

Ms Glenda Jackson: During the course of the Government's Roads Review consultation, we received over 60 written responses about Hindhead issues. I also responded to an adjournment debate on 19 January 1998 about the A3 at Hindhead and two Parliamentary Questions on the same subject.

The Government's strategic review into highway improvement schemes presently taking place is aimed at determining the role which roads will play in an integrated transport policy, and developing a strategy which will address the problems of congestion and pollution and improve the environment in which we live. The conclusions of the review will be announced later this year.

Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cars pass through the single carriageway stretch of the A3 at Hindhead per day, in each direction. [36577]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Michael Mates, dated 2 April 1998:

The Transport Minister, Glenda Jackson has asked me to reply to your recent question about the A3 at Hindhead.

Recent traffic flow figures recorded at the A3/A287 signal controlled junction in Hindhead show that over an average week day about 13,600 vehicles travelled on the northbound approach to the junction and about 12,800 on the southbound approach.

The Highways Agency is aware of the problems in Hindhead, particularly on the approaches to the signal controlled junction between the A3 and A287. For the short term we are actively seeking ways of improving the performance of the signals in conjunction with Surrey County Council and the Transport Research Laboratory, with the aim of increasing flows through the junction.

Planning Applications (Crown Land)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will assess the (a) benefits and (b) disadvantages of giving local planning authorities the power to determine planning applications on Crown land when the land for development (i) is in the Green Belt, (ii) is in a designated area of outstanding natural beauty and (iii) would conflict with policies in adopted structure or local plans; and if he will make a statement. [37029]

Mr. Raynsford: This Government believe that it is usually most appropriate for local planning authorities to determine planning applications, whether such applications come from the Crown or from any other body. That is why we shall remove the Crown's immunity from statutory planning controls as soon as a suitable legislative opportunity arises.

In the mean time, the Secretary of State, when determining disputes which arise when a local planning authority objects to a notice of proposed development issued by a Crown body in accordance with the provisions of DOE Circular 18/84, will continue to have regard to the adopted local plan, and such other matters as the need to protect the green belt and other areas of outstanding natural beauty. Applications for planning permission under s299 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 which the Crown may be required to make to local planning authorities will continue to be determined in the usual way.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if Northern Ireland will be included within the remit of his Department's research project into how driving instructors are (a) trained and (b) tested. [36813]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The operation of the register of Approved Driving Instructors in Northern Ireland has not been included in terms of the research project we have recently commissioned. However, the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency will, I understand, look closely at whether the study's findings could be applied in Northern Ireland. The research project will be completed in 2000.

Agenda 21

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those local authorities which have produced local Agenda 21 strategies. [37214]

Angela Eagle: We have been working closely with the Local Government Association (LGA) to encourage all local authorities in England to produce and review their Local Agenda 21 strategies by 2000 to meet the Prime Minister's target. When launching in January with the Prime Minister, the joint document showing why and how to produce such strategies, the Chairman of the LGA asked all authorities to send him a copy of their first or revised strategy by 15 December 2000. We believe it is right for the LGA rather than central Government to take the lead in monitoring the production of such strategies and encouraging the sharing of good practice.

Waste Disposal

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what communications his Department has had with Cheshire County Council about the future of 3C Waste. [37080]

Angela Eagle: My department has had no recent correspondence with Cheshire about their Local Authority Waste Disposal Company (LAWDC) 3C Waste. Cheshire completed divestment of their waste disposal facilities and functions to 3C on 1 February 1993. 3C is still 100 per cent. owned by the County Council but I understand that they are considering transferring it to private sector ownership. This is entirely compatible with current legislation.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what communications his Department has had with Cheshire County Council about local waste disposal policy. [37082]

Angela Eagle: Officials in my department commented on Cheshire's draft Waste Local Plan in November last year. It appeared to conform with the most recent statement of Government policy on waste management, the 1995 White Paper Making Waste Work. The Council are now considering these and others' comments. I understand that the Deposit Waste Local Plan will be published later this year. A six week public consultation period and a public local inquiry chaired by a independent inspector will follow as normal.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his Department's policy towards (a) incineration, (b) landraising and (c) landfill, as a method of waste disposal. [37083]

Angela Eagle: This Government are aiming for more sustainable waste management with high standards of environmental protection. Incineration with energy recovery is, in principle, and in accordance with the waste management hierarchy, preferable to landfilling (including landraising). However, which option is employed for a particular waste stream and in a particular area depends on the Best Practicable Environmental Option.

On 13 January 1998, Official Report, column 160, my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment announced a review of sustainable waste management policies which will culminate in a statutory waste strategy. A consultation paper will be issued in May.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what communications his Department has had with North West local authorities about options for future waste disposal in the Mersey Belt; and if he will make a statement. [37084]

Angela Eagle: The Government Office for the North West have asked local authorities through the North West Regional Association (Regional Planning Conference) to provide a report on the facilities for the disposal of waste in the North West Region. According to RPG13, the region should seek to provide a network of waste management facilities located, wherever possible, in close proximity to the source of the arisings and that these should be identified in Development Plans. The NWRA are preparing the report and will forward it to the Regional Office in due course.

In addition, officials from the Government Office for the North West regularly attend Local Authority Recycling Officers forums and the North West Central Region recycling forum, to discuss waste and recycling issues with officers from all of the authorities in the area.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what health and safety regulations apply to landfill sites. [37151]

Angela Eagle: Health and safety regulations made under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 generally apply to landfill sites where there is employment. Regulations place duties on employers, the self-employed, and others, in relation to the management of health and safety and risks arising from, for example machinery, processes and work activities. The application of specific regulations made under that Act will depend on the nature of the work activity.

In addition, the following legislation, which has some health and safety impact, may also apply: the Environment Protection Act 1990; the Fire Precautions Act 1971; and the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, if pesticides are used.

Drinking Water Quality

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer of 13 February 1998, Official Report, column 419, concerning lead in water, what steps he will take to encourage the removal of potential lead contamination stemming from the pipework within a property. [37228]

Angela Eagle: Lead pipework within a house is the responsibility of the owner. We want to be able to take informed decisions on whether they need to replace their lead pipes and on what other action they can take to reduce exposure to lead.

Unroadworthy Vehicles

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what initiatives are being pursued to reduce the number of vehicles that are not legally roadworthy used on Welsh roads. [37055]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There are two main elements to the enforcement of vehicle roadworthiness in Wales, as in the rest of Great Britain. Almost all vehicles are required to pass an annual roadworthiness test to confirm that key safety and environmental standards are met. Vehicles are also subject to random enforcement checks by examiners from the Department's Vehicle Inspectorate and the police. The Inspectorate prohibits the use of vehicles found not to comply with construction and use or lighting requirements until the defects have been rectified (almost 15 per cent. of vehicles checked during 1996–97 in the South Wales Area were given prohibitions). The police assist the Inspectorate but also carry out enforcement under their own initiatives.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what instruction or guidance his Department has given to the Housing Corporation on the attribution by housing associations of service charges to (a) tenants in service accommodation and (b) other tenants. [37115]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 31 March 1998]: Under Section 36(3) of the Housing Act 1996, draft guidance prepared by the Housing Corporation on the management of housing accommodation by registered social landlords (mostly housing associations) is approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions before being issued by the Corporation. Under Section 36(2) of the Act, guidance may include the principles upon which rents should be determined.

Following consultation, my right hon. Friend approved management guidance issued by the Housing Corporation in December 1997 which included guidance on rents and service charges. This advises registered social landlords that they should endeavour to charge rents that are below equivalent market rent levels, are affordable to those in low paid employment and that do not increase each year by more than the guideline limit of the increase in the Retail Price Index plus 1 per cent.

I have asked the Housing Corporation to contact the hon. Member to answer any specific concerns about service charges.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what performance targets he proposes to set for the Planning Inspectorate Agency for the financial year 1998–99. [37604]

Mr. Caborn: I have today set new performance targets for the Planning Inspectorate Agency under which it will be expected to achieve significantly improved handling times for its work whilst preserving the impartiality and quality for which it is deservedly highly respected, and whilst seeking also to improve efficiency. The targets are as follows:

Timeliness

(a) 80% of all planning appeals decided by written representations to be determined in 18 weeks;

(b) 80% of all planning appeals decided by hearings to be determined in 24 weeks;

(c) 80% of all planning appeals decided by inquiries to be determined in 36 weeks;

(d) to provide an Inspector for local plan inquiries in at least 80% of cases on the date requested by a local authority provided that the objection period has ended and at least 6 months' notice has been given;

(e) to deliver 90% of Inspectors' reports on local plan inquiries to local authorities according to timescales agreed under service agreements.

Financial

(a) Unit costs of planning appeals decided by written representations not to exceed £839;

(b) recover 80% of receipts due within 8 weeks of invoice date.

Efficiency

Generate a 3% efficiency improvement in the use of running costs compared with 1997–98.

Quality

To satisfy the Advisory Panel on Standards, and thus the Secretaries of State, annually and following rigorous monitoring that the quality of the Inspectorate's work is being maintained at a high standard, with 99% of its casework free from justified complaint.

Information and Guidance

To carry out a customer survey of public satisfaction with the Inspectorate's handling of planning appeals dealt with by the written representations procedure.

Environmental Appraisals

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Government will publish policy guidance on policy appraisal and the environment. [37719]

Mr. Meacher: We are determined to ensure that environmental issues are considered in the development of all Government policies to deliver an improved and lasting quality of life. Today, we publish new guidance to remind policy makers when and how to consider potential environmental impacts as part of the appraisal of specific policies and programmes. The guidance reminds staff of the need to incorporate environmental considerations into policy appraisals where the impact on the environment might be significant, and to set out the steps that ought to be taken in doing so.

I am placing copies of the guidance in the Library.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which projects, not related to the year 2000 compliance problem, are being (a) restricted and (b) terminated in order to free information technology resources. [37484]

Angela Eagle: For DETR Central, priority projects have been identified, including existing commitments for projects already under-way and provision for Y2000 compliance work. Other projects require further work before needing an allocation of resources, but we may be able to accommodate these in the IT Investment Programme later in the year. At this early stage in the year, no projects have been specifically restricted or terminated. The IT investment programmes in the Department's Agencies are also in this position.

Asbestos

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what health consequences, expressed in terms of numbers of mesotheliomas or lung cancers in smokers and non-smokers per million persons exposed, are assumed to result from occupational exposure to chrysotile asbestos at airborne fibre concentrations of (i) 0.6, (ii) 0.5 and (iii) 0.3 fibres/millilitre for 40 hours per working week for 20 years; and if he will make a statement; [36744]

(2) what health consequences, expressed in terms of numbers of mesotheliomas or lung cancers in smokers and non-smokers per million persons exposed, are assumed to result from environmental exposure to chrysotile asbestos at airborne fibre concentrations of (i) 0.01, (ii) 0.001 and (iii) 0.0001 fibres/millilitre for 140 hours per week for (a) 10, (b) 20 and (c) 40 years; and if he will make a statement. [36745]

Angela Eagle: Whilst the risks to health of white asbestos are scientifically established, there is considerable quantitative uncertainty about the health consequences of exposure to chrysotile asbestos. This is illustrated by Health and Safety Executive (HSE) estimates shown in the following tables, based on two key occupational cohorts: the Quebec chrysotile mines, and an asbestos textile plant in Carolina. The estimates are extrapolated from observations made at very much higher exposure levels.

Average lifetime risk of lung cancer per million men exposed to chrysotile

Exposure scenario	Duration of exposure (years)	Cohort study used to estimate risk
		Textiles	Mining
Per week	10.00	500.00	25.00
140 hours per week at 0.01 f/ml	20.00	1,000.00	50.00
at 0.01 f/ml	40.00	1,750.00	90.00
40 hours per week at 0.6 f/ml	20.00	17,500.00	850.00

Average lifetime risk of mesothelioma per million men exposed to chrysotile

Exposure scenario	Duration of exposure (years)	Cohort study used to estimate risk
		Textiles	Mining
Per week	10.00	35.00	6.00
140 hours per week at 0.01 f/ml	20.00	55.00	8.00
at 0.01 f/ml	40.00	60.00	9.00
40 hours per week at 0.6 f/ml at 0.6 f/ml	20.00	900.00	125.00

The risks are average estimates from working populations with a mixture of smokers and non-smokers. Smoking does not affect the risks for mesothelioma but smokers are estimated to have a 50 per cent. higher risk of lung cancer than shown in the table and non-smokers a risk about ten times lower. Based on past smoking patterns, women's average risk will be about half the average male risk.

Risks at exposure concentrations other than those shown can be estimated pro-rata, although this may be an overestimate at very low exposures.

The environmental risk from asbestos has been examined in a report commissioned by Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions from the Medical Research Council's Institute for Environmental Health—'Fibrous Materials in the Environment'. The report identifies background ambient levels of respirable asbestos fibres may range from 0.000001 to 0.0001 f/ml. Most indoor air concentrations of asbestos are below 0.0002 f/ml which rises to around 0.0005 f/ml in buildings which contain asbestos in good condition. At these low levels of exposure, there is no significant risk of mesothelioma or lung cancer. Cigarette smoking remains the major cause of cancer.

I am pleased that Health and Safety Commission (HSC) will be issuing a consultative document on asbestos within the next four weeks proposing a wide range of additional legislation to protect workers. The current occupational exposure control limit for chrysotile is 0.5 f/ml (averaged over any continuous four hour period) and HSC propose to lower this limit to 0.3 f/ml and to impose duties on employers to ensure that exposure is controlled as far below this level as is reasonably practicable.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account the decision not to implement a total ban on the importation and use, or re-use, of chrysotile asbestos took of the relative risks to health associated with chrysotile asbestos and possible substitutes; and if he will make a statement. [36746]

Angela Eagle: The decision of the Health and Safety Commission (HSC) to delay consultation on further restrictions on the use of chrysotile asbestos was taken in the light of an interim opinion by a European Commission Scientific Committee. This Committee concluded that insufficient evidence had been provided to justify a conclusion that substitute fibres are safer than chrysotile. The Government's resolve to pursue further necessary restrictions on chrysotile asbestos remains. HSC is expediting the presentation of further scientific justification for the use of substitutes to the European Commission.

IT Staff

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the current shortfall in established information technology staff, consultant and contractor support posts within his Department; and if he will list the posts by grade indicating for each post how long it has been vacant and when it is expected to be filled. [37485]

Angela Eagle: For DETR Central, there are currently no IT posts which are unfilled, this is primarily because the merger of DOE and DOT has enabled some economies of scale in IT staff.

Most of the work involved in the development of new information systems is undertaken by commissioning IT consultancy services. We are beginning to see some signs of the industry having some difficulty in responding to the demand.

The Department's Agencies report two vacancies in total. The Vehicle Inspectorate have had one Executive Officer (EO) vacancy for three months which will be filled in May. The Planning Inspectorate have had one EO vacancy for two months which will be filled in June.

Special Waste Regulations

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the Special Waste Regulations 1996. [37720]

Mr. Meacher: The Special Waste Regulations, which came into force on 1 September 1996, implement the EC Hazardous Waste Directive (91/689/EEC) which covers the most difficult and dangerous wastes. The Regulations provide for movements of hazardous ("special") waste to be pre-notified to the Environment Agencies and to be tracked through a system of consignment notes.

With some 18 months having elapsed since these Regulations came into force, it is clear that some fine-tuning is desirable, in the light of operational experience by the Environment Agencies and of representations from industry. My Department, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office have therefore today issued a public consultation paper proposing a number of changes to the Regulations. These include certain relaxations to the procedures under which multiple loads can be moved for a single fee, designed to assist small businesses, including those involved in recycling lead acid batteries; minor changes to the format of the consignment note to assist monitoring and enforcement; and technical changes to ensure that island communities are not penalised by the fees system.

We are also proposing a small number of adjustments to the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994 (SI 1994/1056, as amended) aimed at encouraging the recovery/recycling of waste, particularly waste affected by the revised definition of 'Special waste' contained in the 1996 Special Waste Regulations.

I have placed copies of the consultation paper and association draft Regulatory Appraisal in the libraries of both Houses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Sport Governing Bodies

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list, by individual governing body, the grant-in-aid made available by the Great Britain Sports Council to governing bodies of sport for the financial years 1992–93, 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96. [34265]

Mr. Banks: Information on funding for governing bodies, paid by the then GB Sports Council in 1994–95 and 1995–96 has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Similar information for 1992–93 and 1993–94 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, information on funding by sport for these years has also been placed in the House Libraries.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the budgeted figure for expenditure under acceptances of works of art as property in lieu of inheritance tax for (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000. [36773]

Mr. Fisher: Under the arrangements announced in the Spring Budget, no acceptances in lieu will in future require expenditure by the Department. Instead, the Revenue will forgo taxes without seeking reimbursement from the Secretary of State.

At present we are aware of about £52 million of offers which are fairly advanced in the pipeline. However, the level of acceptances depends on whether offering estates wish to maintain that offer, whether Ministers agree to acceptance and whether the Commissioners of Inland Revenue accept the offered property in lieu of the capital taxes applying. Therefore this figure can be only a very broad approximation and it is difficult to give a reliable estimate of how amounts might fall into any single financial year.

Performing Arts

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the contribution of the performing arts to inward tourism into the United Kingdom. [36852]

Mr. Fisher: The performing arts in the United Kingdom are of outstanding quality, and are undoubtedly an important incentive for overseas visitors to visit the United Kingdom. In a recent survey of overseas leisure visitors to Britain, 18 per cent. of those sampled cited the performing arts as a stimulus to visit.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Equal Opportunities

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made towards achieving equality of opportunity in the Civil Service. [37893]

Dr. David Clark: I have today published two reports on equal opportunities in the Civil Service: Equal Opportunities in the Civil Service—A Progress Report 1995–97 and Equal Opportunities in the Civil Service. Data Summary 1997. Copies of both reports have been placed in the libraries of the House and will be made available on the Internet.

Against a background of falling Civil Service numbers, progress continues to be made in this important area. For example, at HEO level, the representation of women has increased to nearly 30 per cent., from 28 per cent. in 1996; ethnic minority representation at first management level, Executive Officer, has risen to 4.8 per cent. from 4.4 per cent. in 1996; and the proportion of staff with disabilities now stands at 3.8 per cent.

However, the reports counsel against complacency. They show that women are still under-represented at middle and senior management levels. Ethnic minority and disabled staff are still predominately concentrated in junior grades.

To help increase the representation of these groups at all levels in the Service, the Progress Report recommends that Departments and Agencies concentrate on the following key areas: organisational commitment; action plans; monitoring and mainstreaming.

DEFENCE

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce ethnic monitoring in the reserve forces. [38100]

Dr. Reid: My Department is fully committed to promoting within the Armed Forces an environment which is free from harassment and racial discrimination. As part of our efforts to further that commitment, we have decided to begin monitoring the ethnic origin of members of the reserve forces. Monitoring began on 1 April, and will cover all those who are in service, and all those who join the reserve forces in future. Altogether, we expect around 68,000 members of the reserve forces to be included in the survey. The Services are writing to units and individuals to invite them to take a full part in it.

The initiative we are taking underlines the commitment that the Armed Forces have made to ensure equal opportunities irrespective of race. The methodology we shall follow for monitoring the reserves is based closely on that which is already in use for the regular Armed Forces. The statistical information derived from monitoring will allow the reserve force managers to analyse recruitment, wastage and other trends; and it will enable them to develop and pursue policies which ensure that racial discrimination of any kind is eradicated from the reserves.

The reserve forces involved are principally those which recruit directly from civilian life. Specifically they are: the Royal Naval Reserve; the Royal Marines Reserve; the Territorial Army; the Royal Auxiliary Air Force; the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve (Training); the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve (University Air Squadron); and volunteers to the Royal Air Force Reserve.

Because our reserves are recruited locally, and because many of them serve part time, we do not expect the first statistics from the survey to be available until towards the end of this year. Thereafter, the information will be available quarterly.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines exist for the monitoring of ethnic minority personnel in the armed forces; and what steps are in place to ensure that monitoring practices are continually updated. [36839]

Dr. Reid: On 25 March 1998, the MOD and Commission for Racial Equality signed a Partnership Agreement, which ensures that we shall continue to work together with them for a further five years to promote racial equality practices throughout the Services. Effective Ethnic monitoring is a key part of the Agreement to ensure that no policies or practices in the Services are racially discriminatory. We are determined that the quality of our ethnic monitoring of applicants, entrants and in-Service personnel continues to be improved. As well as looking at current and future analysis for emerging trends, and ensuring that sufficient resources are put into making any necessary changes, we will be looking more closely at areas such as performance across all ethnic groups and career progression as more information becomes available.

A copy of the relevant extracts have been placed in the Library of the House.

Army Technical Support Agency

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the key targets for the Chief Executive of the Army Technical Support Agency for 1998–99. [38102]

Dr. Reid: The Chief Executive of the Army Technical Support Agency has been set the following Key Targets for 1998–99.

1. To influence equipment design by obtaining formal tasking from Project Managers/Integrated Logistic Support (ILS) Managers in influencing equipment design in at least 80% of appropriate ILS projects.

2. To recommend a 10% gross cost saving in Advanced Order Spares purchasing for appropriate non-ILS projects without reducing the equipment sustainability or availability.

3. To provide a complete and accurate answer to 92% of ad hoc inquiries within 2 working days.

4. To dispatch new and reprinted technical publications within the period from receipt of demand as follows:

a. For priority demands, 90% within 5 working days.

b. For routine demands, 90% within 24 working days.

5. To complete 90% of Operational projects and 75% of Priority A projects before the agreed target date.

6. To satisfy 90% of customers when undertaking technical projects.

7. To provide a considered response to 90% of Equipment Failure Report (or equivalent) submissions within 10 working days from receipt.

Cadet Forces

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average (a) numbers of pupils involved in and (b) cost of the Combined Cadet Force per school in the last year for which figures are available; and what estimate he has made of the percentage of a year's intake which goes on to join the regular forces. [36695]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 30 March 1998]: In FY 1996–97, 241 schools had contingents of the Combined Cadet Forces established within their premises, with 39,716 pupils who were cadets. Producing an average CCF pupil to school ratio could, however, be misleading since the size of individual contingents varies significantly.

In the same period, the Ministry of Defence allocated £6.2M to these schools in support of the Combined Cadet Forces. I regret that my Department keeps no separate records detailing the overall costs attributable to individual schools. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Whilst my Department sets no annual recruiting targets for schools, the percentage of officer entrants into the Regular Forces during FY 1996/97, who had previously been members of the Combined Cadet Forces, were: Royal Navy 26.03%, Army 49%, Royal Air Force 26.45%. From a total intake of 18,737 ratings/soldiers/airmen into the Regular Forces in FY 1996/97, 280 had former service in the CCF.

Trident

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what legal advice he has obtained on whether the UK would be in contravention of the Non-Proliferation Treaty if it were to replace or upgrade Trident warheads; [36586]

(2) if he has sought legal advice on whether the UK would be in contravention of the Non-Proliferation Treaty if it were to replace or upgrade Trident warheads. [36585]

Mr. George Robertson: There is nothing in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty to prevent the recognised nuclear powers taking steps to ensure the effectiveness of their nuclear forces. The UK has, however, no current requirement or plans for any upgrade or improvement to the Trident warhead or missile.

Guardsmen Wright and Fisher

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Mark Wright and James Fisher, currently serving life imprisonment (a) have been dismissed from the British Army and (b) receive wages or other payments from the British Army; and whether his Department has provided transport assistance to their families travelling to visit them in prison. [37239]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 31 March 1998]: Guardsmen Fisher and Wright have not been dismissed from the Army. They are not, however, entitled to any pay during the term of their imprisonment. The families of Guardsmen Fisher and Wright have their flights to Northern Ireland paid for by the Scots Guards own charitable funds but the Department does provide transport to and from the Maghaberry Prison.

Pesticides (Mental Health)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, what action he is taking to assess the work of Ron Davies of Rydon House acute psychiatric unit in Taunton, on the effects on mental health of exposure to pesticides. [36811]

Dr. Reid: I have instructed my officials to assess the implications of the work of Dr. Davies when it is published in an appropriately peer-reviewed medical or scientific journal. We have not yet seen the results of his research and continue to await publication with interest.

Dartmoor Ranges

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the figures contained in his letter of 20 March to the hon. Member for Totnes, relating to live firing on Dartmoor ranges. [37065]

Mr. Spellar: The advertised and actual number of days on which Army firing took place on the range areas of Dartmoor Training Areas for the year ending 31 December was as follows:

Range	Advertised	Actual
Okehampton	81	44
Willsworthy	129	85
Mervivale	148	98

British Beef

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries from which the supply of (a) beef and (b) sheepmeat were sourced for each year that the NAAFI held the Ministry of Defence's public-funded messing contract. [28348]

Mr. Spellar [pursuant to his reply, 9 February 1998, c. 67]: I regret the answer given was incorrect because some information is held by NAAFI although not by individual years. They have advised that approximately 30 per cent. of beef by volume was sourced from the UK with some 70 per cent. from overseas mainly from Uruguay, Brazil, Argentina, New Zealand and Australia. All lamb was sourced from overseas with approximately 70 per cent. of volume coming from New Zealand.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Freemasonry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will introduce the rules for disclosure of Masonic membership of persons involved in the criminal justice administration of England and Wales proposed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department to the Northern Ireland criminal justice administration; and if she will introduce similar rules relating to membership of the (i) Orange Order and (ii) other similar organisations. [31621]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 27 February 1998]: I shall give very careful consideration as to the applicability to Northern Ireland of the recommendations in the Home Affairs Select Committee's report, "Freemasonry in the Police and Judiciary".

Belfast International Airport

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will investigate the reasons why written terms of reference were not provided to the valuers for the privatisation valuation assignment on Belfast International Airport. [37162]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The sale of Belfast International Airport was the subject of a Public Accounts Committee hearing in December 1997. Matters relating to the valuation of Belfast International Airport were addressed at that hearing. The Government cannot comment on the sale until the Committee has reported.

Mobile Phones

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will restrict the number of mobile phone base stations that can be mounted on one (a) mast, (b) building and (c) other structures. [37098]

Mr. Paul Murphy: No. There are no plans to use planning controls to restrict the number of base stations in this way. The sharing of masts etc., reduces the overall numbers required, and their impact on the environment.

Security Measures

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals she has for changes in security measures, including emergency legislation, following a peaceful settlement in Northern Ireland. [37667]

Marjorie Mowlam: A sub-committee of the multi-party talks discussed the desire for a return to normality in Northern Ireland as soon as possible. The Government laid before the Parties a paper which set out our determination to return Northern Ireland to a situation where the police can resume normal policing duties, the Army can return to barracks and the need for emergency legislation is removed.

Others have a part to play in ensuring all in Northern Ireland can live in peace without fear of threat or violence from paramilitary groups. The Government are keen to reduce the impact of security but not until it is safe to do so. A copy of the paper, entitled "Responding to a changing security situation—the Government's Approach" has now been placed in the Library of the House.

Handguns

Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has for reforming the firearms legislation in Northern Ireland for the control of handguns. [37889]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have recently concluded a review of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 which was instigated by the previous Government in November 1995.

The purpose of the review was to take a fresh look at the law to see whether it was relevant, effective and proportionate to today's conditions. It has been a wide-ranging examination with no topic excluded. The principal objectives were to maintain rigorous safety standards and sustain public confidence in the authorities' ability to enforce the law effectively while recognising the reasonable expectations of the responsible shooting community and firearms trade. I believe that the proposals for legislative reform which I am publishing today for wider consultation will meet those objectives. Copies of the Consultation Paper have been made available in the libraries of both Houses.

On the particular issue of handgun controls, I have studied carefully the various recommendations made by Lord Cullen in his report into the terrible events at Dunblane, published in 1996. Although his Tribunal did not inquire into the control of firearms in Northern Ireland, it was only right that I should consider whether his Report contained any important lessons for the Province. I believe it does and my findings are explained at length in the Consultation Paper.

After much thought, I am not persuaded of the need to prohibit the possession and use of target handguns in Northern Ireland. Nor do I believe it would be appropriate to prohibit the possession of handguns licensed by the Chief Constable, for the personal protection of those individuals under threat of attack and their families. I realise that my decision may disappoint some people who feel strongly, as do I, about firearms control and safeguarding the public. But I would ask them and others to consider carefully the far-reaching proposals for improving firearms safety and making the law more effective which I am publishing today, and let me have their views thereon.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Family Law Act

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to implement Part II of the Family Law Act 1996; and if he will make a statement. [37939]

Mr. Hoon: The Government remain committed to implementing Part II of The Family Law Act 1996. A very extensive series of pilots testing a number of different models of information meetings will operate until at least March 1999. It would be wrong to anticipate the results of these pilots. Given the timetable for the pilots, and the inevitable time that will be needed to establish a comprehensive system once a preferred model of information meeting is decided upon, it would be safe to assume that the Lord Chancellor will be unable to implement Part II until at least the end of 1999 or even early in the year 2000.

Judgments (Enforcement)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the impact of measures set out in COM (97) 609 on domestic law. [37002]

Mr. Hoon: The European Commission's document COM (97) 609 contributes to work being carried on in the Council to make it easier for individuals and companies to enforce any Member State's civil judgments in any other Member State. The Government broadly support the principles underlying the Commission's proposed measures in part 1 of its document. If implemented, they would necessitate changes to the Brussels Convention of 1968 and the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982. Part 2 of the communication is intended to prompt debate on wider questions relating to the enforcement of judgments in the European Union, but it contains no legislative proposals. The Government will be submitting their comments before the 30 April deadline.

County Courts

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which county courts are under review for closure. [36594]

Mr. Hoon: The Lord Chancellor has agreed to public consultation on the proposed closure of Camborne and Redruth, Evesham, Hemel Hempstead, Poole and Shrewsbury county courts. Following public consultation I and the Lord Chancellor are currently considering whether to approve the closure of Holywell and Rochdale county courts. Managers in the Court Service are constantly reviewing the viability of the court network in the light of changing business needs and workload trends. Other courts may therefore be proposed for closure in the future.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those county towns in England which do not have county courts. [36595]

Mr. Hoon: The following county administrative centres do not have a county court within the town: Matlock, Dorchester and Northallerton.

SCOTLAND

Hospitals

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds will be provided following the redevelopments at (a) Law Hospital and (b) Hairmyres Hospital. [36728]

Mr. Galbraith: Law Hospital will have 613 in-patient beds (of which 336 will be acute beds) and 56 places for day surgery. Hairmyres Hospital will have 364 in-patient beds (all acute) plus 52 day surgery places.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has made of the increase in travel time from East Kilbride to hospital in the case of an obstetric emergency following the transfer of services from Bellshill Hospital to Law Hospital. [36719]

Mr. Galbraith: The increased time requirement for emergency travel is estimated to be between 2–5 minutes on average. The Scottish Ambulance Service have also agreed that rapid access to specialist medical cover will be available 24 hours a day if emergencies arise.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the cost of refurbishing and redeveloping (a) Law and (b) Hairmyres hospitals. [36727]

Mr. Galbraith: Neither hospital is suitable for refurbishment. The estimated construction costs for the new build Law and Hairmyres hospitals are £85 million and £67.5 million respectively.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about a potential increase in morbidity as a result of the relocation of obstetric services from Bellshill to Law Hospital. [36720]

Mr. Galbraith: None. However, Lanarkshire Health Board have received representations on this issue from individual obstetricians, paediatricians and midwives from Monklands and Bellshill Hospitals NHS Trust. The Board believe there is no reason to predict any increase in morbidity arising from the relocation of obstetric services.

Edinburgh Royal Infirmary

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment he has made of the limitations on the height of the new Edinburgh Royal Infirmary as a result of discoveries during the surveying undertaken there; [36722]

(2) if the site of the new Edinburgh Royal Infirmary is undermined by old mine workings. [36724]

Mr. Galbraith: No limitations on the height of the new Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh are required as a result of discoveries during surveying undertaken there. There is, however, a 3 storey height limit imposed upon the development by the planning authorities to protect sight lines from various vantage points around the site. The site of the new Royal Infirmary is not undermined by old mine workings.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the costs of building the new Edinburgh Royal Infirmary. [36726]

Mr. Galbraith: The New Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh is being provided through the Private Finance Initiative and it is estimated that the capital cost of the building at current prices is £188.5m.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the cost of the new Edinburgh Royal Infirmary on primary health care funding in Edinburgh and the Lothians. [36723]

Mr. Galbraith: The planned configuration of acute hospitals, including the new Edinburgh Royal Infirmary, in Edinburgh and the Lothians will result in an additional £10m per annum being invested in primary care and community services to improve the range and quality of services.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds are currently planned for the new Edinburgh Royal Infirmary. [36725]

Mr. Galbraith: 869.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan; [36642]

(2) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan. [36660]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 27 March 1998]: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". My right hon. Friend is considering its recommendations.

Midwives

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many trusts and health boards in Scotland have implemented the recommendation by the Management Executive of the Scottish Office that midwives should be placed on a minimum of Grade F of the clinical grading structure. [37225]

Mr. Galbraith: Current NHS in Scotland Management Executive guidance issued as NHS MEL (1995) 81 requires that

"where the nurse clinical grading structure is used and a midwife has a defined caseload of women to whom he/she gives the full range of midwifery care the grades 'F' or 'G' will normally be appropriate".

It is for employers to determine the appropriate grading in the light of local circumstances.

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that the grading of midwives in Scotland is in line with that in other parts of the United Kingdom. [37224]

Mr. Galbraith: Comparable guidance taking account of the Scottish perspective was issued in Scotland in 1995 as NHS MEL (1995) 81.

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many midwives in Scotland are currently employed on Grade D of the clinical grading structure. [37226]

Mr. Galbraith: There were 6 qualified midwives employed in the NHS in Scotland on Grade D at 30 September 1997, the latest date for which information is available centrally.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Roy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the report of the Review into Eye Transplantation and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease; and if he will make a statement. [37895]

Mr. Galbraith: Sir William Stewart submitted his report to me and my hon. Friends the Health Ministers for England, Wales and Northern Ireland on 27 February. I am grateful to him for the hard work he and his team put into the Report and for the conclusions he reached. I have placed a copy of the Report in the Library.

Sir William reviewed the circumstances surrounding the use for transplantation of eye tissue from a donor who was later found to have been suffering from the classic form of Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease. His Report clearly sets out the facts surrounding the occurrence, and makes 18 recommendations covering both specific improvements which should be made to procedures and more general issues arising from the Review. The Government welcome the recommendations and are considering them.

Scotland Bill

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he or his Ministers authorised a written briefing for the Press on the subject of the debates on the Scotland Bill in Committee on 30 March that was issued prior to those debates; and if he will place a copy of the briefing in the Library. [37505]

Mr. McLeish: I briefed the Parliamentary lobby correspondents on 30 March on the background to the debates expected to take place on the last two days of the Committee Stage of the Scotland Bill. I am placing a copy of the written briefing note in the Library.

Criminal Procedure (Intermediate Diets)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Crown Office was informed of a problem relating to the statutory basis for Intermediate Diets in Summary Criminal Procedure; and if he will place in the Library copies of the correspondence between the Crown Office and offices of the Procurators Fiscal bearing on the case of Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow), 1998 SCCR:790. [37232]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 1 April 1998]: The Crown Office was informed of the problem when the opinion of the court in Vannet v. Milligan was delivered on 12 March 1998, although it became aware of the potential problem when the decision of the court in Mackay v. Ruxton was delivered.

Communications between the Crown Office and Procurators Fiscal are confidential. However, on 19 November 1997, when the decision in Mackay v. Ruxton was announced, immediate steps were taken by the Crown to minimise any potential effect arising from it.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of cases affected by the decision in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) which have already been determined. [37235]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 1 April 1998]: On 19 November 1997, in the case of Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) 1998 JC 51, the High Court of Justiciary held that in Scotland, the fixing of an intermediate diet when a summary trial was adjourned was not what Parliament intended. In the case of PF (Glasgow) v. Milligan, decided on 12 March 1998, the court held that a Sheriff had no power, at an "unintended" intermediate diet, to adjourn the trial diet and by implication discharge a trial diet already fixed, and that the instance fell if the case was not called on the date originally fixed.

No cases are directly affected by the decision in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) but the Crown Office estimate that around 1,000 current cases are likely to be affected by the subsequent decision of the court in PF (Glasgow) v. Milligan, decided on 12 March 1998. Several thousand concluded cases may be involved as well. However, the precise number of cases which may be affected by the decision in PF (Glasgow) v. Milligan cannot be established without disproportionate costs.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of those cases affected by the decision in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) which have already been determined (a) are outside the time limit for appealing by way of Stated Case in terms of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 section 176 and (b) have been affected by undue delay as currently understood where a Bill of Suspension might otherwise be brought; and what action the Crown will take in response to any appeal in respect of those cases. [37236]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 1 April 1998]: No cases are directly affected by the decision in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) but it has been estimated that several thousand cases may be affected by the subsequent decision of the court in the case of PF (Glasgow) v. Milligan, decided on 12 March 1998.

Any application for stated case must be lodged within seven days of the final determination of the case, although there is provision for the time limit to be extended by the High Court of Justiciary.

There is no time limit for bringing an appeal by Bill of Suspension, although delay in doing so may result in the appeal being refused on the ground of acquiescence. There is some doubt however whether such delay would be a bar to the bringing of an appeal based on fundamental nullity of the proceedings.

The Crown will consider the merits of any appeal brought.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many of those cases affected by the decision in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) convictions followed upon pleas of guilty. [37237]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 1 April 1998]: No cases are affected by the decision in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) but the Crown Office estimate that up to 1,000 current cases may be affected by the court's subsequent decision in the case of PF (Glasgow) v. Milligan, decided on 12 March 1998. Several thousand concluded cases may be involved as well. However, the precise number of cases which may be affected by the decision in PF (Glasgow) v. Milligan cannot be established without disproportionate costs. Accordingly it has not been possible to establish how many of the affected cases involved convictions following upon pleas of guilty.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the consequences of the judgments in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow), 1998, SCCR:790 and PF (Glasgow) v. Milligan, unreported; and if he will list the categories of offence affected by the problem identified in these judgments. [37233]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 1 April 1998]: The judgments may affect any crime prosecuted on summary complaint, including: assault; sexual crimes; dishonesty; drugs offences; and driving offences including disqualified dangerous and drunk driving.

The hon. Member will be aware that a Bill was introduced to the House yesterday in order to address the implications of the High Court's judgments.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the number of cases affected by the decision in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) which have not yet been determined in (a) the district courts and (b) the sheriff courts; what percentage involve (i) statutory offences and (ii) common law offences; and in respect of those involving statutory offences, in how many of them is the Crown time-barred from raising fresh complaints. [37234]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 1 April 1998]: No cases are directly affected by the decision in Mackay v. PF (Linlithgow) but the Crown Office estimate that up to 1,000 current cases may be affected by the court's subsequent decision in the case of PF (Glasgow) v. Milligan, unreported.

It is not possible however to establish precise figures by reference to court or offence, without disproportionate costs.

In some cases affected it may be possible for the Crown to bring fresh proceedings. The extent to which the Crown will do so may depend on any time-bar which applies to the individual charges. For the reason given, no figures are available for the number of cases in which the Crown would be time-barred from raising fresh complaints.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Attorney-General when the Glidewell report on the Crown Prosecution Service is to be published; what is the cost to the CPS of the retention of Crown Communications to represent that service; and if he will make a statement. [37710]

The Attorney-General: Sir Iain Glidewell was unable to finalise his report in March as he had hoped. He informs me that he has a small amount of further work to complete but finalisation will be dependent largely on the time taken to complete the necessary consultation.

The Crown Prosecution Service has explored the use of suitable consultants to assist with internal communications as part of the change management associated with implementation of those recommendations of the CPS Review Team which are accepted by the Government. Crown Business Communication Ltd. have been identified as the most suitable but no contract has yet been signed and there is no commitment to any specific expenditure. The extent and value of any work which that company may be asked to undertake will be dependent on decisions to be taken in the light of the report of the CPS review team once it is received.

Prosecution Terminations

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance is given to judges for dealing with applications to terminate prosecution cases on the basis that the lapse of time since the alleged offence was such that it would not be possible to have a fair trial. [36942]

Mr. Hoon: There has been no such guidance issued to judges.

TREASURY

Gaming Duty

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount was received by the Treasury from taxes and duties on the casino industry in the last year for which figures are available. [36826]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 31 March 1998]: The level of revenue in 1997 from Gaming duty was £90 million. Separate figures are not available for other taxes such as VAT and Corporation tax.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the top rate of gaming duty is in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Belgium, (e) the Netherlands and (f) the Republic of Ireland. [36186]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 25 March 1998]: Gaming Duty is not levied in exactly the same way in each of these countries but information, taken mainly from the latest version of the "Inventory of Taxes levied in the Member States of the European Union" (16th Edition), shows that, at 1 January 1996, the situation was as follows:

(a) In the United Kingdom, the highest current rate of gaming duty is 33¼ per cent.

(b) In France, the takings of gambling clubs and houses are subject to a progressive rate on their annual takings. The rates are not specified, but previous information suggests that the top rate has been 80 per cent.

(c) In Germany, bets on the results of horse and greyhound races, lotteries, bingo and similar games of chance and football pools are subject to a tax on the amount of the bets or prizes of 16¾ per cent. Separate information suggests that this has been supplemented by a special casino fee charged at up to 80 per cent. of gross gaming yield.

(d) In Belgium, the maximum rate on the gross gaming yield is 40 per cent., except in the Flemish community where it is 44 per cent.

(e) In the Netherlands, a duty of 33¼ per cent. is levied on all the gross gaming winnings of a casino.

(f) Casinos are prohibited in the Republic of Ireland.

Continence Products

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 671, concerning the VAT Tribunal and continence products, if he will list (a) the cases when VAT relief applied and (b) the cases where VAT relief did not apply. [37168]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 April 1998]: The VAT Tribunal in Molnlycke Ltd. examined four contracts. It decided that supplies of continence products under the contracts with Aylesbury Vale Community Health Care Trust and Chester and Halton Community NHS Trust for patients in their own homes were zero-rated. However, it ruled that supplies of those goods for residents under the contract with Westgate House Nursing Home and for the majority of patients of Edinburgh Healthcare NHS Trust were standard-rated.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 671, concerning the VAT Tribunal decision in respect of continence products, for what reasons he decided to reimpose VAT in each case where the tribunal had ruled that relief should apply. [37169]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 1 April 1998]: The VAT relief for continence products was used by several NHS Trusts, which entered into contractual arrangements with a third party to gain a tax advantage. As NHS Trusts are funded for the VAT they cannot recover, the tax advantage amounted to double funding. We therefore introduced a change of law to restore the status quo.

Government Offices

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will initiate a study on the transfer of Government offices from London. [35817]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 1 April 1998]: There are no plans for such a study. The Government's policy on relocation is not centrally directed. The respective departmental minister will need to evaluate each decision on its merits considering best value for money, operational efficiency, impact on local labour markets and available resources.

Tax Credits

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in estimating the cost to the Exchequer of the proposed children's tax credit, what was the assumed take-up rate. [36249]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him and the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 1 April 1998, Official Report, column 554.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of extra people who will be persuaded in each year to 2002 to move from dependency on out of work benefits into jobs by the changes in family credit/working families tax credit announced in the Budget. [36367]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The Government expect that their programme of tax and benefit reform to make work pay will, like their New Deals, help people move off welfare and into work.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the value of working families tax credit which will be paid direct to non-employed mothers. [36391]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: No such estimate has been made. Couples will have the choice whether the Working Families Tax Credit is paid to the man or the woman.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the extra costs incurred in the introduction of the disabled person's tax credit. [36410]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: Additional annual costs are likely to be £7 million to £10 million by the years 2001/2002. These costs reflect the higher earnings thresholds and lower tapers of the Disabled Person's Tax Credit, as well as the expected increase in recipients.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there will be a childcare tax credit within the disabled person's tax credit. [36411]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: Yes.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the disability working allowance will cease to be paid. [36409]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: When it is replaced by the Disabled Person's Tax Credit in October 1999.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what level the disabled person's tax credit will be paid. [36414]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The rates at which the Disabled Person's Tax Credit will be paid will be the same as for the Disability Working Allowance (DWA) which it will replace in October 1999. Where it differs is in having higher earnings thresholds of £70 for a single person and £90 for a couple, compared with £57.85 and £77.15 respectively in the DWA; a lower taper of 55 per cent. compared with 70 per cent. for the DWA; and in the childcare credit that replaces the present disregard, which will meet 70 per cent. of childcare costs up to £100 for families with one child and £150 for families with two or more children.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of disabled people expected to benefit from the new disabled person's tax credit. [36415]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: The Disabled Person's Tax Credit will benefit the 14,000 people currently receiving Disability Working Allowance. In addition, we would expect that the changes to the structure of the provision will cause the caseload to increase by a further 10 per cent. to 15 per cent.

However, we would expect this and the New Deal for disabled people will enable many more sick and disabled people to move into work.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to introduce the disabled person's tax credit. [36413]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 March 1998]: October 1999.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the expenditure on the (a) working families tax credit, (b) childcare tax credit, (c) disabled persons' tax credit, and (d) other newly introduced tax credits in (i)1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000, (iii) 2000–01, (iv) 2001–02 and (v) 2002–03; and for each of these years, what is the related reduction in other social security expenditure as a consequence of the introduction of the new tax credits. [36451]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Estimates of the net Exchequer cost of the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Person's Tax Credit were given in lines one and five of Table C.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report (HC620). These estimates take account of the ending of Family Credit. The cost of the childcare tax credit within the WFTC was given in a reply to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 1 April 1998, Official Report, column 554.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the numbers of (a) new recipients of social security benefits and (b) new recipients of tax credits who were not previously claiming family credit in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000, (iii) 2000–01 and (iv) 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [36376]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Estimates of the caseload for the various Social Security benefits will appear in the Department of Social Security's departmental report on 7 April.

The Government estimate that, in its first full year of operation (2000–01), about 400 thousand more families will be entitled to the Working Families Tax Credit that were entitled to Family Credit.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlie the additional net costs of the working families tax credit compared to family credit for (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01; and if he will make a statement. [36395]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The relevant factors are the higher withdrawal threshold, the lower taper, the increase in the child tax credits and the increase in the amount of support for childcare provided by the childcare tax credit.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update table 1.2 in the Red Book allowing for the Control Total for public spending to grow at 0.75 per cent. in real terms after 1998–99. [36449]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The information requested for the PSBR, the GGFD and the Current Balance—all based on the 1998 Budget—can be calculated from Section A of table B5 in the Financial Statement and Budget Report and the projections for money GDP contained in table B1. The effects of Budget measures and the effect of forecasting changes are unchanged by the assumption. Therefore, the PSBR in the 1997 Budget can be derived as the residual.

Public Sector (Current Balance)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cyclically adjusted public sector current balance in cash terms for (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01, (d) 2001–02 and (e) 2002–03. [36453]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The information requested can be calculated from the estimates of the cyclically adjusted public sector current balance as a percentage of GDP in table B6 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report and the projections of money GDP in table B1.

Green Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) on what date he plans to introduce a green commuting plan; [36669]

(2) what specific changes to departmental transport arrangements have to date been implemented following the receipt of the Green Transport Plan. [36654]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 March 1998]: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions circulated to all Departments in September last year a "Guide to Green Transport Plans". The Treasury is considering how to respond to its recommendations and is currently preparing draft green transport plans.

Marginal Deduction Rates

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to improve work incentives by tackling high marginal deduction rates resulting from housing support mechanisms; and if he will make a statement. [36377]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The Budget tackled high marginal reduction rates faced by people receiving Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit in two ways. First, it will change disregards so as to remove instances where people could be worse off if they increased their earnings. Second, the Working Families Tax Credit will mean that 50 thousand families will no longer face penal marginal rates as a result of being on both the WFTC taper and Housing Benefit taper. And all people on the Family Credit taper will find that their return from working increases by one half: half a million families will see the return from increase in their earnings rise by one-half.

Social Security Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the planned social security expenditure as a percentage of GDP in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000 and (e) 2000–01, on the basis of (i) the pre-Budget estimates and (ii) the post Budget estimates, assuming that expenditure on the tax credits introduced in the Budget counts against social security spending; and if he will make a statement. [36394]

Mr. Darling [holding answer 30 March 1998]: Total DSS expenditure in 1996–97 was equivalent to 12 per cent of GDP. Forecasts for DSS expenditure published in the recent Financial Statement and Budget Report for 1997–98 and 1998–99 show that this ratio is expected to fall to 11½ per cent. in both years. The effect on these figures of policies announced in the Budget is negligible.

Spending plans for future years will be announced as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the percentage of the total revenue from the windfall tax which will be spent on the New Deal for the young unemployed over the period 1997 to 2002; and if he will make a statement. [36454]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The allocation of the revenue from the windfall tax is set out in the Financial Statement and Budget Report, March 1998 (House of Commons No 620). Table 3.1: Funding Welfare to Work indicates that, over the period 1997 to 2002, £2.62 billion is allocated to the New Deal for the young unemployed programme. This represents just over 50 per cent. of the £5.2 billion expected revenue from the windfall tax.

Individual Savings Accounts

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account has been taken of recent rulings outlawing the pre-authorisation of financial products by the EU in the Government's proposals for a voluntary benchmarking system of life insurance-based savings products within the ISA. [36800]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The prohibition in the Third Life Directive will not apply since the proposed benchmark standards will be voluntary and will not involve either prior approval or systematic notification of insurance ISAs before they can be marketed. The Treasury will issue a consultation document on benchmarking ISAs in the next few weeks.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment has been made of the cost to the finance industry of new computer systems required to deal with the new ISA product from April 1999. [36776]

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson [holding answer 30 March 1998]: As stated in Budget Press Release, Inland Revenue 2, published on 17 March, a compliance cost assessment will be published when draft regulations for the new account are issued for consultation around the beginning of May.

Company Cars

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to begin consultation on his proposals for reforming company car tax; what form the consultation will take; and if he will make a statement. [37287]

Dawn Primarolo: People are invited (Budget 98 Press Release Inland Revenue 6) to send comments to the Inland Revenue on the case for replacing the existing business mileage discounts with discounts for driving fewer private miles in company cars. It would be helpful if they could send in initial views by around the end of April. In the light of the views expressed and proposals in the forthcoming Integrated Transport White Paper, we will then decide how to proceed.

Resuscitation Training Models

Mr. Green: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue will be raised by the levying of VAT on resuscitation training models in 1998–99. [36603]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 March 1998]: Resuscitation training models have been subject to the standard rate of VAT since the introduction of the tax in 1973. Customs and Excise are unable to identify separately the VAT yield from these particular goods.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was derived from VAT on resuscitation dummies in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [37268]

Dawn Primarolo: The standard-rated status of resuscitation training models has remained unchanged since the introduction of VAT. Customs are unable to identify the VAT yield of these particular goods.

Fuel Tax (Charities)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will exempt charitable organisations offering door-to-door transport services to people with extra mobility needs, operating under section 19 licences, from fuel tax increases. [36591]

Dawn Primarolo: The tax on road fuel is charged on a broad base with no exemptions for particular user groups or individuals. It would not be appropriate to exempt charitable organisations.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of fuel tax increases on charitable organisations, operating under section 19 licences, offering door-to-door transport services to people with extra mobility needs. [36590]

Dawn Primarolo: No such assessment of the effect of fuel tax increases on charitable organisations has been made.

Energy Efficiency

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the VAT reduction on energy saving materials for use in certain schemes, announced in the Budget, applies to energy efficiency schemes for social housing provided under the Electricity Regulator's Standards of Performance Initiative. [37205]

Dawn Primarolo: Yes. To the extent that 'Standards of Performance' moneys are used, through targeted grant funding schemes, to pay for the installation of certain energy efficiency measures in the homes of the less well off, the relief will apply.

Environmental Green Book

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral answer from the Financial Secretary of 10 July 1997, Official Report, column 1062, when he intends to publish an environmental green book setting out the impact of policy changes contained in the financial Red Book. [36400]

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a green book in respect of the Budget; and if he will make a statement. [36983]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 March 1998]: The Financial Statement and Budget Report, released on 17 March, contains an environmental assessment of the Budget measures which will have a significant effect on the environment. The inclusion of the assessment within the Financial Statement and Budget Report demonstrates the Government's commitment to put the environment at the heart of Government policy. The assessment shows that the Budget measures will help to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases and improve local air quality.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what actions he will propose to the EU Meeting of Ministers in Birmingham in May to relieve the heavily indebted poor countries of their debt by the year 2000. [37090]

Mrs. Liddell: At the G8 summit in Birmingham in May, the Government will promote the speedy and effective implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative along the lines that the Chancellor set out in his Mauritius Mandate statement last September.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the £5 million reporting figure for acceptances of works of art as property in lieu of inheritance tax is subject to the 1984 Gowrie Agreement that no figure should be treated as a limit or a target. [36772]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have not set any limit or target for acceptances in lieu.

Air Quality

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to page 78 of the Red Book what estimate he has made of (a) the reduction in greenhouse gas emissions which will result from the reduced VAT rate on the installation of energy saving materials under certain grant schemes and (b) the impact on local air quality. [36857]

Dawn Primarolo: Our reduced VAT rate relief for energy saving materials is primarily a social measure, allowing less well-off people to stay warmer. Nevertheless, the measure will have small environmental impact.

Any estimate of environmental impact is subject to significant margins of uncertainty, but the likely impact is that between about 3,000 and 7,000 tonnes of carbon will be saved each year, assuming that 40,000 extra households have basic energy efficiency measures undertaken as a result of this new relief. By the year 2010, the total annual carbon saving will be between about 35,000 tonnes and 80,000 tonnes.

This measure is not aimed at improving local air quality, but there may be some small benefit as a result of lower fuel consumption. A range of other measures in the Budget will have a much greater impact in terms of local air quality—for example, the duty rises for standard diesel, and vehicle excise duty discounts for clean lorries and buses.

National Savings

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about National Savings. [37937]

Mrs. Liddell: National Savings, which has a key role in helping to fund the Government's borrowing requirements as efficiently as possible, has been carrying out a wide ranging programme to modernise the organisation against a background of a fast-moving and highly competitive retail savings market. This has included the evaluation of a public-private partnership for back office services delivery. After detailed consideration and discussion with those involved, I have today given National Savings Board the authority to proceed to the Invitation To Negotiate stage in the process. From a list of four companies who responded to the Information Memorandum, the two companies who have been shortlisted to the next stage are Siemens and EDS.

I do not expect to make a decision as to whether to conclude a public-private partnership, and if so with which bidder, until some time later in the year. My decision will be based on value for money and will also bear closely in mind the best interests of customers and of National Savings staff.

Vocational Training

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he plans to make for the inspection of Government-funded vocational training and the Careers Service. [37661]

Mr. Hain: The Government will shortly be proposing new clauses for the Teaching and Higher Education Bill which would extend the functions of the Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools (OHMCI) to include inspection of vocational training and the careers service in Wales.

We wish to make use of OHMCI's reputation for quality and independence to bring to the inspection of Government-funded training the same rigour that applies to education. This is in line with the Government's broader strategy to promote standards of post-16 education and training. OHMCI already carries out inspections of further education colleges in Wales and, given the links between work-based vocational training and that carried out in colleges, it makes sense for the same body to arrange the inspection of both aspects. As for schools and colleges, the purpose of inspection is to raise standards, stimulate the improvement of training delivery, generate more openness and transparency in provision and offer more informed customer choice.

The extension of OHMCI's remit to cover the careers service would streamline arrangements and end the current arbitrary division of inspection responsibilities between careers education carried out in schools and colleges and the work of the careers service. It is also in line with the Welsh Office's objective of achieving greater rationalisation and co-operation between all education, training and careers providers.

We envisage a non-statutory framework of inspection implemented in both cases through contracts with the organisations to be inspected; and, if the legislation is enacted, we will be consulting with those involved prior to implementation.

Lifelong Learning

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his plans for lifelong learning in Wales. [37662]

Mr. Hain: We have today published 'Learning Is For Everyone', our Green Paper for Wales on lifelong learning. The Green Paper will invite comment, and stimulate debate, on the Government's challenging agenda for learning post-16 in Wales.

Unemployment (Alyn and Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of (a) male and (b) female (i) long-term and (ii) young unemployed in the constituency of Alyn and Deeside. [36682]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Number

	[1]Long-term unemployment	[2]Youth unemployment
Male	278	291
Female	40	131

[1] Claimant unemployed for more than 52 weeks
[2] Unemployed claimants under the age of 25

Low Pay Commission

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what evidence has been submitted by his Department to the Low Pay Commission; and if he will make a statement. [36461]

Mr. Hain: The Government's evidence to the Low Pay Commission was published on 30 January. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of a minimum wage in Wales. [36463]

Mr. Hain: The National Minimum Wage will benefit low paid workers and prevent them from being exploited; it will be especially advantageous in Wales where low pay is widespread.

New Deal (Local Education Authorities)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways he expects local education authorities in Wales to participate in the New Deal. [36680]

Mr. Hain: Local Education Authorities are actively involved in the New Deal Strategic Partnerships established in all Employment Service Districts in Wales. These partnerships are planning the delivery of the New Deal for young people to meet the needs of local communities and will also have an important role in monitoring its implementation and in identifying and disseminating good practice.

The Local Education Authorities in Wales have been involved in considering the arrangements for the Full-time Training and Education Option and have been particularly helpful in bringing together the quality providers required to meet the needs of the more disadvantaged New Deal participants.

This is another example of how the New Deal is an advancement on previous Government schemes—partnership at every level, with each collaborator bringing their own expertise to the table to ensure that our young unemployed people get the high quality opportunities they deserve.

Housing Development (Brownfield Sites)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many brownfield sites he has identified in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [36527]

Mr. Win Griffiths: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, Planning Guidance (Wales): Planning Policy, May 1996, makes clear that it is for local planning authorities to take account of the scope and potential for rehabilitation, conversion, clearance and redevelopment of land in their areas. In particular, local authorities should take account of the contribution reclaimable or reclaimed urban land can make to the overall provision of land for housing. Local authorities are able to identify suitable sites via the development plan process.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was allocated to Wales from the EU's structural funds in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [36460]

Mr. Hain: The information is not held in the annualised form requested. However, the overall amount allocated for combined structural fund programmes (ERDF, ESF and, where appropriate, EAGGF and FIFG) in Wales covering the period since 1990 is £793.7 million. The breakdown between the programmes is as follows:

£ million

Programme	Allocation
1987–91
Dyfed Gwynedd Powys Integrated Development Operation	83.2
1989–91
Clwyd Integrated Development Operation	23.6
Industrial South Wales Integrated Operations Programme	71.6
1990–93
Rechar 1 Programme for Industrial South Wales	21.7

SMEs Programme for Wales	1.6
Urban Programme	3.9
1997–99
Industrial South Wales Single Programming Document 1997–99	175
Total:	793.7

[1] The grant allocation of some £16 million for Konver funding was made at the UK level. Wales received £0.8 million in grant.
[2] The grant allocation of some £4.4 million for Retex funding was made at the UK level. Wales received £0.5 million in grant.

In the case of the national ESF Programmes, such as Objective 3 and the Human Resource Community Initiatives, which have either hitherto been, or continue to remain, the sole responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, I have requested the information and will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

Football Association of Wales

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to provide public money to support the work of the Football Association of Wales; and if he will make a statement. [36679]

Mr. Ron Davies: Central Government funding for sport is channelled through the Sports Council for Wales. In 1997–98, the Sports Council's grant to the Football Association of Wales is £48,477. This will increase to £52,727 in 1998–99.

Football is also benefiting greatly from the National Lottery. Since the Sports Council began distributing funds in 1995, over £1.9 million has been awarded to 26 community-based schemes throughout Wales.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to support the work of the Football Association of Wales Football in the Community Charitable Trust in the future; and if he will make a statement. [36678]

Mr. Ron Davies: None. Welsh Office support for sport is channelled through the Sports Council for Wales, who are better placed to decide priorities for funding.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial provisions he will make to assist the Football Association of Wales to complete the works required by the Taylor report in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [36676]

Mr. Ron Davies: The Welsh Office has no funds available to complete Taylor-related work in Wales. Wales's three Football League clubs, will, however, be able to apply to the Football Trust for funding to assist them in implementing the recommendations of the Taylor Report.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what public money was given in 1997–98 and in each of the three previous years to the Football Association of Wales to support the work of the Football Association of Wales Football in the Community Charitable Trust; and if he will make a statement. [36677]

Mr. Ron Davies: None.

Dental Services

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce bursaries for dental students on condition that such students agree to provide NHS services to areas of need for a set period after they have qualified; and if he will make a statement. [36675]

Mr. Win Griffiths: No. Such an arrangement would be highly speculative and difficult to enforce. The Department continues to make available generous financial support for dentists establishing or expanding practices in areas of need in Wales and 61 grants have already been made.

Road Improvements

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much his Department will spend on road improvements in Wales during the next year; and if he will make a statement. [37455]

Mr. Hain: Plans for expenditure on roads and transport in 1998–99 will be included in the Welsh Office's Departmental Report to be published shortly. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library of the House. Details of the strategy for and role of the Welsh trunk road programme will be included in the report on the Welsh Trunk Roads Review to be published later this year.

Crickhowell House

Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 20 March 1998, Official Report, column 734, if he will make a statement on the contract let to Gooch and Wagstaff; if it was (a) advertised and (b) let by competitive tender; what part Gooch and Wagstaff played in advising his predecessor on the original lease of Crickhowell House; what is the approximate value of the contract; and which company has been awarded the other contract. [37468]

Mr. Ron Davies: Gooch & Wagstaff were selected following a limited external competition where 4 specialist firms were invited to submit bids to provide independent professional property advice in respect of the 2 sites shortlisted for the National Assembly for Wales. They were selected because of their specialist knowledge, their previous experience with PFI schemes and their fee structure which offered the best value for money. The value of their contract will depend upon the time spent preparing their report, but is not expected to exceed £25,000.

Gooch & Wagstaff were previously appointed by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority (WHCSA) in 1991 to advise WHCSA and to negotiate with Grosvenor Waterside the original lease of Crickhowell House.

In addition to Gooch & Wagstaff, AYH Partnership, Chartered Surveyors have been appointed to review the likely construction costs for both options.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Public Opinion Research

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent public opinion surveys the Government have carried out into public perceptions of EU membership; what organisation conducted them; how much they cost; how large in each case was the sample size; what was the date of the field work; if he will place a copy of the findings in the Library; and what further surveys he plans to undertake. [25332]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 26 January 1998]: We commissioned a survey on attitudes to Europe in November 1997. The contract was won by GGC/NOP following a tender process. The cost was between £20,000 and £30,000. The fieldwork was conducted from 12 to 21 December. The sample size was 1,001 people. A copy of the results have been placed in the libraries of the House. There are at present no plans to repeat the survey, though a repeat is not ruled out.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what expenditure has been incurred by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies (a) in 1996–97 and (b) since 1 May 1997 on (i) opinion polling, (ii) focus groups and (iii) other forms of market research; if he will list the surveys commissioned and the purpose of each; and if he will make a statement. [26660]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 5 February 1998]:

Foreign and Commonwealth Office

	1996–97	Since 1 May 1997
Opinion polling	[1,2]16,000	[3]26,000 (plus VAT)
Focus groups	—	—
Other market research	[4,5,6]30,000	—

[1] Survey of Canadian attitudes to the UK. For public diplomacy strategy.
[2] Survey of Mexican business attitudes to the UK. For export promotion and inward investment strategy.
[3] Survey to get a snapshot of attitudes in the UK towards the EU and current EU issues in the context of the UK's EU Presidency.
[4] To assess the coverage and effectiveness of the "UK Today" film series.
[5] To assess the coverage and effectiveness of the London Correspondents Service.
[6] To assess the UK image in India.

The FCO's agency incurred no expenditure of this type in the periods in question. One FCO NDPB spent £2,056 in 1996–97 and £4,112 (est.) since 1 May 1997 on other market research in the normal course of business.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many contracts for public opinion research his Department has awarded since 1 May; if he will indicate the (a) purpose, (b) cost, (c) value and (d) duration of each contract; and which companies (i) bid for and (ii) were awarded each contract. [28875]

Mr. Fatchett [holding answer 10 February 1998]: We have awarded one contract for public opinion research since 1 May 1997. Its purpose was to survey attitudes in the UK towards the EU and current EU issues in the context of the UK's EU Presidency.

The cost was £26,000 excluding VAT. The results will contribute to the formulation of policy. The contract was for a single round of polling which was carried out between 12 and 21 December 1997.

Four companies were invited to bid for the research: MORI, RSGB (Research Services of Great Britain) GGC/NOP, (Gould, Greenberg, Carville/National Opinion Poll) and BMRB (British Management Research Bureau). The contract was awarded to GGC/NOP.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that he and his Ministers personally read the letters sent to them by hon. Members on constituency matters. [27671]

Mr. Robin Cook: It has been my policy and that of other FCO Ministers to read letters from hon. Members on constituency matters and that will remain the case. The exception is visa matters, where aside from particularly sensitive cases, the practice is and has been for replies to be sent by officials.

People's Europe Project

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the criteria for the issuing of invitations to attend the People's Europe Conference in June; if he will list the (a) organisations and (b) individuals approached to contribute to the Executive Committee; if he will list those invited to speak to date; and what measures are being taken to ensure a balanced variety of viewpoints amongst those participating. [37095]

Mr. Doug Henderson: It is the intention to invite representatives of a wide range of civic society from EU and associated countries, including NGOs, small and medium enterprises, local government, voluntary organisations, trade unions, youth groups and the public. The Executive Committee includes representatives of the CBI SME Unit, the TUC, Local Government International Bureau, National Council for Voluntary Organisations, European Movement, Chatham House, Green Alliance and the office staff. A wide range of speakers from across Europe have been invited. The organisers are seeking to ensure a variety of viewpoints and backgrounds are represented, as well as to ensure geographical balance. They have sought contributions to the event from a wide range of organisations and the main UK political parties, which are represented on the Conference's Advisory Committee.

Convention Against Torture

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent signing by Bahrain of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. [37716]

Mr. Fatchett: We welcome the news of any country ratifying the core human rights instruments. The recent ratification of the Convention Against Torture by the State of Bahrain is to be welcomed. We look forward to continued improvements in human rights in Bahrain. We have indicated to the Government of Bahrain that we will assist them, in whatever way possible, to achieve this objective.

EU General Affairs Council

Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the outcome of the General Affairs Council held on 30 and 31 March in Brussels. [37717]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The A Points and EP Resolutions were approved.

The morning of 30 March was devoted to the launch of the Accession Process with the 11 candidates. The meeting demonstrated the all-inclusive nature of enlargement.

In parallel, EU trade ministers discussed preparations for the meeting in Geneva of WTO ministers.

On Agenda 2000, President Santer presented the draft regulations published on 18 March. The Foreign Secretary outlined UK Presidency plans for handling the Agenda 2000 package before Cardiff. The 27 April General Affairs Council will consider the proposals in more detail.

The Council discussed the Middle East Peace Process and endorsed the approach which the President of the Council adopted during his visit to the region. Ministers looked forward to the visit of the Prime Minister in April. The Council agreed to the publication of the Executive Summary of the Settlements Watch for the period September to December 1997, drawn up by EU Missions in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv. The Council reiterated its concern at the continued deadlock in the Peace Process and reaffirmed the EU's determination to play a full part in any constructive new initiative: it hoped the US would soon come forward with proposals as a basis for renewed negotiations.

The Council had a further discussion on the enhancement of political contacts with Iran and agreed that the EU should renew dialogue with Iran on the basis of the 23 February General Affairs Council Conclusions, that is to say a comprehensive dialogue covering both areas of mutual interest and of concern. The Council invited the Presidency to liaise with the Iranian government over the arrangements for the first meeting.

The Council reviewed implementation of the Action plan dealing with migrants from Iraq and the neighbouring region. Ministers agreed that this was proceeding satisfactorily.

There was support from within the EU for the contact group stance on Kosovo. Partners are clear that the key is for Belgrade to open an effective dialogue on the status of Kosovo with the Albanian community. The Council also reaffirmed its view that Croatia must do more to comply with its international obligations.

The Council considered a Presidency report on the progress made in preparing a draft mandate for negotiations of a successor to the Lomé Convention. Discussion focused on the trade issues. It was agreed that the ultimate objective should be the progressive integration of ACP states into the world economy and their full participation in a liberalised trading system. Further work was needed on the new trade arrangements, which should at least maintain current market access for the ACP and be WTO-compatible. The trade regime for Least Developed Countries should be improved in accordance with Council Conclusions of 2 June 1997.

The Commission reported on the state of negotiations with South Africa on a Trade and Co-operation Agreement. The Council noted the progress made at the last negotiating round in March and expressed the wish to complete negotiations soon. The Council invited the Commission to report back after the next negotiating round this month.

The Council took note of a presentation by Sir Leon Brittan of the Commission's Communication on the New Transatlantic Marketplace. COREPER will examine the Communication and report to a future meeting of the General Affairs Council.

The Presidency reported on the state of preparations for the second Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM 2) to be held in London on 3–4 April. The Presidency also informed partners of preparations for the first EU/China Summit which will be held on 2 April.

The General Affairs Council agreed, based on a UK Presidency paper, that the new CFSP Policy Planning and Early Warning Unit should concentrate on forward planning, including crisis prediction and policy planning aspects of conflict prevention and produce policy options for decision by Member States in the Council. Provision has been made for a staff of up to 20, most of whom will be secondees from Member State Foreign Ministries. There will also be one Commission and one WEU secondee. HMG is thus delivering on our Presidency objective of taking forward implementation of the new CFSP structures agreed at Amsterdam.

The Council agreed that Ministers representing Troika should visit the Great Lakes region to assess the current situation and discuss with regional leaders the contribution the EU can make. The Council agreed a new common position on Rwanda setting out the criteria on which the EU will base the major contribution it makes to international support for reconstruction and reconciliation in Rwanda. The Council reiterated EU support for efforts by regional states neighbouring Burundi to promote political dialogue. Such a dialogue is the only basis for achieving a durable solution to Burundi's problems.

There was a discussion of recent developments in Russia.

On the morning of 31 March the UK chaired six individual Inter Governmental Conferences to open accession negotiations with Cyprus, Hungary, Poland, Estonia, the Czech Republic and Slovenia.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration and Nationality Directorate Complaints Audit Committee

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on changes in the membership of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate Complaints Audit Committee. [37894]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Mr. Arden Bhattacharya has been appointed as the new chair to the Complaints Audit Committee to succeed Miss Diana Rookledge who retired at the end of March. Mrs. Janet Whitaker has been appointed as a member to succeed Mr. Karamjit Singh who left the Committee to take up another appointment. They join Mr. Blair Greaves whose appointment runs until the end of this year.

Prime Minister (Security)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the alleged breach of the Prime Minister's security reported in The Sunday Times on 29 March. [37896]

Mr. Straw: The planning application regarding my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's home contained details which should not have been made public for security reasons. When we were alerted to the situation, I acted immediately to ensure that such details were no longer accessible.

The security arrangements at my right hon. Friend's home have been very thoroughly tested and are fully effective.

When major changes to the homes of public figures are planned on security grounds, it is important that local residents who may be inconvenienced by building work are properly consulted so that their concerns can be taken into account. However, a balance needs to be struck between ensuring that local people have their say about major changes to any property and ensuring that the security of public figures is not compromised.

The Home Office, the Security Facilities Executive (SAFE) and Sedgefield Borough Council acted in good faith but the security implications of the planning documents were not fully identified and acted upon. The Home Office and SAFE have introduced new procedures to ensure that this cannot happen in any future case. In addition, other planning authorities which have similar residences have been contacted to ensure that any such risks to security may be avoided.

Campsfield House Detention Centre

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the contract specification for the running of Campsfield House Immigration Detention Centre. [37450]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The contract specification for the running of Campsfield House Detention Centre is Commercial in Confidence. I regret that it cannot be disclosed.

Vivisection

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the breeding of cats at Hillgrove Farm, Witney, Oxfordshire, for the vivisection industry. [37254]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 19 January 1998, Official Report, column 383 and to the replies I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) on 3 March 1998, Official Report, column 518.

I have nothing to add to those replies at this time.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of seizures of amphetamines involved amounts of (a) 200 mg or under, (b) 200 to 500 mg, (c) 500 mg to 1 gram, (d) 1 to 5 grams, (e) 5 to 10 grams, (f) 10 to 50 grams, (g) 50 to 300 grams, (h) 300 grams to 1 kg, (i) 1 kg to 10 kg, and (j) 10 kg and over, in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what was the total quantity seized in each category; [36519]

(2) what proportion of seizures of (a) heroin and (b) cocaine involved amounts of (a) 50 mg or under, (b) 50 to 100 mg, (c) 100 mg to 200 mg, (d) 200 to 500 mg, (e) 500 mg to 1 gram, (f) 1 to 5 grams, (g) 5 to 10 grams, (h) 10 to 50 grams, (i) 50 to 300 grams, (j) 300 grams to 1 kg, (k) 1 kg to 10 kg, and (l) 10 kg and over, in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what was the total quantity seized in each category; [36520]

(3) what proportion of seizures of cannabis involved amounts of (a) 1 gram or under, (b) 1 to 5 grams, (c) 5 to 10 grams, (d) 10 to 50 grams, (e) 50 to 300 grams, (f) 300 grams to 1 kg, (g) 1 kg to 10 kg, (h) 10 kg to 100 kg, (i) 100 kg to 1 tonne, and (j) over 1 tonne, in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what was the total quantity seized in each category. [36521]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the number of seizures of amphetamines, cannabis, cocaine and heroin by various amount bands is routinely published in the annual Home Office bulletin "Statistics of Drug Seizures and Offenders Dealt With, United Kingdom", and supplementary tables volume. Copies are available in the Library.

The amount bands given in the tables provide much of the information requested in terms of weight categories, and further breakdowns could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Football World Cup

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral answer of 30 March 1998, Official Report, columns 885–86, if he raised the question of the 1998 FIFA World Cup knife at the seminar in Blackburn earlier this year, on policing the World Cup. [37350]

Mr. Straw: A range of issues was discussed at the European Union Presidency Seminar in Blackburn at the end of February. It was an enormously successful event and illustrated the high level of liaison and co-operation we have established with our European partners in the fight against football hooliganism.

We first raised the issue of these knives with the French authorities well in advance of the Blackburn seminar. They can be in no doubt about our concern.

I am pleased to inform the right hon. Member that, following my Oral Answer to the House on 30 March, FIFA announced that afternoon that they intended to withdraw the knives carrying the France 1998 logo from sale in France.

I have also written to my French counterpart registering our concern that these knives should have ever been endorsed by France 1998. I have sought his assistance in ensuring that they are withdrawn from sale and that any other officially endorsed memorabilia do not constitute a risk to the safety and security of others.

Asylum Seekers

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many third world nationals have come to the United Kingdom from EU nations seeking admission or asylum over the past two years; how many such persons have been admitted to the United Kingdom; and what arrangements have been made for those not accepted. [37353]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Illegal Immigrants

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify the section of the Dublin Convention which prevents Her Majesty's Government from returning to EU nations illegal immigrants who have come to the United Kingdom from such countries; and if he will make a statement. [37352]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Dublin Convention provides a set of criteria for determining which member state should be responsible for considering an asylum application made in the European Union. Where it can be shown in accordance with these criteria that a member state other than the one where the application was made is responsible for considering the application, the applicant may duly be returned to that member state. In all other circumstances, Article 8 of the Convention provides that the first member state with which the application for asylum is lodged shall be responsible for considering it.

The Dublin Convention has made the return of asylum seekers to European Union member states a more complex and time-consuming process. In particular, it is often difficult to obtain sufficient evidence to show that another member state is responsible for an application according to the criteria in the Convention. As Presidency of the European Union, we are taking forward a range of measures designed to improve the operation of the Convention.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has introduced to prevent illegal entry to the United Kingdom of persons travelling on Eurostar. [36998]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Foreign nationals travelling on Eurostar services are subject to examination by United Kingdom Immigration Officers. We liaise with French and Belgian authorities to ensure that this control is effective, and are currently examining with Eurostar and both French and Belgian authorities ways of ensuring that document checks in both Paris and Brussels are carried out as effectively as possible.

Firearms (South Yorkshire)

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has had with the South Yorkshire Police about the suspension of officers of the Firearms Branch of the force over recent weeks; [36478]

(2) how many and what percentage of firearms compensation claims are outstanding in the South Yorkshire area. [36477]

Mr. Michael: The Home Office is in regular contact with the South Yorkshire Police about the progress of their investigation into potential fraud involving compensation claims. Decisions on suspension are a matter for the Chief Constable but the latest information is that a further two police officers in the Firearms department were suspended on 13 March, bringing the total number of staff suspended to six. Around 240 claimants in the South Yorkshire area have not yet received payment under Options A and B of the compensation scheme, around 38 per cent of the total. Payments on claims returned by the police after checking are expected to resume this week.

The investigation has resulted in some delays in payments but every effort is being made to keep delays to a minimum, as I explained in my letter to my hon. Friend and the other South Yorkshire Members on 20 February immediately after the problem had been drawn to my attention. As a result of the inquiries, the South Yorkshire police have returned about 100 claims to the Firearms Compensation Section (FCS) after checking them against the surrendered goods. About half of these have not yet been paid. There are a number of queries arising on the claims and the FCS is considering these against our normal checking criteria. Where it is not possible to clear all items in a claim, a part payment will be considered. Payments on those items which are satisfactory began this week. A second batch of 100 claims is expected shortly under the arrangements agreed with the police for returning claims on a regular basis after they have been examined.

Firefighters

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average retirement age for a firefighter; [37087]

(2) what has been the average cost of invalidity pensions paid to firefighters in the last three financial years. [37085]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Clarke) on 31 March 1998, Official Report, columns 466–67 about proposals to modernise the police and fire service pension schemes. The consultation document on the review of the fire service pension scheme, which has been placed in the Library, provides information on pension costs and average ages of retirement. This shows, on the basis of the data currently available, that the average age of firefighters retiring with a full pension after 30 years' service is 53.3 years. The average age of retirement on ill-health grounds is 44.8 years and with an injury on duty award is 44.3 years.

The firefighters' pension scheme is administered locally by fire authorities and information about the average cost of invalidity pensions is not held centrally.

Police Officers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average retirement age for a police officer; [37086]

(2) what is the average age at which police officers retire on invalidity pensions. [37284]

Mr. Michael: Information on the age at which police officers retire is not collected routinely. The average retirement ages in the table are based on a study carried out in 1992 of police officers in forces in England and Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland who retired from the service with an immediate pension in 1991.

Prisoners

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners per 1,000 population there were in England during each of the years 1968 to 1995. [37013]

Ms Quin: The available information is for England and Wales and is given in the table.

Muzzle-loading Firearms

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has obtained as to the misuse of muzzle-loading firearms. [37091]

Mr. Michael: Criminal statistics record the principal types of weapon used in the commission of crime but do not differentiate between muzzle-loading firearms and other types of gun.

The Government are not aware of any incidents over the past ten years involving the serious misuse of muzzle-loading firearms, though the Forensic Science Service have identified the occasional use of guns of this kind in serious crime in previous decades.

At present, the Government have no plans to introduce any further legislation on firearms controls but will keep under close scrutiny the way in which muzzle-loading weapons are used.

HEALTH

Stephen Daggett

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Stephen Daggett will be moved to a medium secure unit. [31089]

Mr. Boateng: I shall write to my hon. Friend on this matter.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the cost to his Department of (a) consultants and (b) contractors engaged to address millennium computer compliance problems; and he if will list the consultants and contractors. [32310]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 3 March 1998]: For budgetary purposes, the Department does not differentiate between consultants and contractors. The core Department, excluding its agencies, has spent £0.8 million (excluding VAT) to date and anticipates a further £2.2 million (excluding Value Added Tax) expenditure on consultants/contractors employed to address millennium compliance. The main organisations used to provide consultant/contractor services are Parity Solutions Ltd, Computer People and Alexander Consulting for business systems and ICL-CFM for the information technology infrastructure.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and which NHS organisations failed to present their plans and budgets for year 2000 computer compliance by 5 pm on 31 March. [37488]

Mr. Milburn: The information requested will be made available when those returns received by the due date have been checked for completeness.

Cosmetic Surgery Clinics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that intimate examinations undertaken in cosmetic surgery clinics are carried out only by medically qualified staff. [33927]

Mr. Boateng: Any such requirement would exclude nursing staff and other health care professionals from examining patients. Staff who carry out any examination, in any setting, need to be able to demonstrate appropriate clinical expertise, or they may be exposing themselves to the risk of civil, and possibly criminal, liability, and/or to professional proceedings for misconduct.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information persons employed in cosmetic surgery clinics are obliged to give potential clients concerning the qualifications and experience of all staff engaged in the medical and psychological assessment and examination of clients and those who carry out surgical procedures. [33928]

Mr. Boateng: There is no specific requirement for staff to give information about their qualifications or experience. However, anyone who attempted to carry out a procedure or an examination that they were not competent to do could expose themselves to the risk of civil, and possibly criminal, liability, and/or to professional proceedings for misconduct.

Consultants

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost of the use of public relations consultants to his Department since May 1997. [36630]

Ms Jowell: The functions which are identified as public relations are normally carried out within the Department by its press and publicity division. The division has not incurred costs from external consultants on public relations work since May 1997.

Investing in Dentistry

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the applications received for funding from Investing in Dentistry have been successful; and what has been the amount of each grant awarded. [37157]

Mr. Milburn: Since the investing in dentistry initiative was announced in September last year, 110 funding requests had been approved by the end of March this year. The table gives details of successful bids by region and the amounts awarded.

Mrs. Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of the funding made available for Investing in Dentistry for 1997–98 has been allocated. [37158]

Mr. Milburn: £3,106,282 of the £9 million investing in dentistry funding in the financial year 1997–98, had been allocated by 31 March 1998. This excludes the cost of treatment fees arising from the investing in dentistry projects.

Physiotherapy Services (Schools)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funding is available from his Department for physiotherapy services for schools; [37218]

(2) what guidance he has given to health authorities on the provision of physiotherapy services in schools. [37216]

Mr. Boateng: The Department has not given specific guidance to health authorities on the provision of physiotherapy services in schools. The detailed provision and funding of such services is a matter for health commissioners in light of the health needs of their local populations. The Department recognises the essential contribution therapists make to the assessment, development, education and treatment of children with health needs and disabilities. Officials from the Department and the Department of Education and Employment are currently examining ways to facilitate collaboration between the National Health Service and local education authorities, following the response to the Green Paper, Excellence for all Children: Meeting Special Educational Needs.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned and evaluated on the numbers of children in schools requiring physiotherapy and occupational therapy to assist with physical problems. [37217]

Ms Jowell: The Department's policy research programme and the central National Health Service research and development programmes are not currently supporting any research on the numbers of children in schools requiring physiotherapy and occupational therapy to assist with physical problems, due to pressure of other priorities.

Diazepam

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what restrictions are placed on the prescribing of diazepam. [37156]

Ms Jowell: Diazepam is classified as a prescription-only medicine under the Medicines Act 1968.

The British National Formulary (BNF), which is funded by the Department and is provided free to doctors twice a year, provides guidance on the prescribing of diazepam. It also sets out specific advice from the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

The BNF also includes general advice on prescribing drugs which are likely to cause dependence, suggesting that the prescriber should prescribe small amounts initially and take care to ensure that doses are not gradually increased to the point where dependence becomes more likely.

Advice on the management of anxiety and insomnia by doctors is given in Medicines Resource Centre and Drug and Therapeutics Bulletins, which are supplied free of charge to all doctors.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria will need to be satisfied by proposals for primary care groups which span health and local authority boundaries. [37105]

Mr. Milburn: Guidance will be issued shortly on the configuration and establishment of primary care groups. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Management Consultations

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money NHS trusts spent on management consultations in (a) 1994–95, (b) 1995–96 and (c) 1996–97. [37464]

Mr. Milburn: Information on management and other consultants is not separately collected but is included in information on external contract staffing and consultancy costs. The amounts spent by National Health Service trusts on external contract staffing and consultancy were £68,326,031 in 1994–95; £89,369,228 in 1995–96 and £107,151,978 in 1996–97.

NHS Administrators (Termination of Contract)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many administrators in the National Health Service have had their contracts terminated since May 1997; what resources have been released by those terminations; and if he will make a statement. [37220]

Mr. Milburn: In May 1997, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a programme of measures to reduce management costs by £84 million in England in 1997/98. There will be a further reduction of £80 million in 1998/99.

The information on individual staff is not held centrally.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 March 1998, Official Report, columns 46–49, on readmission rates, when the figures for the final quarter of 1997–98 will be available. [37349]

Mr. Milburn: The information will be available after it has been tabled at the National Health Service Executive board meeting on 5 June 1998.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the oral answer of 2 March 1998, Official Report, column 690, how many of the 170 places in local authority secure accommodation proposed by the previous administration are now in use; and on what date those places not now in use are expected to be in use. [37550]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 12 February 1998, Official Report, columns 351–52.

Mesothelioma

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds the Government are currently spending on medical research for the management, treatment and cure of mesothelioma; and if he will make a statement. [36742]

Mr. Boateng: The main agency through which the Government support bio-medical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC). The MRC is an independent body which receives its grant-in-aid from the Office of Science and Technology, which is part of the Department of Trade and Industry. The MRC does not currently support any research specifically on the management, treatment or cure of mesothelioma. However, the MRC does provide support for more basic research in related areas which may provide insights into the aetiology of mesothelioma and have an impact on treatment in the future. For example, the MRC Toxicology Unit at Leicester has been working on projects to better understand the cellular mechanisms by which the lung responds to certain toxic materials. These include many toxins that circulate throughout the body and yet cause selective injury to particular types of lung cell as well as inhaled mineral fibres such as asbestos and zeolites.

In addition, the MRC's Committee on Toxic Hazards in the Environment and Workplace produced a report in 1995 (ISBN 1 899110 03 8) entitled "Natural and man-made mineral fibres: UK research priorities"—this was based on workshops organised by the Institute for Environmental Health. This report considers, inter alia, mesothelioma. It is obtainable from the Institute of Environment and Health, University of Leicester, PO Box 138, Lancaster Road, Leicester LE1 9HN (Phone 0116 252 5530 or Fax 0116 252 5146).

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual cost of treating those suffering from (a) mesothelioma, (b) lung cancer and (c) asbestosis-related illnesses in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [36743]

Mr. Boateng: Information about the costs of treatment classified by disease is not routinely collected locally, hence there is no collation of such data centrally. Mesothelioma is incurable with a prognosis of 12–18 months. The 5-year survival rate for lung cancer is only 5.5 per cent.; surgery and/or radiotherapy offers the best chance of cure.

People with asbestos-related conditions may live some years, dependent on the type of condition which they have. Patients will require a number of investigations and symptomatic treatment to reduce the symptoms from this irreversible condition. Palliative care is the most significant part of treating both mesothelioma and lung cancer.

NHS Trusts (Vacancies)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the maximum amount of time vacancies for NHS trust boards can remain unfilled. [37401]

Mr. Milburn: There is no statutory time limit on how long vacancies on trust boards may remain unfilled. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State would expect posts to remain vacant for no longer than is necessary.

NHS Trusts (Mergers)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if NHS trust boards have to endorse proposals to merge NHS trusts; and what powers they have to block these proposals. [37400]

Mr. Milburn: It is for Ministers, not National Health Service trusts, to decide whether or not trusts should merge. Full public consultation will be held on any such proposals.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to hospital trusts on their obligation to inform hon. Members of the (a) amalgamation and (b) closer integration on NHS trusts. [37397]

Mr. Milburn: Any proposals for mergers between National Health Service trusts or for substantial changes to services are subject to full public consultation which as a matter of course will include those hon. Members whose constituents are affected by the changes.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the procedures for the reappointment of NHS trust board members when mergers between trusts occur. [37398]

Mr. Milburn: Serving non-executive directors of merging National Health Service trusts may be considered for appointment to the merged body alongside other candidates. All appointments are made on merit and in accordance with the Department's published procedures, copies of which are in the Library.

Preston NHS Trust

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the vacancies on Preston NHS Trust will be filled. [37402]

Mr. Milburn: The Preston acute hospitals trust currently has two vacancies for non-executive directors. Arrangements are now in hand to identify suitable candidates from amongst those recently nominated by hon. Members and local authorities and those who responded to the recent national advertisement. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to receive recommendations from the regional chairman for filling these vacancies towards the end of April.

NHS Trust Boards

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers he has to ensure that all geographical regions in an area are represented on NHS trust boards. [37399]

Mr. Milburn: The published criteria for the appointment of non-executive directors to the boards of trusts and health authorities make clear that those appointed should be able to demonstrate a commitment to the needs of the local community and should live in the area served by the body involved.

Drugs (Clinical Effectiveness)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the proposed National Institute for Clinical Effectiveness will assess the effectiveness of existing drugs where there is controversy over clinical effectiveness. [37469]

Ms Jowell: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence will need to consider the clinical and cost-effectiveness of existing drugs when developing clinical guidelines. All licensed medicines should be efficacious under the conditions of use covered by their licensing. We will be consulting about the work of National Institute for Clinical Excellence shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Rupert Murdoch

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 378, for what reasons it is not his policy to specify who initiated the telephone conversation between him and the Italian Premier, Mr. Prodi. [37471]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 1 April 1998, Official Report, column 1250.

Press Secretary

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he approved the memoranda from his Press Secretary to the Secretary of State for Social Security and the Minister of State for Social Security and Welfare Reform of (i) 1 January admonishing those Ministers for their actions in relation to the media and (ii) 26 February requiring an explanation of why their interviews had not been cleared through his office; [37393]

(2) what powers he has given to his Press Secretary to control the responses by Ministers to inquiries from the media; and if he will make a statement; [37394]

(3) if Ministers are required to clear statements to the media, including the timing of such statements, through the office of his Press Secretary before their issue; [37395]

(4) pursuant to his oral answer of 1 April 1998, Official Report, column 1252, if he will make a statement on the responsibility of his Press Secretary for party political activities. [37989]

The Prime Minister: My Chief Press Secretary operates in accordance with the framework on the presentation of Government policy as set out in the Ministerial Code, and within the terms of the Special Adviser contract.

Hospitality

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will list those newspaper (a) proprietors and (b) editors who have received official hospitality at 10 Downing Street; [37473]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 30 March 1998, Official Report, column 378, if he will provide such information relating to hospitality to newspaper proprietors as can be provided without incurring disproportionate cost. [37472]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave in the House to the hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford (Mr. Davies) on 1 April 1998, Official Report, column 1253.

Nuclear Deterrence

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Prime Minister if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government that nuclear deterrence is an essential guarantee of peace and security. [35661]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 March 1998]: Yes, in the present strategic circumstances. But we are also working towards multilateral disarmament world wide.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Grammar Schools

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list grammar schools in England in order of performance at (a) GCSE and (b) A level for each year since 1987. [35613]

Mr. Byers: Information from the 1992 to 1997 secondary school performance tables has been placed in the Library. Comparable information prior to 1992 is not centrally available.

Dry Stone Walling

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he is taking to encourage the development of dry stone walling skills. [36052]

Dr. Howells: The Government are recognising a range of National Training Organisations (NTOs) to review and address skill needs in their sectors and occupations.

Through LANTRA NTO Ltd., the proposed NTO covering dry stone walling interests, the industry will be able to ensure a developing skills and training base for the future.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much and what percentage of the total public expenditure on education in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 was or is expected to be distributed by Central Government after a competitive bidding process by local authorities or other bodies. [36221]

Dr. Howells: A significant proportion of the Department's expenditure on education is allocated on the basis of competitive bidding by local authorities and other bodies. Some of the principal examples are:

£ million

	1997–98	1998–99
New Deal for Schools	83.5	185.4
Standards Fund[1]	21.3	109.9
FE Collaboration Fund[2]	10.5	25.5
HE recurrent funding and research	220	190

[1] Grants for Education Support and Training (GEST) in 1997–98. 1998–99 figure includes £50m for the National Grid for Learning, funded from the New Deal for Schools.

[2] FE Competitiveness and Development Fund 1997–98.

Expenditure for 1999–2000 has yet to be announced. The bulk of funding for schools is channelled through local education authorities, and is unhypothecated.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact on the number of personnel his Department employs of the measures contained in the School Standards and Framework Bill. [37063]

Mr. Byers: We have assessed the impact of the School Standards and Framework Bill on Departmental staffing, and expect a reduction of approximately 50 posts over time as a result of the introduction of local decision making on school organisation issues. But there may need to be some additional support for the new Adjudicators on school organisation and admissions. The precise numbers of staff required will depend upon the volume of cases referred to the Adjudicator.

Learning Cards

Mr. Dorrell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many Learning Cards have been printed; and what was the cost to public funds of printing and distributing them. [37064]

Dr. Howells: 700,000 cards have been produced to ensure that all young people in England who are in their final year of compulsory education receive their Learning Card, explaining their entitlement to learning options after age 16 and the careers guidance and information available to support their choice. The cost of printing and distributing the Learning Card and its accompanying leaflet amounts to around £67,000.

New Deal (Long-term Unemployed)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his plans to enable long-term unemployed adults over the age of 25 years to benefit from the New Deal. [37139]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The New Deal for adults who have been unemployed for two years or more will start in June this year and will offer the opportunity to take up a subsidised job or to study towards a work-related qualification whilst remaining on benefit. In addition, we are making available an extra £100 million to pilot an extension to the type of approach used in the New Deal for the young unemployed; up to 70,000 unemployed people of 25 and over from November this year will be eligible. These pilots will provide individually tailored help and support for adults in the pilot areas who have been unemployed for 18 months or more and, in some areas, for 12 months or more.

School Sixth Forms

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the local authorities involved in the pilot projects to base the financing of school sixth forms on the Further Education Funding Council funding methodology; and if he will make a statement on the way in which the project will proceed. [37140]

Dr. Howells: A group of local authorities, shown in the list, is looking at alternative approaches to the funding of school sixth forms, based on principles similar to those used in further education (funding for recruitment, programme delivery and achievement). Ministers expect to receive a progress report in June, which will help to inform them on how they wish to proceed.
The local authorities involved are:

Barnet
Birmingham
Coventry
Croydon
Devon
East Riding of Yorkshire
East Sussex
Dudley
Gloucestershire
Haringey
Kent
Kirklees
Leeds
Lewisham
Liverpool
North Somerset
North Yorkshire
Sefton
Somerset
St. Helens
Tower Hamlets
Wandsworth
Warwickshire
City of York.

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which projects, not related to the year 2000 compliance problem, are being (a) restricted and (b) terminated in order to free information technology resources. [37480]

Dr. Howells: In laying its plans for IT projects during 1998–99 and 1999–2000, the Department took account of the amount of work which it would need to do in order to make its existing systems Year 2000 compliant. As a consequence, none of the Department's projects have been restricted or terminated in order to free information technology resources.

Within the Employment Service a small number of less important developments, such as changes to management information systems, have been postponed in order to assure compliance of major systems.

IT Staff

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the current shortfall in established information technology staff, consultant and contractor support posts within his Department; and if he will list the posts by grade indicating for each post how long it has been vacant and when it is expected to be filled. [37481]

Dr. Howells: There is no shortfall in information technology staff, consultant or contractor support posts within the Department.

Employment Service (Targets)

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what targets he has set the Employment Service for 1998–99. [37768]

Mr. Blunkett: I am today announcing the Employment Service Annual Performance Agreement (APA), which sets out a new Aim and Objectives for the Employment Service (ES) and the targets which I expect the ES to achieve in 1998–99. The ES is a key player in our Welfare to Work strategy and has lead responsibility for the effective delivery of the New Deal. The new Aim of the ES reflects its mission of contributing to individuals leading rewarding working lives, by helping people without a job to find work and employers to fill their vacancies. Special attention is focused on helping those at a disadvantage in the labour market move from welfare into work.

The new APA, and the new ES Aim and Objectives, are the result of an extensive consultation. The APA includes eight targets which will focus ES efforts on three key priorities: helping people into work, ensuring claimants are committed to active job search, and achieving high standards of customer service delivery.

Copies of the ES APA have today been placed in the Library. Further details are contained in the ES Operational Plan which will be placed in the Library by the end of April.

Employment Schemes

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what schemes are available in (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland, to help people to return to work, who are aged between (i) 50 and 55, (ii) 55 and 60, and (iii) 60 and 65 years; and how many people in each group he estimates have gained employment (1) directly and (2) indirectly through these schemes in each year between 1994 and 1997. [36306]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The schemes available throughout England and Wales and Scotland, to people aged 50 or more between 1994 and 1997 are as follows:

1-2-1

Jobclub

Jobfinder

Jobfinder's Grant

Jobplan

Job Interview Guarantee

Job Review Workshop

Job Search Seminar

Job Search Plus

Restart Courses

Travel to Interview Scheme

Work Trials.

Statistics on outcomes from the above ES programmes are not collected by age and have not been estimated by the Department.

Statistics on Training for Work for England and Wales are shown in table 1. Similar statistics are available for Business Start-up and Learning for Work, for England and Wales, but for 1994 only. These are shown in table 2. Statistics for Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Table 1: Training for Work

Age	1994	1995	1996	1997
1. Number of Training for Work starts in England and Wales are as follows:	305,500	227,200	229,100	197,200
2. The proportion of Training for Work starts in England and Wales by age are as follows:
50–54	5.7%	6.1%	6.5%	7.0%
55–59	3.0%	3.2%	3.5%	3.6%
60–64	0.3%	0.4%	0.4%	0.3%

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Organic Farming

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to promote organic farming; and if he will make a statement. [37892]

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to promote organic farming; and if he will make a statement. [34256]

Dr. John Cunningham: I am keen to encourage organic farming as a sustainable farming system that can contribute to environmental objectives and can, in particular, deliver real benefits to biodiversity, while producing a product that the consumer wants and is prepared to pay a premium for. To this end, I commissioned a review of the rates and structure of aid to farmers converting to organic farming. Copies of that review have been placed in the Library of the House. Decisions on the recommendations will be taken in the context of the Government's Comprehensive Spending Review but, in the meantime, I am introducing a number of measures to help organic farming.

Firstly, I do not want farmers to be discouraged from early conversion by the prospect of a revised scheme. Subject to approval by the European Commission, farmers whose agreements are approved on or after today's date will be allowed, but not required, to switch to any revised scheme introduced as a result of this review. The total length of the agreement will remain unchanged and any switch will take place on the anniversary of the agreement. Thus, for instance, a participant might receive the year 1 payment due under the existing scheme and the year 2 to 5 payments due under a revised scheme.

Secondly, I wish to help the cash flow of those in the Organic Aid Scheme. I intend that the full annual payment will be made at the end of the first quarter of each year of the agreement. This is an improvement on the current system where the majority of payments are made quarterly in arrears. I shall be laying a Statutory Instrument before Parliament that will allow greater flexibility in the timing of payments and, subject to their approval, I hope it will be possible to introduce this change from 1 August 1998.

If organic farming in this country is to expand, it needs a sound research base. I wish to strengthen our programme of organic R&D. I have asked the United Kingdom Register of Organic Food Standards (UKROFS) to provide advice on priorities and we will be reviewing our R&D programme in May. In the interim, we are increasing our spend by about 30 per cent. to nearly £1.5 million for 1998–99. In preparation for future work we will be commissioning additional work to: review animal husbandry techniques for maintaining animal health within organic farming; assess the causes of different profitability on organic farms; and identify the implications for organic farmers of cross contamination with pollen from genetically modified crops.

I also consider it important that organic farmers should be encouraged to maximise the environmental benefits on their farms and to participate in relevant agri-environment schemes. I intend that, when considering applications for Countryside Stewardship, land registered as organic or in conversion will normally be given extra points, and hence priority over comparable conventional land. This will be introduced for the main Countryside Stewardship Scheme in 1998 (closing date 31 May 1998) and for Arable Stewardship in 1999 (closing date 31 March 1999).

If organic farming is to expand, farmers will need advice on conversion relevant to their own circumstances. A telephone help-line and free farm visits are already available through the Organic Conversion Information Service (OCIS). For 1998–99 I intend to increase the resources available to OCIS to meet an anticipated increase in demand.

If organic production expands, there will be a need for increased funding for the sector bodies who are involved in implementing and checking the Organic Aid Scheme. We will be discussing with the sector bodies the resources needed to compensate them for their roles in the scheme and expect to provide additional help in 1998–99 to enable them to prepare themselves for increased demand.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library an economic impact study of the effects on each sector of UK agriculture of the EU Commission's latest CAP reform proposals under Agenda 2000. [35632]

Dr. John Cunningham: The Government are currently assessing the detailed implications of the Commission's proposals and will comment on them as necessary.

Central Science Laboratory

Mr. Charles Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what resources his Department has (a) paid and (b) intends to pay directly to the Central Science Laboratory in (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99 in respect of the Microbiology Group, without going through the research tender and appraisal system. [36038]

Mr. Rooker: The resources committed for work on food microbiology at the Central Science Laboratory, without going through the research tender and appraisal system are provided in the table.

	Research resources	Non-research resources
1997–98
York Laboratory	0	150,000
Norwich Laboratory	0	80,000
1998–99

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Randall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department collates statistics on the numbers of meetings (a) requested and (b) held with (i) Labour and (ii) Conservative Members. [36471]

Dr. John Cunningham: My Department does not collate these statistics.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 728, how many meetings were requested with Ministers by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative hon. Members in February; and how many were granted. [36472]

Dr. John Cunningham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 19 March 1998, Official Report, column 728.

Suckler Cow Payments

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons 1996 has been used as the basis for the 1998 suckler cow payments. [37092]

Mr. Rooker: We are required by EU rules to make payments of agrimonetary compensation on the basis of past production. Since the first of the revaluations concerned here took place in January 1997, compensation relates to the 1996 Suckler Cow Premium year. This applies only to agrimonetary compensation payments, not to the normal 1998 suckler cow payments, which will be made as usual on the basis of 1997 claims.

Meat and Bonemeal

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what tonnage of meat and bonemeal has been exported in each of the past 10 years; and to which countries. [36689]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 27 March 1998]: UK Overseas Trade Statistics are not separately available for the export of meat and bonemeal. These products are included under the heading of "Flours, meals and pellets, of meat or offal, unfit for human consumption; greaves". Exports in each of the last 10 years of materials which fall under this heading are as follows. These figures are taken from the Official Overseas Trade Statistics.

The data will be subject to a degree of statistical error. The overall level of errors will be low but these errors will have a much greater proportional effect on countries with small values or volumes of trade.

The hon. Member will be aware that since the adoption of Commission Decision 96/239/EC on 27 March 1996, it has been illegal to export from the UK meat meal, bonemeal and meat and bonemeal derived from mammals. Exports after 27 March 1996 may, however, have included non-mammalian meat and bonemeal.

Cereal Feed

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the use of British cereal feed in the UK. • [37101]

Mr. Rooker: The use of UK grown cereals in animal feed rations is a matter for commercial decision by farmers and animal feed manufacturers.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what percentage of imports of cereal feed comes from the USA; and if he will make a statement; [37103]

(2) how many tonnes of British cereal feed were consumed in the UK in each of the last five years. [37100]

Mr. Rooker: Only a small proportion of cereals used as animal feed in the UK are imported—on average around 5 per cent. Imports from the USA of cereals for feed use are not differentiated from imports of other cereals, but the quantities used for feed are thought to be small.

Cereal usage for animal feed is calculated on a crop year basis. Crop years run from the beginning of July to the end of June. In the last five crop years, the tonnage of cereals used for animal feed, which were produced and used in the UK, was:

	Thousand tonnes
1992–93	7,776
1993–94	8,233
1994–95	8,662
1995–96	8,607
1996–97	9,031

Potatoes

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of (a) early potatoes and (b) maincrop potatoes were grown in the UK in (i) 1997, (ii) 1987 and (iii) 1977; what was the average yield for each type in each year; and how many tonnes of each were (1) imported and (2) exported in each year. [37301]

Mr. Rooker: Figures for the area, yield and production of UK early and maincrop potatoes are given in the following tables.

	Calendar year
	1977	1987	1997
Early potatoes
Area (000 hectares)	22.4	16.6	16.2
Yield (tonnes per hectare)	18.0	23.5	23.8
Production (000 tonnes)	402.1	390.6	385.9
Maincrop (including seed) potatoes
Area (000 hectares)	210.1	161.0	149.4
Yield (tonnes per hectare)	29.5	39.2	45.1
Production (000 tonnes)	6,194.6	6,313.4	6,739.3

The following table, based on information provided by the British Potato Council, provides details of imports and exports of raw and processed potatoes, splitting, where reliable information is available, between early and maincrop.

Overseas trade in raw and processed potatoes

(000 tonnes)

	Calendar year
	1977	1987	[1]1997
Supplies from Channel Islands (early)	39	44	61
Total imports	839	1,001	937
of which:
Early	359	210	132
Maincrop	217	364	96
Processed[2]	252	397	693
Seed	11	30	16
Total exports	102	274	350
of which:
Raw (mostly maincrop)	10	110	161
Processed[2]	18	59	114
Seed	74	105	75

[1] Provisional.

[2] Raw equivalent. Mostly maincrop.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the average annual per capita consumption of (a) whole potatoes, (b) chips, (c) other processed potatoes and (d) crisps, for (i) 1997, (ii) 1987 and (iii) 1977. [37302]

Mr. Rooker: Per capita consumption of fresh potatoes, chips, crisps and other processed potatoes in Great Britain as measured by purchases for consumption at home is given in the following table.

Grams per person per week[1]

Purchases of:	1977	1987	1997
Fresh potatoes	1,155	1,071	745
Chips[2]	35	97	133
Crisps and potato snacks	13	33	49
Other processed potatoes[3]	8	7	14

[1] Product weight

[2] Includes fresh and frozen chips and other frozen potato products

[3] Excludes potato included as an ingredient in other foods

Data on the consumption of potato products outside the home is available from 1994 onwards. Per capita consumption of potato products outside the home in Great Britain for the last two years is given in the following table.

Grams per person per week[1]

Purchases of:	1996	1997
Chips	69	68
Crisps and potato snacks	9	8
Boiled, mashed, roast and other potato products[2]	45	51

[1] Product weight

[2] Excludes potato included as an ingredient in other foods. Includes a small element of other foods e.g. fillings in jacket potatoes.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications Industry

2. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much revenue will be raised from the telecommunications industry as a result of the Wireless Telegraphy Act; and when she plans to bring the legislation into effect. [35974]

Mrs. Roche: The Wireless Telegraphy Act received Royal Assent on 18 March and is aimed at improving management of the radio spectrum. The first of a series of fee regulations under the Act is planned to come into effect in July. The income generated under the new powers will depend on the result of ongoing discussions and consultations.

Interest Rates

14. Mr. Soames: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions she has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer in respect of the impact of the current level of interest rates on British industry. [35986]

Mrs. Beckett: The Monetary Policy Committee of the Bank of England is responsible for setting interest rates at the level necessary to meet the Government's inflation target. British industry needs economic stability based on low inflation in order to allow firms to plan and invest with confidence.

EU Structural Funds

19. Dr. Ladyman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about her Department's priorities for the reform of EU structural funds. [35992]

34. Mr. McCabe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the reform of EU structural funds. [36008]

36. Dr. Palmer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on the proposed reform of EU regional aid. [36010]

Mrs. Roche: We welcome publication of the draft regulations for Structural and Cohesion Funds—which are part of the wider Agenda 2000 reform package. The regulations must now be agreed by all fifteen Member States and approved by the European Parliament.

Our overriding concern in the long negotiations ahead is to ensure that these draft regulations are affordable, durable and fair overall, particularly to the UK.

The UK, like other Member States, would like to see fair and effective criteria which address local needs. This is the starting point of the negotiations. We will be working hard, with other Member States and the Commission, to improve these draft regulations and to reach a fair and affordable outcome.

Manufacturing (East Midlands)

20. Mr. Garnier: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment she has made of the effect of the current value of the pound on manufacturing exporters in the East Midlands. [35993]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government appreciate the difficulties that the level of the pound is causing exporters in the East Midlands and elsewhere in the country. But exporters will not benefit from a return to the boom and bust policies of the past. Industry wants, and this Government are delivering, a stable macroeconomic environment.

Export Promotion

21. Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she proposes to promote United Kingdom multimedia expertise in export markets. [35994]

Mrs. Roche: The Department is aware of the economic contribution at home and abroad of the United Kingdom's dynamic, creative sectors including those based on multimedia expertise. By greater attention to sector needs in exports, including the setting up of a Creative Industries Export Group and a new approach to support for small companies, a boost will be given to promotion of the exports of these industries.

Pyramid Selling

22. Mr. David Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further action is being taken to tackle pyramid selling. [35995]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Since 1 May 1997, the DTI has successfully petitioned for the winding up of 11 companies involved in schemes which have abused the public. In addition, last month I issued a warning to people to think carefully before paying money to participate in schemes that offer easy money for little work.

Engineering

23. Mr. Crausby: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to address the difficulties experienced by companies suffering from skilled labour shortages in the engineering sector. [35996]

Mr. Battle: The recently completed, but not yet published, comprehensive Labour market survey by the Engineering and Marine Training Authority, covering over 22,000 companies from whom over 4,500 replies were received will report that the engineering sector is not suffering from a general shortage of engineering skills.

However, shortages are emerging in particular sectors and to particularly high skilled and multi-skilled areas of work. The Government are participating in initiatives to address the shortages, such as a manufacturing skills task force for the automotive sector in the West Midlands, the radio frequency engineers' scheme and a skills analysis in the heating, ventilation, air-conditioning and commercial refrigeration sector. The Department is also supporting research into availability of skills in the chemicals and shipbuilding sectors.

Indonesia

24. Ann Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assurances she has sought from Indonesia that it will not default on ECGD payments. [35997]

Mrs. Beckett: None. I would expect the Indonesian authorities to meet their obligations in respect of any payments due to or guaranteed by ECGD as they have done up to now.

Exports

25. Mr. Amess: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations she has received on the prospects for British exports. [35998]

Mrs. Beckett: I regularly receive representations from British industry on a wide range of issues, including the prospects for exporting.

European Space Agency

26. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action her Department is taking to support the programmes of the European Space Agency. [35999]

Mr. Battle: Conducting space research through ESA lies at the centre of UK space policy. On 16 March, I was very pleased to announce new commitments to ESA programmes totalling £21 million. These programmes will develop Earth observation (EO) and communication technologies. I will be discussing the Government's priorities in ESA and in space policy more generally with the UK space sector at a seminar in Leeds tomorrow.

Minimum Wage

27. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she last met the Chairman of the Low Pay Commission to discuss the minimum wage. [36000]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade last met Professor George Bain, Chairman of the Low Pay Commission, on 11 February 1998 and expressed her admiration for the progress the Commission has made in undertaking the consultation exercise. And she was informed they are on course to produce their findings by the end of May.

29. Judy Mallaber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when she last met the chairman of the Low Pay Commission to discuss progress on the implementation of the national minimum wage. [36002]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade last met Professor George Bain, Chairman of the Low Pay Commission, on 11 February 1998 and she was informed that the Commission are on course to produce their findings by the end of May.

32. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made toward the formulation of the national minimum wage. [36005]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We are on target to fulfil our commitment to introduce minimum wage legislation within the first session of this Parliament. The National Minimum Wage Bill completed its passage through the House on 9 March and Second Reading in another place took place on Monday 23 March. The Low Pay Commission has completed the information gathering stage of its consultation exercise and will produce its recommendations on the level at which the minimum wage might be set by the end of May.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the work of the Low Pay Commission. [36007]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Low Pay Commission has completed the consultation state of its work. I have nothing but admiration for the stamina displayed by Professor George Bain, the chairman, and his colleagues on the Commission, who have visited all parts of the United Kingdom to discuss the national minimum wage and take oral evidence from a broad cross-section of employers, employees, their representatives, and other interested parties. In addition, they have received over 500 written submissions. I now look forward to reading their recommendations which are due to be produced by the end of May.

Trade Union Recognition

28. Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received recently concerning trade union recognition rights; and if she will make a statement. [36001]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Since the TUC and CBI published their joint statement on union recognition in December last year, the Government have received many representations from trade unions, employer organisations and other interested parties. The Government will announce their proposals on union recognition in the forthcoming White Paper on fairness at work.

Small and Medium Companies

30. Mrs. Brinton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures her Department has taken to encourage small and medium companies to expand their export business. [36003]

Mrs. Roche: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Upminster (Mr. Darvill).

Fraud

31. Mr. Casale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans she has to tighten regulations to combat business fraud. [36004]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are strongly committed to tackling business fraud. Last year, the UK played a leading role in bringing the negotiations on the OECD Convention on combating bribery in international business transactions to a successful conclusion. The UK is also playing an active role in negotiations on anti-corruption measures within the European Union and at the Council of Europe. Domestically, a new hotline has been set up to catch disqualified directors and undischarged bankrupts who flagrantly flout the law and, when Parliamentary time allows, my Department intends to introduce legislation to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the procedure for disqualifying unfit company directors. My Department is also working closely with HM Treasury and the Financial Services Authority in their reform of Financial Services regulation, and a working party is reviewing the current state of regulation in the insolvency profession.

"Competitiveness UK" Initiative

33. Mr. Edwards: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement about the progress of her Department's Competitiveness UK Initiative. [36006]

Mrs. Beckett: Competitiveness UK lies at the heart of my Department's drive to help companies improve their performance. Under this initiative, a wide range of business people have been working directly with my Ministerial team in developing practical proposals to enhance UK competitiveness. This new partnership between Government and business will lead to policies for sustainable wealth creation, based on a high skill, high investment, innovative, modern economy.

Steel Industry

35. Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations she has received from the British steel industry. [36009]

Mr. Battle: The Government have a continuing dialogue with the British steel industry. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I have had numerous meetings with representatives of the industry and MPs who have a constituency interest in the industry. I have also been to see steel manufacturing processes first-hand and to meet some of those working in the industry. My officials have frequent and wide-ranging contacts at all levels.

Unfair Contract Terms

37. Mr. Pike: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in how many cases the Director General of Fair Trading has taken action against companies for breaches of the unfair contract terms regulations, in each of the last three years. [36011]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand that, between 1 July 1995 and 31 December 1997, the Director General of Fair Trading took action in 1,659 cases, as follows:

2nd Half 1995: 252

1996: 637

1997: 770.

Petroleum Act 1987

38. Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many abandonment programmes have been approved under the terms of Part 1 of the Petroleum Act 1987, in each of the last eight years. [36012]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to Appendix 12 of the Energy Report 1997 Volume II. A copy of the Report is available in the Library of the House.

Since publication of the Energy Report 1997, the President has approved an abandonment programme in respect of the Donan floating production installation and its associated pipe-lines.

Shell have submitted a draft revised abandonment programme for the Brent Spar offshore storage and loading buoy.

Iran

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the level of current United Kingdom trade with Iran. [35982]

Mrs. Roche: In 1997, total trade in goods between the United Kingdom and Iran was worth £432 million.

Innovation

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on the role of her Department in promoting innovation in British industry. [35981]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mr. Purchase) earlier today.

Research and Development

Kali Mountford: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she will make a statement on her Department's policy towards encouraging research and development in British companies. [35976]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) earlier today.

European Structural Funds

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to ensure that Merseyside will retain Objective 1 status with funding levels comparable with other Objective 1 regions of Europe. [36490]

Mrs. Roche: On the basis of the Commission's proposals and the latest Eurostat statistics, it appears likely that Merseyside will be eligible for Objective 1 from 2000. The Commission has not made proposals on funding levels for individual regions. When they do, we will want them to be fair and affordable.

Home Shopping

Mr. Kidney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received on regulation of the home shopping market. [36316]

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: I have received no representations on regulation of the home shopping market as such. I have, however, received a number of inquiries from businesses about how the European Union Distance Selling Directive will be implemented.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage by (a) tonnage and (b) value of ships completed by UK shipbuilding yards have had as their prime competition an EU shipbuilding yard over the last five years. [37116]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 31 March 1998]: The information requested is not available. UK Shipyards are not required to identify the European competition when applying for Shipbuilding Intervention Fund support and do not always know against whom they are competing.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the cost per job of the SIF subsidies for UK shipbuilding over the last two years. [37118]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 31 March 1998]: Assessments undertaken by my Department indicate that the cost per direct shipyard job of Shipbuilding Intervention Fund grants over the last two years ranged between £3,000 and £4,000. Exact figures depend upon assumptions made on the length of the build-cycle for individual orders and the exact numbers of employees in each yard over that time. The increasing use by yards of external sub-contractors (who are not considered recorded as employees) for many tasks would also reduce this cost, as would the inclusion of employment in the suppliers to the yards.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of (a) official tonnage figures and (b) official figures for the value of sales of completed ships in the UK are attributable to oil-rig construction over the last two years. [37119]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 31 March 1998]: This information is not available. Although the Office for National Statistics collects information on the value of completions of "floating or submersible drilling or production platforms", which would include rigs, as part of the PRODCOM (Products of the European Community) inquiry, the figures cannot be released because they would identify particulars of an individual undertaking, which are confidential under Section 9 of the Statistics of Trade Act, 1947. Tonnage figures are not collected for these products.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment her Department has made of the effect on UK shipbuilders of a cessation of all shipbuilding aids in the EU (a) in the absence of ratification by the USA of the OECD shipbuilding agreement and (b) in the presence of such ratification. [37117]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 31 March 1998]: The UK shipbuilding industry has been telling the Department for many years that the best way to improve its competitiveness is to remove the market distortions caused by subsidies. We agree with this assessment and our policy has been to achieve this, particularly through ending contract aid, as quickly as possible. Our preference is to work through the OECD Shipbuilding Agreement but, failing that, we believe that the Commission's contingency measures will provide a good basis for developing a more viable shipbuilding sector as they will eliminate contract aid and provide similar support on measures for improving the competitiveness as other sectors enjoy. Both the OECD Agreement and the EU proposals improve the market framework but this is only one of many factors affecting the industry, whose success ultimately depends on its ability to win orders.

Nuisance Telephone Calls

Mr. Letwin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations she has received in relation to nuisance calls, originating from telephone-sales organisations in possession of equipment that allows them to make multiple calls; and if she will make a statement. [37114]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 31 March 1998]: Ministers in this Department have received one representation concerning nuisance calls from telephone-sales organisations in possession of equipment that allows them to make multiple calls since taking office last May. Under the Telecommunications Act 1984, companies using automatic calling equipment are subject to a class licence which contains measures aimed at limiting the nuisance which can be caused by unsolicited calls. Anyone using automatic calling equipment for sending multiple calls must do so only to those who have given their consent in writing, or face possible enforcement action by Oftel, including the removal of their right to operate a telecoms system.

Jersey

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if she has been consulted by (a) the States and (b) the Government of Jersey about the Draft Limited Liability Partnerships (Insolvent Partnerships) (Jersey) Regulations and its repercussions for British accountancy firms. [37531]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I have received no such approach.

Internet

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps she is taking to stop unsolicited e-mail being sent out across the Internet. [37052]

Mrs. Roche: The EU Telecommunications Data Protection Directive, which must be implemented by October this year, provides protection from unsolicited calls for direct marketing purposes. The Government will be consulting on the implementation of the Directive.

The Data Protection Registrar has been working on a proposal to prevent people receiving unsolicited e-mails through the insertion of suppression markers in their Internet addresses and the Direct Marketing Association are working on ideas for an e-mail preference scheme.

Digital Television

Mr. Stunell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate she has made of the likely increase in domestic energy consumption resulting from the introduction of digital television. [35725]

Mrs. Roche: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 20 March 1998, Official Report, column 763.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate is produced by her Department's Policy Simulation Model of the number of people in each income decile who are currently building up second tier pension entitlements by means of (a) occupational pension schemes, (b) other private second tier pensions and (c) SERPS; how many of each group are paying income tax at the (i) 40 per cent., (ii) 23 per cent., (iii) 20 per cent. and (iv) 0 per cent. rate; and what is the mean and median contribution in each case for each type of second tier provision. [36484]

Mr. Denham: The Department's Policy Simulation Model is not suitable for answering this question as it is based on data from the Family Resources Survey which does not contain reliable information on pensions. Such information as is available from the 1996 General Household Survey is set out in the table.

Estimated numbers of people in Great Britain in 1996 aged between 16 and State pension age in each income decile who (a) were members of their current employer's occupational pension scheme and (b) had a personal pension to which contributions were being made at the time of interview millions

Income decile	Occupational pension	Personal pension
1	0.1	0.1
2	0.1	0.1
3	0.3	0.1
4	0.4	0.2
5	0.7	0.3
6	1.0	0.4
7	1.6	0.6
8	1.8	0.8
9	2.2	0.7
10	2.2	1.0

Notes:

1. All estimates are given to the nearest 0.1 million.

2. Income decile 1 is comprised of the 10 per cent. of the Great Britain population aged between 16 and State pension age who had the lowest incomes with income levels in each decile rising until decile ten, which is comprised of those 10 per cent. who had the highest incomes.

3. The income distribution is based on gross unequivalized income.

4. Estimates have been calculated using proportions reporting pension scheme membership in the 1996 General Household Survey, and population projections from the Government Actuary's Department.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps her Department plans to take to uprate disability living allowance to take account of road fuel tax increases; and if she will make a statement. [36854]

Mr. Denham: There are no plans to uprate Disability Living Allowance to take account of road fuel tax increases. Disability Living Allowance is not intended to meet specific costs associated with disability, nor is it, of course, aimed solely at people who are dependent on their car.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what analysis her Department has made of the medical basis for claims for disability living allowance; and what advice she has received based on that analysis. [36766]

Mr. Denham: Two reports were published recently which include information on the assessment of claims for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA): "A Study of Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance Awards" published by the Department's Analytical Services Division; and "The Future of Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance—A Discussion Paper" published by the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board (DLAAB), an independent statutory body.

These reports provide a valuable insight into the workings of DLA and AA. They highlight some problems with the current adjudication process, in particular, the evidence used to support a claim and the DLAAB have suggested that more use should be made of medical evidence.

Both reports were discussed with organisations representing disabled people at a seminar hosted by my Noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Hollis of Heigham on 27 March. We have not drawn any conclusions from the reports at this stage. The Green Paper, "New ambitions for our country: a new contract for welfare reform", makes it clear that there will be full consultation on any proposals for changes to DLA and AA.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment she has made of the amount of state benefits paid out to injured claimants, which was recovered by the Compensation Recovery Unit from legally aided defendants during each of the last three years. [37012]

Mr. Denham: No such assessment has been made since neither the plaintiff nor the defendant in injury compensation cases, where State benefits are recovered, are required to notify the Department if they have been granted legal aid.

IT Staff

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she will list the current shortfall in established information technology staff, consultant and contractor support posts within her Department; and if she will list the posts by grade indicating for each post how long it has been vacant and when it is expected to be filled. [37487]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department has to fill 64 vacancies to achieve the 1998/99 Information Technology requirements. This represents 2 per cent. of the current workforce in the Department's Information Technology Services Agency which will be filled by ongoing and planned resourcing activity over the next three months. The vacancies are 7 staff at grade C5 (SEO), 34 staff at grade C6 (HEO) and 23 staff at grade D7 (EO).

Millennium Compliance

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which projects, not related to the year 2000 compliance problem, are being (a) restricted and (b) terminated in order to free information technology resources. [37486]

Mr. Keith Bradley: The Department's arrangements for Year 2000 compliance were planned well in advance and it has not been necessary to "restrict" or "terminate" any planned work because of the Year 2000 date change problem.

Prime Minister's Press Secretary

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if she is required to clear statements to the media, including the timing of such statements, through the office of the Press Secretary to the Prime Minister before their issue. [37392]

Mr. Field: This Department, like all other Departments, complies with the Ministerial Code published by the Cabinet Office last July entitled "A Code of Conduct and Guidance on Procedures for Ministers", a copy of which is in the Library. Paragraph 88 refers.

Departmental Employees (Scotland)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff are employed in Scotland by her Department, or executive agencies responsible to her Department; and where those staff are located. [36208]

Mr. Field: The number of staff located in Scotland who work for the Department, and its Executive Agencies, are given in the tables. ITSA have no staff working in Scotland.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total value of benefits, allowances and other payments made to those suffering from asbestosis-related diseases in each of the past three years; and if she will make a statement. [36741]

Mr. Denham: The information is not available in the format requested. Information is available only in respect of certain diseases for which Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit can be paid. These diseases are Diffuse Mesothelioma (prescribed disease D3), Carcinoma of the lung (prescribed disease D8) and Diffuse Pleural Thickening (prescribed disease D9).

The expenditure of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit for the three asbestos-related diseases above is estimated at £3.826 million for 1994/95; £5.593 million for 1995/96 and £5.991 million for 1996/97.

Notes:

1. These figures have been based on a 10 per cent. sample of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit assessments in Great Britain, including an adjustment for assessments recorded in the following year.
2. Sufferers from asbestosis may get benefit in respect of prescribed disease D1 (Pneumoconiosis), but information is not collected separately for the different conditions covered by the term pneumoconiosis.
3. No information is available on people who are receiving other benefits and who suffer from asbestos related diseases.

Executive Agencies (Performance Targets)

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what performance targets she has set the Department's agencies for 1998–99, and if she will make a statement. [37890]

Ms Harman: The targets we have set the Department's Executive Agencies for 1998/99 are given.

Social Security customers have a right to expect good quality, responsive services. The eighth principle set out in the Welfare Reform Green Paper states that the system of delivering modern welfare should be flexible, efficient and easy for people to use. In line with this, we have set targets that focus effort on building an active modern service, which helps as many people as possible fulfil their potential and achieve independence.

Further information on the Agencies' plans for 1998/99 is contained in their individual business plans which have been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The targets for 1998/99 are:

BENEFITS AGENCY

Active Services

By October 1998 the Benefits Agency (BA) will have worked with the Employment Service to implement nationally the New Deal for Lone Parents.

From April 1998 BA will provide ongoing support by means of advising Employment Service colleagues of changes in legislation and procedures, by help with customer queries and by handling fast path claims to Family Credit.

Customer focused services

During April to September 1998 the Agency will undertake trials to test methods for encouraging pensioners to take advantage of the benefits to which they are entitled. The Agency will provide information on the outcome of these trials in October 1998 to enable Ministers to decide the way forward.

From April 1998 the Agency will provide a more integrated BA and Child Support Agency service to lone parents when BA visiting staff will discuss child support issues at their New Claim Visit, and assist with completion of the Maintenance Application Form, where appropriate.

By March 1999 the Agency will have worked towards supporting future implementation of the Social Security Bill, currently scheduled for Autumn 1999, including arrangements to produce new guidance and develop new monitoring arrangements to measure the standard of decision making.

Transforming services

By March 1999 the Agency will have worked with local authorities, following evaluation of pilots, to implement improvements in the way information is shared using automated links. This will include, as and when practicable, the use of Remote Access Terminals which will allow local authorities access to BA information.

Integrity, through secure and accurate services

By 31 August 1998 all mainframe computer systems used by BA will be ready to cope with the Year 2000 issue, with the exception of the Jobseeker's Allowance Payment System, which will comply by 30 November 1998. All other BA systems, including desk top devices, will be made Year 2000 compliant by 31 March 1999.

In order to protect public expenditure, the Agency is committed to reducing the number of payments made on fraudulent claims. In addition to this, the Agency will recover benefits which have been overpaid. In 1998/99 the Agency aims to save £2.3 billion in weekly benefit savings terms from activity against fraudulent claims and to recover £135 million from claims where benefit has been overpaid.

Accurate payment of benefit is of key importance to Ministers. The targets for 1998/99 are to achieve the following levels of payment accuracy:

87 per cent. of Income Support claims

87 per cent. of Jobseeker's Allowance claims (in partnership with Employment Service)

91 per cent. of Family Credit claims

94 per cent. of Incapacity Benefit claims

96 per cent. of Disability Living Allowance claims

Our aim is to continue to improve the accuracy of benefit payments year on year.

Valuing and developing staff

The Agency will achieve Investors in People status for the BA as a whole by April 1999.

The Agency will continue to make the BA a more family friendly organisation by setting up, by March 1999, a further 10 holiday playschemes. A further 40 playschemes will be in place by March 2001.

Efficient services

The Agency will, during 1998, develop proposals for improving the measurement of Agency performance these will be introduced from April 1999.

CONTRIBUTIONS AGENCY

Note: The level of accuracy for all targets is 98 per cent.

1 Records Maintenance

To set up and maintain accurate National Insurance (NI) accounts by delivering:

New accounts properly registered for:

95 per cent. of juveniles in advance of their 16th birthday.

90 per cent. of adults without NI accounts within 8 days of receipt of correctly completed application forms.

Unsolicited customer generated changes to personal details properly recorded, completing 92 per cent. of cases within 15 days.

NI contributions properly recorded for:

98 per cent. of appropriate notifications from employers in respect of Class 1 contributors by 31 December 1998, or within 30 days if not completed by 31 December or received after this date.

90 per cent. of Class 2/3 contributors following investigation within 5 days of receipt of payment.

NI details properly recorded following investigation for:

90 per cent. of cases by 31 March 1999, where there are inaccurate submissions by employers.

85 per cent. of cases in 90 days, where contributors/others identify an inaccuracy.

The speedy investigation and resolution of 25,000 cases involving discrepancies, and arising out of data integrity process exercises, by 31 March 1999.

2 Information Provision

To provide NI related information to Agency customers by replying fully and accurately to:

95 per cent. of requests from Government Agencies and Departments within:

3 days where there is no clerical involvement.

10 days where there is clerical involvement.

45 days with detailed investigation.

92 per cent. of requests from pension providers and scheme administrators within 25 days.

95 per cent. of customer inquiries and complaints within 20 days.

3 Conformance

To ensure conformance with NI related legislation to secure timeous collection of contributions to the NI Fund by delivering:

£3.581 billion collected for the NI Fund.

£176 million of arrears identified and reference made to the Inland Revenue for collection.

To deliver the system of contracting-out of State Earnings Related Pensions Scheme ensuring conformance with legislation, to ensure proper use of contracting-out rebates.

National Insurance rebates accurately paid to Pension Providers, with 98 per cent. of cases completed within one calendar month after the recording of an accurate End of Year return.

Contracting-out certificates properly issued, clearing 99 per cent. within 5 days.

Variation and surrender action properly completed, clearing 96 per cent. within 10 days.

Initiative investigation action within 5 days, where schemes are in breach of contracting-out conditions.

4 Milestones

Customer satisfaction

To improve its service to complainants the Agency will:

(i) introduce the first management check of complaints by the end of July 1998 (covering the first quarter of 1998/99)

(ii) reduce "upheld" cases by the Adjudicator's office to 50 per cent by April 1999 (currently 80 per cent—1997 report). Measure to be the Adjudicator's Report 1999.

New National Insurance Recording System (NIRS2)

To complete the replacement of the NIRS1 IT system and decommission it. To plan, monitor and support implementation of the replacement NIRS2 system in a way which gives customers and staff confidence, minimises impact on DSS and external stakeholders, and maintains the business and contractual relationship with the PFI supplier. To plan and prepare for Releases 2 and 3 by April 1999, with a pre-implementation review of readiness completed by January 1999.

Joint Working

To work closely with the Department's policy and Inland Revenue colleagues in order to implement successfully changes announced in the Budget and the smooth transfer of the Contributions Agency to the Inland Revenue in April 1999.

Employer's Helpline

To improve the service provided by the Employer's Helpline by March 1999 ensuring that 80 per cent. of callers are connected and answered at the first attempt (currently 73 per cent.).

To complete a review by October 1998 into the Employer's Helpline service with the aim of establishing the percentage of UK employers who are assisted annually by the Helpline and to make recommendations for extending the scope of this service.

Carrying out business by electronic means

The Agency will continue to participate in the Cabinet Office led public and private sector partnership which is investigating the potential of the Internet as a means of doing business with customers. Our eventual aim is that we meet the Prime Minister's target that 25 per cent. of our business will be capable of being transacted through electronic means by the year 2002. We will extend the electronic form "CWF1" pilot in June 1998 to include Barclay's Bank SMART card holders and will also identify additional suitable candidates for this pilot that month.

The Agency will complete a review of its Internet web site by July 1998 with the aim of extending the information services it provides and developing the means of accepting information direct from customers.

CHILD SUPPORT AGENCY

Child maintenance collected and arranged

£750 million of child maintenance to be collected or arranged for direct payment from the absent parent to the parent with care.

Maintenance assessments

65 per cent. of new maintenance applications to be cleared within 22 weeks and on 31 March 1999 there are to be no applications over 52 weeks old.

Reviews

Where a client is dissatisfied with a Child Support Officer's decision and requests a review; or a change of circumstances requires a review; 80 per cent. to be cleared within 13 weeks.

Payments

97 per cent. of payments made to the parent with care to be made within 10 working days of receipt from the absent parent.

Accuracy

The cash value of all assessments checked in the year to be correct in at least 75 per cent. of cases.

Milestone targets

Review the first six months of closer working with the Benefits Agency, taking into account the views of stakeholders and produce a report by 31 December 1998.

By 30 June 1998 formalise national and local consultation arrangements with stakeholders with a view to improving customer service.

WAR PENSIONS AGENCY

Assessment and payment of war pensions

To clear 75 per cent. of war disablement claims in 145 days.

To clear 90 per cent. of war widows' claims within 65 days.

As at 31 March 1999, to have no more than 23 per cent. of outstanding appeals more than 260 days old.

To clear 6,000 appeals during 1998/99.

For 90 per cent. of all claims to meet the quality criteria.

By 28 February 1999, to introduce an independent element to the complaints procedure.

Provision of welfare support to war disablement pensioners and war widows through the War Pensioners' Welfare Service

To visit recently bereaved widows within 15 days of a request being made.

Management of the Ilford Park Polish Home

To achieve an average occupancy rate of 95 per cent. during the year.

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY SERVICES AGENCY

Delivering Active Modern Service

(i) Take a leading role in the development and support of the key Information System/Information Technology (IT) products and services necessary to achieve the implementation of Active Modern Services including:

delivery of the agreed IT work programme to support Modern Service Programme projects in prototyping more efficient customer focused service delivery approaches.

the progression of the ACCORD project meeting agreed milestones relating to budget, timescales and quality.

co-ordination of the Department's contribution to electronic government with the Central IT Unit (CITU) and other government departments.

(ii) Deliver agreed IT work programme for support of existing systems to budget, time and quality to the satisfaction of customers, including progression of the programme for Customer Accounting Payments Strategy, and meeting agreed milestones on the implementation of major releases of Jobseeker's Allowance Release 5 and Social Fund Release 9.

(iii) Lead the Year 2000 Programme within the Department to ensure that all business critical DSS products, services and estates are Year 2000 compliant to agreed timetable.

Customer Service Targets

(iv) Measure Customer Satisfaction using the Business Excellence Model (BEM), an industry wide standard, and achieve a 10 per cent. improvement on the 1997/98 ITSA BEM score for customer satisfaction.

(v) Support and enable the timely and accurate delivery of Social Security administration by delivering 95 per cent. of IT services to the level of service agreed with our Departmental and external customers.

Financial Targets

(vi) Manage the Agency's income and expenditure (derived from normal trading activities), as presented on audited accruals accounts, so that the Agency recovers its full economic costs through receipts from customers within a tolerance of plus or minus 2 per cent.

(vii) Manage the ITS Gross Vote so that the Agency's expenditure outturn is in line with allocations and estimates.

(viii) Reduce unit costs and prices to deliver an overall business efficiency improvement of 5 per cent.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 309

SESSION 1997–98

23rd March—2nd April 1998

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
